The present Gazetteer was undertaken to meet a daily increasing want. The great changes in the political and ecclesiastical arrangements of the country, and the revolution effected in locomotion by the construction of railroads, during the last quarter of a century, have rendered former works comparatively obsolete. The census of 1861 and the Ordnance Survey have furnished new statistics both as regards population and area. The progress of manufactures and commerce has created fresh centres of industry, turned villages into towns, and changed the whole face of the country. By the Act of Parliament regulating the boundaries of counties, whole towns and parishes have been transferred from one county to another. Great alterations have likewise occurred in the ecclesiastical distribution of livings. In England numerous new parishes have been demarcated under Sir Robert Peel's Act; in Scotland the Free Church has arisen, and the National Church suffered disruption; and in Ireland great changes have taken place from various causes, among which may be mentioned emigration, the decrease of tillage and the increase of pasture, and other consequences flowing from the operation of the Encumbered Estates Act.

Under these circumstances a careful revision of the topography of the United Kingdom has been considered as likely to meet with public approval. Great exertion has been used to obtain authentic information, many of the more important articles having been contributed by gentlemen personally acquainted with the localities described in them; while, in the majority of instances, even the lesser articles have been revised by persons living in or near the neighbourhood.

To render the work more useful, a series has been added of seventy maps of the counties, drawn from the best authorities, on such a scale as to insure both efficiency and convenience, the railways and railway stations being indicated, and the whole verified on the Ordnance Survey.

For much valuable assistance and information the publishers are indebted to the clergy and landed proprietary, for whose courtesy their acknowledgments are gratefully tendered; while, in offering the National Gazetteer to the notice of the public, they venture to hope that the proportion of inaccuracies inevitable in a work of this nature will not be found to have exceeded an excusable limit.

ABBAS COMBE and TEMPLE COMBE, a par. in the hund. of Horethorne, union of Wincanton, in the co. of Somerset, 4 miles S.W. of Wincanton. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £398, in the patron. of the Rev. T. Fox.

ABBAS-STOKE. See Stoke-Abbas.

ABBENHALL, co. of Gloucester. See Abinghall.

ABBERBURY, co. of Salop. See Alberbury.

ABBERLEY, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. of Doddingtree, union of Martley, in the co. of Worcester. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford; val. £249, in the patron. of Mrs. Moillett. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a small free school. The village is pleasantly situated in a valley near the road from Worcester to Ludlow, at the distance of 4 miles to the S.W. from Stourport. There are fine prospects over the Vale of Severn from the hills around, which rise to the height of 800 feet, and on the slopes of which are sheepwalks and plantations. Limestone and good coal are obtained in the district. This village was the birthplace of William Walsh, the poet, a correspondent of Pope and Addison.

ABBERLEY, HIGH, a hmlt. in the par. of Kidderminster, and lower div. of the hund. of Halfshire, in the co. of Worcester, 2½ miles N.W. of Kidderminster, and a short distance from the rivers Stour and Severn.

ABBERLEY, LOW, a hmlt. adjoining the above, 2 miles W. of Kidderminster.

ABBERTOFT, a hmlt. in the par. of Willoughby, in the Wold div. of the wap. of Calceworth, in the co. of Lincoln, at the distance of 2 miles from Alford.

ABBERTON, a par. in the hund. of Winstree, union of Lexden, in the co. of Essex, 4 miles S. of Colchester. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £289, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, which is small and plain, with a brick steeple, is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. It is watered by the river Roman.

ABBERTON, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. and union of Pershore, in the co. of Worcester, near Bromsgrove. The living is a discharged rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £161, in the patron. of W. Laslett, Esq. There is a mineral spring, the water of which is tonic and purgative, and is said to be little inferior to that of Epsom.

ABBERWICK, a tnshp. in the par. of Edlingham and north div. of Coquetdale ward, union of Alnwick, in the co. of Northumberland, 3 miles W. of Alnwick. It is situated on the river Alne.

ABBEY, or CORCOMROE ABBEY, a par. in the bar. of Burren, in the co. of Clare, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 2 miles S. of the town of Burren, and extending along the shores of Burren harbour in the bay of Galway. The living is an impropriate rect. This parish receives its name from an abbey of the Cistercian order, founded, some say, in 1194, by Donald O'Brien, King of Limerick; others, by his son, Donough Carbrac O'Brien, in 1200. It was called Corcomroe, which signifies "of the fruitful rock;" also, Gounomonagh, or "glen of the monks." The abbey was dedicated to the Virgin, and at one time it was connected with the abbey of Suir, in Tipperary; at a later time with the abbey of Furness, in Lancashire. It had a cell annexed to it in the adjoining barony. Among the ruins of the abbey, which are extensive, the chief object of admiration at present is a lofty pointed arch. Another object of interest is the fine tomb of the King of Thomond, who fell in battle near this spot in 1267. The land along the coast is very fertile; but in the interior the ground is hilly and unproductive. There are valuable limestone quarries, and a profitable trade is carried on in seaweed, which is abundant, and is sold as manure. Another source of employment and profit is the great oyster-bed, called the "Red Bank," established some years ago by Mr. Bindon. Finvarra is the principal seat in the parish.

ABBEY, one of the eleven ecclesiastical subdivisions of the par. of Arbroath, in Forfarshire, Scotland. The living, val. £100, is within the presb. of Arbroath, and in the gift of the pew-holders. In the year 1178, a Tyronensian mitred abbey was founded here by William the Lion, whose remains were interred here. The estate is now in the family of the Panmures.

ABBEY, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Dogmells, in the hund. of Kemess, in the co. of Pembroke, South Wales. It is not far from Cardigan.

ABBEY, a tythg. in the par. and hund. of Axminster, in the co. of Devon. It is not far from the town of Axminster.

ABBEY, a vil. in the par. of Inishlounaght, in the bar. of East Iffa and Offa, in the co. of Tipperary, Ireland. It is situated on the river Suir, 2 miles to the S.W. of Clonmel.

ABBEY, a small vil. within the lib. and co. of Haddington, about 1 mile E. of Haddington, on the banks of the Tyne. Here are the ruins of a Cistercian nunnery founded in 1178 by Ada, mother of Malcolm IV. It was at this spot the parliament met in 1548 to sanction the marriage of Mary Queen of Scots with the Dauphin of France.

ABBEY, near the vil. of Mottisfont, in the hund. of Thorngate, union of Romsey, in the co. of Hants, 12 miles from Southampton, and 12 from Salisbury. The seat of Sir John Mill, Bart.

ABBEY, near Llanrwst, in the hund. of Isdulas, and co. of Denbigh, Wales. The seat of Lord Newborough.

ABBEY, near Hartland, in the par. and hund. of Hartland, in the co. of Devon, 46 miles W.N.W. of Exeter. The seat of Mrs. Orchard, a mansion built on the site of the abbey founded by Githa, wife of Earl Godwin, in the 11th century, and rebuilt by Geofrey Dinant in 1184: it passed at the Reformation to Serjeant Abbot.

ABBEY-CWM-HIR, a par. comprising the two hmlts. of Cefnpawl, in the hund. of Cefnllys, and Gollen, in the hund. of Knighton, union of Rhayader, in the co. of Radnor, South Wales, 6 miles to the N.E. of Rhayader. The name signifies "abbey in the long hollow." A Cistercian monastery was founded here in 1143 by Cadwallon-ap-Madoc, dedicated to St. Mary, and intended for sixty brethren of the order; the number of inmates, however, was not at any time so great. The situation was one of singular wildness and beauty. The monastery was completely embosomed in wooded hills, one of which has an elevation of 1,650 feet. The oak forests, which in those remote times covered the hills and hung over the rugged precipices, have long disappeared, and where they grew sheep and now their pasturage. In 1231 the abbey was threatened with destruction by Henry III., who did actually set the grange on fire, in royal revenge for the treachery of a friar who had made a false report to the garrison of Montgomery, and thus occasioned its defeat by the Welsh prince, Llewellyn. It was saved by the payment of 300 marks by the abbot. In 1401, it was much injured by Owen Glyndwr, and at the Dissolution, three monks only were found in it. The site, then given by Henry VIII. to Walter Henley and John Williams, passed afterwards to the Fowler family. The ruins consist mainly of a large part of the walls of an edifice, which was most probably the church. Many shafts and columns remain, and fragments of freestone, beautifully carved, are scattered over the ground. In the church are some tombs of the Fowlers. The living is a perpet. cur., val. £61, in the bishopric of St. David's. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ABBEY COOPER, a small hmlt. in the par. of Holme Cultram, in Allerdale-below-Derwent ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 1 mile W. of the vil. and 5 from Wigton.

ABBEY DALE, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Ecclesall-Bierlow, par. and borough of Sheffield, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles from Sheffield.

ABBEYDARIG, a vil. in the par. of Moydow, in the co. of Longford, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland. It lies at the foot of the Slieve Gauldry hills, near Keenagh.

ABBEY DEMENSES, a hmlt. in the par. of Winchcomb, in the land of Lower Kiftsgate, in the co. of Gloucester, not far from Winchcomb. An abbey of the Benedictine order was founded here by Cenwulf, King of Mercia, in the year 798.

ABBEY DISTRICT, or CAMBUS KENNETH, a vil. in the par. of Stirling, in the co. of Clackmannan, Scotland. It is situated near the hill now called Abbey Craig, on which William Wallace posted his army of patriots to oppose the passage of the Forth by the English before the battle of Stirling. This was in 1297. The abbey was founded in 1147, by David I., who brought over to it, from Arras, in France, a company of monks, of the order of St. Augustine. The popes conferred by bull, from time to time, various, and some curious, privileges on this monastery. In 1559 great part of it was pulled down. It passed after the accession of James I. to the Erskine family. Little is now remaining, except a few walls, a tower, the traces of a garden, and the burial-place of James III. and his Queen Margaret. The pop. of the vil. is small, and their chief employments are weaving and fishing.

ABBEY DORE, or DORE, a par. in the hund. of Webtree, in the co. of Hereford, 13 miles S.W. of Hereford, and 2 N.W. of Pontrilas railway station. It is situated in the Golden Valley on the river Dore, which is celebrated for its trout, and falls into the Munnow near Rowstone. The Newport, Abergavenny, and Hereford railway passes through the parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £680, and in the patron. of the co-heirs of the late Duchess of Norfolk, who held the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious stone edifice, in the Norman style of architecture, with a square tower, and three beautiful stained glass windows. It contains a screen, several monuments and ancient vases, and a remarkable stone coffin of very early date, which was discovered under the church. It formerly belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Dore, founded by Robert de Ewyas, in the reign of King Stephen, whose monument may still be seen in the church. There is a United National and Free School, endowed by Watts with £8 per annum; and the parochial charities amount to about £37. The pop. is small, and employed in agriculture. The union of Dore comprises 28 pars. and tnshps., and the petty sessions are held here

ABBEYDORNEY, a vil. in the par. of O'Dorney, in the bar. of Clanmaurice, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles N. of Tralee. It takes its name from the abbey of Kyrie Eleison, or O'Dorney, which was founded in 1154, for monks of the Cistercian order, who were brought from the abbey of Magio in Limerick. The name of the founder is not known. Its possessions were conferred, by Queen Elizabeth, on Trinity College, Dublin. A few remains of the building may be seen a little north of the village. In 1826 a Roman Catholic Chapel was built here, with stone front, in the later English style. It has a fine altar-piece and painting. The small river Brick flows by the village.

ABBEY FARM, an ext. par. place, in the tnshp. of Thurnham, and hund. of Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the S.W. of Lancaster. It was the site of Cockerham abbey.

ABBEYFEALE, a par. in the Glenquin div. of the bar. of Upper Connello, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 37 miles to the S.W. of Limerick, and 157 miles from Dublin. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Allaghaun and Feale, in a district very wild and mountainous. It is not many years since it was almost inaccessible. This recommended it to the Rockites as a safe retreat, who, in 1822, made it their head-quarters, dating their manifestoes "from our camp at Abbeyfeale." It was not till the year 1836, that the new road was opened, which leads right through the heart of the hills, from Abbeyfeale to Glin. Improvement of the roads has naturally been followed by increase of trade, and this by improvement in the general appearance of the place. Of the 18,000 acres comprised in the par., above 3,000 are waste or bog. Large quantities of turf are cut and sent to the town of Newcastle, 10 miles distant, as fuel; limestone being brought thence in return. Near the village on the west is Wellesley Bridge, on the road from Limerick to Tralee; Goulburn Bridge is at about an equal distance on the east. In a bold situation on the river, about a mile from the village, are the ruins of Purt Castle, which was erected by the Geraldines to command the pass of the Feale. Brien O'Brien founded a Cistercian abbey here in 1188, which became, in 1200, a cell to the abbey of Nenagh. The living is an impropriate vic. in the dioc. of Limerick. The present church, which is small, and in the early English style, was built in 1812. There is a police station in the village. Fairs are held, chiefly for cattle, on the 29th June and the 24th September.

ABBEYFIELD, near the vil. of Sandbach, in the hund. of Northwich, union of Congleton, in the co. of Chester, 1 mile S.W. of Sandbach, near the Manchester Rail and Grand Trunk Canal.

ABBEY FOREGATE, a tnshp. in the par. of Holy Cross and St. Giles, Shrewsbury, in Shropshire. It is so called from a Benedictine abbey, founded here, in the year 1083, by Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Arundel and Shrewsbury, and Adelisa his wife. Near the site of the abbey is Abbey House.

ABBEY GATE, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Leonard, in the lib. of the borough of Leicester, in co. Leicester. It is an ext. par. estate in the sole proprietorship of Lord Dysart. The Patent Solid Manure Company have extensive works here, for utilising the sewage of Leicester.

ABBEYGORMAGAN, a par. in the bars. of Leitrim and Longford, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland. It is situated near the Slieve Boughty hills, 7 miles to the N.W. of Eyrecourt. The chief of the O'Gormagans established a monastery here for the Augustine order, dedicating it to the Blessed Virgin. Henry VIII. conferred its possessions on Ulick, first Earl of Clanricarde. It was also called Monaster O'Gormagan, or "of the new way." The living is a rect. united with Kiltormer, in the dioc. of Clonfert.

ABBEY GREEN, a vil. in the par. of Lesmahago, in Lanarkshire, Scotland, 6 miles from the town of Lanark, and 22 from Glasgow. Here are the ruins of a priory erected by David I. in 1140, in honour of the holy Machute, whose tomb was here. The priory was subordinate to the abbey of Kelso. The modern village is situated at a beautiful spot on the banks of the Nethan, and has a post office. The chief occupation of the people is weaving.

ABBEY HOLME, a tnshp. in the par. of Holme Cultram, in Allerdale-below-Derwent ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 6 miles N.W. of Wigton, and 15 E. of Maryport. The Carlisle and Silloth Bay railway passes through the parish and has a station at Holme. There are still some remains of the Cistercian abbey founded here in 1150 by Prince Henry of Scotland, and St. Mary's church is said to have formed part of the abbey church.

ABBEY HULTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Burslem, in the north div. of the hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 17 miles N. of Stafford. Here are remains of an ancient abbey. The population are chiefly engaged in the manufacture of porcelain, which was established by Wedgwood, who was born at the neighbouring village of Burslem, and there brought to perfection his marvellous inventions in pottery and porcelain.

ABBEY IN MALMESBURY, a par. in the hund. of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, not far from the town of Malmesbury. An abbey of the Benedictine order was established here in the 7th century by Maidulf. It appears to have been one of considerable importance, second, in the west of England, only to Glastonbury. Part of the old church still remains.

ABBEY JERPOINT, a par. in the bar. of Gowran, in the co. of Kilkenny, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, lying on the river Nore, 1 mile S.W. of Thomastown. It was formerly a corporate town. The living is a vic., one of 18 reputed pars., forming the union of Burnchurch, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. The abbey was founded by Donogh O'Donoghoe, King of Ossory, in the year 1180; and a company of monks of the Cistercian order were brought to it, from a distant part of Ossory. The founder died within 5 years after establishing and endowing the abbey, and his remains were interred there. In 1202 it became the burial-place of Felix O'Dullany, Bishop of Ossory, and at his tomb many miracles were believed to be performed. It was soon an object of ambition with the great families to have tombs in a place so honoured. The last abbot was Oliver Grace, who surrendered the abbey to Henry VIII. at the Dissolution. Its temporalities were subsequently granted to James Butler, Earl of Ormonde. The ruins are extensive, but are fast disappearing. The most perfect of them is the tower. The tombs of the founder, of the Graces, and of the Butlers, may be distinguished.

ABBEYKNOCKMOY, a par. in the bars. of Clare and Tyaquin, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 7 miles S.E. of Tuam. The native name of the place signifies "hill of slaughter." The Latin name of the abbey signifies "monastery of the hill of victory." Cathol O'Connor, named also Red Hand, King of Connaught, founded it after a battle with the English, in which he defeated them. Cistercian monks were called to it from the abbey of Boyle. In 1620 James I. granted it to the Blakes; from them it passed to the Forsters, in whose family it still continues. A few remains of the abbey exist. Sculptured capitals lie strewn about the churchyard. On the north wall may be seen the tomb of the founder, and some rude frescoes which appear to belong to the 13th century. They are considerably defaced and going to decay. There are about 500 acres of bog in the parish. The neighbourhood is supplied with water from a subterranean stream near the summit of Knockroe hill. The parish has a police station, and petty sessions are held. The living is a rect. united with Killererin, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. Moyne and Abbey are the principal residences. Fairs are held on the 24th June, the 21st August, and the 1st November.

ABBEY LANDS, a tnshp. in the par. and union of Alnwick and ward of Coquetdale, in the co. of Northumberland, 2 miles to the N.W. of Alnwick. It had anciently an abbey of canons. The hmlts. of Broomhouse, Heckley, Heckley Farm and Grange, and Whitehouse, are included in this township.

ABBEYLARA, a par. in the bar. of Granard, in the co. of Longford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles S. of Granard. It is curiously divided into two nearly equal parts by the parish of Granard, which runs through it from north to south. The eastern half lies on Lough Kemaile, the western on Lough Gownagh. The land is mostly under cultivation, but there are large tracts of bog and some limestone quarries. The living is a vic., in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. £110, and in the patron. of the bishop. There is a police station in the parish. St. Patrick is the reputed founder of the monastery of Lara, which was refounded in 1205, by Lord Tuit, for monks of the Cistercian order, and dedicated to the Virgin. There is nothing left of the building now but one fine arch, several smaller arches, and a winding staircase. Among the gentlemen's seats may be mentioned Fernsborough, a finely planted estate, Newgrove, and Kilrea.

ABBEY LANERCOST. See LANERCOST.

ABBEYLEIX, a par. and market town, in the bars. of Cullinagh, Clarmallagh, and West Maryborough, in Queen's co.; and the bar. of Fassidinin, in the co. of Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland. It is situated on the river Nore, not far from the Dysart hills, 9 miles S.W. of Maryborough, and 59 miles from Dublin. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £139, in the patron. of Viscount de Vesci. The town consists of one long street, extending along the old coach-road between Durrow and Maryborough and Dublin. It is neatly built, and has a handsome church, erected a few years ago, in the perpendicular style, with a fine spire. The old church is not generally used. There are two chapels in the town, a market-house, sessions-house, bridewell, an almshouse for poor widows, a dispensary, and infirmary. The chief seats are Abbeyleix House, the residence of the Viscount de Vesci; and Belleview. The parish contains 13,546 acres, of which about 400 acres are bog and 300 acres wood land. There is a curious freestone quarry; much good limestone is obtained, and good potters' clay. The woollen manufactures and the flour-mills furnish occupation for many hands. There is a chief police station in the town. Quarter sessions are held in June and December; Petty sessions, weekly, on Saturday, which is the market-day. Fairs are held on the 26th January, the 17th March, the 5th May, the 20th June, the 20th September, and the 4th November. A monastery is said to have been founded here about the year 600, but nothing more is heard of it till 1183. In that year it was refounded by Conogher O'More, and occupied by Cistercian monks, from Baltinglass, in Wicklow. Here the founder was buried, the house grew famous, and the town became chief in the territory of Leix, now Queen's County. Queen Elizabeth, in the sixth year of her reign, granted the monastery and its possessions to Thomas, Earl of Ormond. It now forms part of the estate of Viscount de Vesci. Of the cathedral of Aghaboe, near Abbeyleix, the chancel is the principal vestige. It was repaired in 1818, and is now used as the parish church of Aghaboe.

ABBEY-MAHON, a par. in the bars. of Ibane and Barryroe, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland. It is situated on the south coast of Courtmacsherry bay, 10 miles S. of Bandon. The living is an impropriate cur., in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £34, in the patron. of the Earl of Shannon. There is no church in the par., but a private house is licensed for the performance of divine service. It was formerly part of the par. of Lislee, but was separated from it at the time of the erection of an abbey for the Cistercian order. This abbey, which was built close to the shore, was endowed by Lord Barry with 18 ploughlands, and was not completed at the Dissolution under Henry VIII. Its possessions were then seized and conferred upon the Boyles: they are still the property of the Earl of Shannon. All that remains of the abbey are the walls of its church and a square tower, now covered with ivy. The land in the parish, which comprises about 4,482 acres, is generally good. There is a large extent of bog which yields valuable fuel. Many hands are employed in collecting sand and seaweed, which are much used in the neighbourhood as manure.

ABBEY NEW, Kirkcudbrightshire. See NEW ABBEY.

ABBEY ODORNEY, a vil. in the par. of Ardfert, and bars. of Trughanacury and Clanmaurice, in the co. of Kerry and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 6 miles N.W. of Tralee. At this village are the ruins of the once celebrated abbey, built in 1154, upon the river Brick. 2½ miles from it, is Crotta, a very beautiful mansion, built by the Ponsonby family.

ABBEY PAISLEY, a par. in upper ward, in the co. of Renfrew, Scotland, 8 miles to the W. of Glasgow. It is situated on the rivers White Cart, Black Cart, and Lavern. The Glasgow and Ayr railway and canal pass through it. The town of Paisley occupies the centre of the parish, of which originally it formed a part. But in 1736, when a new church was required, the town was constituted a separate parish, and the remaining district has been since called the Abbey parish. One of the villages included in it is Elderslie, the birthplace of William Wallace. There are remains of a monastery, which was founded here by Walter Fitzallan, the first Stuart. Coal is abundant in the district. Lime also, with ironstone and alum, are found. The industry of the population is exercised in cotton spinning, weaving, bleaching, printing, and working the mines. The livings, val. respectively £376 and £363, are in the presb. of Paisley, and in the patron. of the Marquis of Abercorn, the chief heritor. In the neighbourhood stand the ancient seat of the Dundonalds, and Johnston Castle. There are also several old seats, Stewart's Raiss, Cardonald, and Hawkhead. The par. contains 15,000 acres. See PAISLEY.

ABBEYSHRULE, a par. in the bar. of Shrule, in the co. of Longford, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles N.E. of Ballymahon. The parish is divided into two parts by the river Inny, which is crossed by a stone bridge of ten arches. The Royal canal also passes through, and is conducted over the Inny on a handsome aqueduct. There is a police station, a large flour-mill, and a quarry from which black stone is obtained. The living is a rect. united with Tashinny. A monastery existed here before the 10th century. About the year 1150 it was refounded for Cistercian monks, and dedicated to the Virgin, by O'Ferrall. It was granted by Henry VIII. to James, Earl of Roscommon; and by Queen Elizabeth, in 1569, to Sir R. Dillon, then Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. Some remains of the abbey still exist, besides a large square tower and a cemetery.

ABBEYSIDE, a vil. and a suburb of Dungarvan, in the bar. of Decies-without-Drum, in the co. of Waterford and prov. of Munster, Ireland. It lies on the river Colligan, an inlet of Dungarvan bay. Here are the ruins of McGrath's castle, and of an Augustine friary, founded in 1295: the steeple of the latter is 60 ft. in height; near the altar is seen the curious monument of Donald McGrath, buried in 1400; the Gothic arch which supports the tower is worthy of notice; there are also traces of a round tower.

ABBEY ST BATHAN'S, a par. and district in the co. of Berwick, Scotland, 5 miles to the N.W. of Dunse. It extends about 6 miles in extreme length, and lies picturesquely among the Lammermuir hills. The character of the soil is various. On the banks of the Whitadder and Eye it is well cultivated, comprising about 2,000 acres of arable land; but the hilly districts, which are grey wacke, are barren, and covered with heath, principally consisting of hilly sheep-walks, rising some 300 or 400 feet above the level of the valley. A mine of copper was opened in 1828, on the estate of St Bathan's, but proved unproductive. The living, which is in the presb. of Dunse, is valued at £155 9s. 3d., glebe £13, in the patron. of the crown. The church, which is a very ancient structure, with 140 sittings, is situated on the bank of the Whitadder, surrounded by the kirktown, 7 miles N.W. from Dunse. A priory was founded here at the close of the 12th century, by Ada, daughter of William the Lion. It belonged to the Cistercian order, and was dedicated to St. Bathan, the supposed cousin of St. Columba of Iona, but no traces of it now remain. At a short distance are the ruins of the parish church of Strafontain, originally an hospital, founded by David I.; and adjoining these, on the banks of the brook Monynut, is Godscroft, once the demesne of David Hume, the author.

ABBEYSTRAND, a vil. in the bar. of Carbery-east, in the co. of Cork, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 7 miles from Skibbereen, on Baltimore bay.

ABBEYSTROWRY, a par. in the bar. of Carbery-east, in the co. of Cork, and prov. of Munster, Ireland; containing part of the market-town of Skibbereen. It is intersected by the river Ilen, near which are the remains of an abbey, from which the parish takes its name; but of whose age and founder nothing is known. Less than two-thirds of the land in the parish is under cultivation, the remainder being waste or bog. The bog is not very extensive, and the rest consists of rocky hills, with small tracts of pasture scattered here and there. Farming has not made much progress. It is said that the old wooden plough is used still. At Derrygoole there are some slate-quarries, but they have not been worked very extensively or profitably. Here are several fine residences of the gentry, as Hollybrook, Lakelands, Abbeyville, &c. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £118, in the patron. of S. Townshend, Esq. The par. contains 9,396 acres. See SKIBBEREEN.

ABBEY, THE, near Castleton, in the hund. of High Peak, in the co. of Derby, 6 miles N. of Castleton and 38 N. of Derby, situated on the river Derwent.

ABBEY, THE, Cirencester, in the hund. and union of Cirencester, in the co. of Gloucester, 1½ mile from Cirencester, near the ruins of the abbey built by Henry I.

ABBEY, THE, an ext. par. place, in the hund. of Isaf, union of Llanrwst, in the co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, 4 miles S. of Conway. It derives its name from a Cistercian priory founded here in 1185 by Llewelyn-ap-Jorworth, but afterwards removed to Mayman.

ABBEY, THE, near Leek, in the north div. of the hund. of Totmanlow, in the co. of Stafford, built on the site of Dieulacres, or Dalacres Abbey, founded in 1220 by Randulph, Earl of Chester, who named it Dieu l'enerce, ("may God increase it") at the request of his wife. Here also stood a nunnery, the site of which was granted by Edward VI. to the Baggeholts.

ABBEY, THE, a district surrounding the abbey and palace of Holyrood, in the co. of Edinburgh, Scotland, known in Scottish law as emphatically "The Abbey," from its having possessed from a very early period the privileges of sanctuary for debtors.

ABBEYVIEW, near Boyle, in the bar. of Boyle, and in the co. of Roscommon, Ireland, 84 miles N.W. of Dublin. It derives the first affix of its name from the abbey founded here in 1148. It is not far from the Curlew hills and the river Boyle.

ABBEYVILLE, near Burrishoole Abbey, in the bar. of Burrishoole, and in the co. of Mayo, Ireland. Here was formerly a Dominican abbey, founded by the De Bourkes in 1486, some ruins of which still remain; near here also is Grace O'Malley's Castle.

ABBEYVILLE, near Ballymote, in the bar. of Corran and co. of Sligo, Ireland, 12 miles S. of Sligo. Here was a Franciscan friary, founded by the M'Donoghs. It was here the Irish Psalter of Ballymote was written.

ABBEY WOOD, a hmlt. in the par. and hund. of Woolwich, union of Greenwich, in the co. of Kent, 2 miles S.E. of Woolwich. It is a station on the North Kent railway. It derives its name from the ruins of Lesnes Abbey.

ABBEY WOOD, or ABBEY, a hmlt. near the vil. of Dunkeswell, in the co. of Devon, 6 miles N. of Honiton. At Dunkeswell Abbey is a handsome district church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and endowed by the late Mrs. Simcoe with £50 per annum. It is a stone building, and has tower, Galilæan porch, and chancel with several handsome stained glass windows. There is a school for boys and girls.

ABBORN, in the co. of York. See AUBURN.

ABBOTRULE, formerly a separate par. in the co. of Roxburgh, Scotland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Jedburgh, on the river Rule. It is now consolidated with the pars. of Hobkirk and Southdean.

ABBOT'S, a tythg. in the par. and hund. of Portbury, in the co. of Somerset, 6 miles to the N.W. of Bristol. It was anciently a cell of the Augustine order to the priory of Bromere.

ABBOT'S ANN, a par. and vil. partly in the hund. of Wherwell, partly in that of Lower Andover, union of Andover, in the co. of Hants, 2½ miles to the S.W. of Andover. It lies on a branch of the river Test, and the Andover canal passes near it. The tythg. of Little Ann is included in it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester; val. £645, in the patron. of Miss Burrough. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here are national and infant schools, and a place of worship for Independents. The Rev. Thos. Best is lord of the manor. Bury Hill, in the tythg. of Little Ann, is a large double encampment, at the confluence of the Pillhill brook and the Anton river.

ABBOT'S ASTLEY, Salop. See ASTLEY ABBOT'S.

ABBOT'S BICKINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Great Torrington, in the co. of Devon. It is situated on the river Torridge, 6 miles to the N.E. of Holsworthy, and was formerly a cell to Hartland Abbey. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £93, in the patron. of the trustees of Lord Rolle. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ABBOT'S BROMLEY, Staffordshire. See BROMLEY ABBOT'S.

ABBOTSBURY, a town and par. in the hund. of Uggscombe, in the co. of Dorset; 9 miles S.W. of Dorchester, and 128 S.W. from London. It is a place of great antiquity, and was once a market town. Its situation is very picturesque and pleasant, in a valley shut in by lofty chalk hills, not far from the north end of the Chesil Bank, and open to the sea at the south-west. Its name is derived from its ancient possessors, the abbots of the monastery dedicated to St. Peter, which was founded (as it is supposed) in the year 1044, by Orking (steward of the household to King Canute) and Tola his spouse. It belonged to the Benedictine order, and became a very wealthy house. All that is now left of the building is a gateway, with portions of the walls. It was granted, at the Dissolution, to Sir G. Strangeways. A mansion was afterwards erected on the site, which was held and garrisoned by the Royalists in 1644, and was attacked and burnt by Sir A. A. Cooper. The town consists of three streets. The chief employment of the population is fishing. Some time ago cotton-weaving was introduced, but the experiment did not succeed. A fair for sheep and toys is held on the 11th July. The church, which is dedicated to St. Nicholas, was built in the reign of Edward IV. It is a large and handsome edifice, in the perpendicular style, with a square tower. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury; val. £140. The pat. is the Earl of Ilchester, who is also lord of the manor. Strangeways Castle, his seat, stands in the midst of extensive and beautiful grounds, including a large decoy for wild fowl, and a swannery. There is a free school, founded by the Earls of Ilchester, and the new school-house has just been completed by the present earl at the cost of £1000. At a short distance from the town is a cromlech. There are also traces of a Roman camp, which occupied a space of about 20 acres. On an elevation south-west of the town stands the ruined chapel of St. Catherine, supposed to have been erected in the reign of Edward IV., which now serves as a landmark for coasting-vessels.

ABBOT'S CARSWELL, Devonshire. See ABBOTSKERSWELL.

ABBOT'S CASTLE, or APEWOOD CASTLE, near Wolverhampton, in the co. of Stafford. Here are the remains of a British fortification, on a lofty round eminence, to the N. of the Shrewsbury and London road.

ABBOT'S CHAIR, near Huntingdon, in the hund. of Hurstingstone, and co. of Huntingdon, 4 miles N.E. of Huntingdon, and 69 N. of London. It receives the first affix of its name from an Austin friary, founded by Eustace de Lovetot, in the reign of Henry II., but of which no traces now remain.

ABBOT'S COURT, an ext. par. place, situated in the par. of Winterborne Kingston, and hund. of Bere-Regis, in the co. of Dorset, 5 miles to the S.W. of Blandford.

ABBOTSFORD, near Melrose, in the district of Melrose, and co. of Roxburgh, Scotland, 2 miles W. of Melrose, and 37 from Edinburgh, by the Hawick railway. This beautiful mansion, which is one of the attractions to the tourist in the north, is built in the old château style at a point where Gala Water falls into the Tweed. Sir Walter Scott, whose name renders it sacred, commenced it in 1816, after a design of his own, and fitted it up after his own taste. The edifice defies all the rules of architecture, and has singular features and extraordinary proportions, yet looks both beautiful and picturesque. The hall is embellished with the carved oak panels brought from Dunfermline, armorial paintings, and other antiques. There is also an armory, and a magnificent library of 20,000 volumes, which were brought together by the poet himself, as also some fine paintings by Turner, with portraits of Queen Mary, Essex, Cromwell, Claverhouse, Charles XII. of Sweden, Scott of Harden, and other historical personages. Here is preserved the old Tolbooth gate, from Edinburgh, and Erskine's pulpit. This spot, and the neighbouring ruins of Melrose Abbey, supplied many of the scenes described in "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and in "The Monastery." The seat is still the property of the poet's family, having passed, on the death of his son, into the occupancy of his son-in-law, Mr. Lockhart.

ABBOTSFORD, a small place near the vil. of Shipley, in the par. of Heanor, in the hund. of Morleston, and co. of Derby, 31 miles from Leicester. There are coal mines near here.

ABBOTSHALL, a par. in the Kirkcaldy district of Fifeshire, Scotland. It is 14 miles from Edinburgh, near Kirkcaldy, and extends along the coast of the Frith of Forth, being, in its utmost length, not more than 4 miles, and in its greatest breadth about 2 miles. The Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway passes through it. It formerly belonged to the abbots of Dunfermline. The country is hilly and the soil fertile, the village populous and busy. There are some coal mines; and lime, brick-earth, and potters' clay are also procured. Linen, cotton, and flannel are manufactured here to a considerable extent; there are also a sail-canvas manufactory, spinning-mills, and a number of corn-mills. The place partakes of the general prosperity of Kirkcaldy. The living, in the presb. of Kirkcaldy, val. £200, is in the patron. of Ferguson of Raith, who is the chief proprietor of the village. On his estate are shown the remains of Balwearie Tower, in which the famous astrologer, Sir Michael Scot, lived. The villages of Linktown Burgh, Newtown and Chapel are in this parish.

ABBOTS-HALL, near Stowmarket, in the hund. of Stow, and co. of Suffolk, 12 miles from Ipswich, and 81 from London by East Union railway. It receives the first affix of its name from having been given by Henry II. to St. Osyth's Abbey.

ABBOTS-HALL, in the par. of Kendal, and co. of Westmoreland, adjoining the town of Kendal, 258¼ miles from London by the Lancaster and Carlisle railway. It receives the first affix of its name from having been in ancient times a seat of the abbots of St. Mary's, York.

ABBOTSHAM, a par. in the hund. of Shebbear, in the co. of Devon, 2 miles W. of Bideford railway station, on Barnstaple bay. It contains the hmlts. of Shoppterton and Littleham, and it anciently belonged to Tavistock Abbey. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £159, in the patron. of the Lord Chancellor. In the neighbourhood is Kenwie or "Cynvit" Castle, from which the Earl of Devon sallied and defeated the Danes under their chieftain Hubba, when he took the banner of the sacred raven.

ABBOT'S HILL, a hmlt. 1½ mile E. of the vil. of Halstock, in the co. of Dorset, 8 miles N.E. of Beaminster, and 5 S.W. of Yeovil. A Roman mosaic pavement was discovered near this spot some years since by the Earl of Ilchester.

ABBOTSIDE, HIGH, a tnshp. in the par. of Aysgarth, and wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles N.W. of Hawes. The river Ure takes its rise here. There are several beautiful falls in its course. The tnshp. includes the hmlts. of Hardrow, Cotterdale, Helbeck-Lunds, &c. The district is principally moorland.

ABBOTSIDE, LOW, a tnshp. adjoining High Abbotside and in the same par., near the picturesque waterfall called Whitefield Force. The two tnshps. are separated by Whitefield Gill. The hmlts. of Grange, Bowbridge, Helme, and Shawcote are included in this tnshp. There are almshouses for the reception of six poor widows. Many persons were formerly employed here in stocking knitting.

ABBOTS' ISLE. See ISLE ABBOTS.

ABBOTS' ISLE, a small island in the Bay of Stonefield, on the south side of Loch Etive, in the co. of Argyle, Scotland. Its appearance from the water is very beautiful, being clothed in verdure.

ABBOT'S KENSINGTON, a manor in the par. of Kensington and hund. of Ossulstone, in the co. of Middlesex, 4 miles W.S.W. of St. Paul's. This manor anciently belonged to the Abbey of Abingdon, from which circumstance it derives the first affix to its name. It is now the site of Holland House, a fine Elizabethan mansion built by Sir W. Cope in 1607. It is the seat of the Earl of Holland, and in it Addison died.

ABBOTSKERSWELL, or ABBOT'S CARSWELL, a par. in the Haytor div. of Teignbridge hund., in the co. of Devon, 2 miles S. of Abbots Newton; it lies near the South Devonshire railway, at a short distance from Torbay. Here was anciently a cell to Montacute Abbey. Bovey coal, potters' clay, and alum are found here. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £293, and in the patron. of the Lord Chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ABBOT'S LANGLEY, a par. and post town in the hund. of Cashio, and lib. of St. Alban's, union of Watford, in the co. of Herts, 1 miles N.W. of Watford, and 18 from London, on the North Western railway and Grand Junction canal. The living is a discharged vic. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £270, and in the patron. of the Rev. R. Geo. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is in the perpendicular English style, with Norman tower: it has lately been restored with much taste, and contains a fine old font, besides the tombs of the Raymonds of Longbury, and some ancient brasses. The first affix of the name was derived from its having been granted to the Abbey of St. Alban's to supply it with clothing. It was the birthplace of Nicholas Breakspeare, afterwards Pope Adrian IV., the only English pope. A coin of the Roman Emperor Claudius was found here. It contains the hmlt. of Bedmont, and the Duke of York's Provident Retreat. The manor now belongs to Queen's College, Cambridge, and Trinity College, Oxford.

ABBOT'S LEIGH, a par. in the hund. of Portbury, union of Bedminster, in the co. of Somerset, 3 miles N.W. of Bristol, and 120 from London by the Great Western railway. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester, val. £77, and in the patron. of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The church, which was formerly much decayed, has been lately restored by P. Miles, Esq., M.P., of Leigh Court, who has a fine picture gallery. The village, which commands a view of the Bristol Channel, is situated on the river Avon, near Rownham Ferry, and was formerly the property of St. Augustine's Abbey.

ABBOTSLEY, a par. in the hund. of Toseland, in the co. of Huntingdon, 4 miles S.E. of St. Neots. It is situated on the old Roman road from St. Alban's. The land in the parish is chiefly pasture. The living is a vic.,* val. £85, in the dioc. of Ely. The pats. are the Masters and Fellows of Baliol College, Oxford. The church, which is dedicated to St. Margaret, is an ancient structure, with a square embattled tower, in which are five bells and a clock. It was entirely repaired in 1864, and has a handsome modern altar-piece in the chancel.

ABBOT'S LINCH, or HOB LINCH, a hmlt. in the par. of Fladbury, in the middle div. of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Evesham, in the co. of Worcester, 4 miles E. of Pershore, and 5 miles N. of Evesham.

ABBOT'S LOW, near Hopton, in the par. of Wirksworth, and co. of Derby. Here is a large barrow, in which many British antiquities were found. See "Archæologia," xii. 8.

ABBOT'S-MORETON, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. of Blackenhurst, union of Alcester, in the co. of Worcester, near Bromsgrove. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £146, in the patron. of G. J. A. Walker, Esq. The village is situated near the Avon, 10 miles E. of Worcester, and 6 from the Birmingham and Gloucester railway.

ABBOT'S-PARK, near Moulton, in the hund. of South Moulton, and co. of Devon, 6 miles N.E. of South Moulton, a small place situated on the river Yeo, which rises near Parkham, and runs 8 miles E. to the Torridge, below Littleham.

ABBOT'S RIPTON, a par. in the hund. of Hurstingstone, in the co. of Huntingdon, 6 miles N. of Huntingdon, and 67 from London. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £630, and in the patron. of the Rev. P. P. Rooper. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, is an ancient structure, with a low tower. There is a national school for boys and girls, supported by the inhabitants. At 1 mile distant from the vil. of Abbot's Ripton, are the hmlts. of Wennington and Wild Goose Leys. The parish was given by Henry II. to Ramsey abbey, whence it passed at the Reformation to the St. John family. Edward Fellows, Esq., is at present the lord of the manor.

ABBOT'S ROOTHING, or ABBESS ROOTHING, a par. in the hunds. of Ongar and Dunmow, union of Ongar, in the co. of Essex, 5 miles N.E. of Ongar, and 9 from Epping. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £323, in the patron. of Rev. T. Dyer. The church, which is dedicated to St. Edmond, is situated on the river Roothing, which rises in the North Weald, and after continuing its course for 30 miles, falls into the Thames, above Barking. Here is a meet of the Essex hounds. It takes its name from the circumstance of its having of old belonged to the Abbess of Barking.

ABBOT'S TOKE, in co. Dorset. See STOKE-ABBAS.

ABBOTSTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Itchen Stoke, in the Winchester div. of the hund. of Bountisborough, union of Alresford, in the co. of Hants, 1½ mile to the N.W. of New Alresford. The living is a rect. united with Itchin Stoke, in the dioc. of Winchester. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, is in ruins, and there are remains of an ancient residence of the Paulets.

ABBOTSTONE, a tythg. in the par. of Whiteparish, and hund. of Trustfield, in Wiltshire, 7 miles S.E. of Salisbury.

ABBOT-STREET, a hmlt. in the manor of Kingston Lacy, in the borough of Wimborne Minster and hund. of Badbury, in the co. of Dorset.; 2 miles W. of Wimborne Minster. Its name is derived from the nunnery founded by St. Cuthberga, which is now the collegiate church of Wimborne.

ABBOTSTOWN, near Finglas, in the bars. of Castlenock and Nethercross, in the W. div. of the co. of Dublin, Ireland. It derives its name from having been built on the site of St. Bridget's Abbey, founded by the Tyrrels. Here is the seat of Jas. H. Hamilton, Esq., M.P.

ABBOT'S WORTHY, a tythg. in the par. of King's Worthy, in the Winchester div. of the hund. of Mitcheldever, in the co. of Hants., 2 miles N.E. of Winchester. It is pleasantly situated in the vale of the Itchen.

ABB'S HEAD, ST., a promontory on the eastern coast of Scotland, a little S. of the entrance to the Frith of Forth. It lies within the par. of Coldingham, about 10 miles N. of Berwick, and the same distance S. of Dunbar, and generally swarms with sea-fowl. This promontory consists of a mass of trap-rocks—trap-tuff, amygdaloid, and felspar porphyry, being the principal components. The prevailing rocks in the district are silurian and older slates. There are various traditions as to the origin of the nunnery which once existed here. Perhaps the one most generally received is the following:—In the early part of the 7th century, Penda, King of Mercia, sought in marriage the fair Ebba, or Abba, daughter of Ethelfrith, King of Northumberland. This princess, who was a Christian, shrank from allying herself with the pagan Penda. She therefore fled and put to sea. A storm overtook her, and her vessel was driven ashore on this promontory. And here, in the solitude of rock and sea, amidst scenes of almost savage grandeur, she, with her companions, established her religious house. The summit of the rock on which the nunnery was erected, is about 300 feet above the level of the sea, and has three sides perpendicular to the sea. It is related in the chronicles of the time, that in the year 837, when the Danes invaded the land, the abbess and her nuns, in order to save themselves from pagan violence, cut off their noses and upper lips. But in vain; the pagans had no pity, and the nunnery with its occupants was burnt. On another hill, about a mile off was the chapel and the cemetery. The site of the latter is said to be still indicated by a more luxuriant vegetation.

ABBY SHEEPCOT, a hmlt. near the vil. of Clehonger, in the hund. of Webtree, in the co. of Hereford, 4 miles from the Hereford railway station, on the bank of the river Wye.

ABCOTT, a tnshp. in the par. of Clungunford and hund. of Purslow, in Shropshire, 8 miles to the N.W. of Ludlow. It is divided from Clungunford by the river Clun, which is famous for trout.

ABDICK and BULSTONE HUNDRED, in the southern part of Somersetshire; bounded on the N. by North Carry hund., part of Somerton hund., and Pitney hund.; on the E. by East Petherton and South Kingsbury hunds.; on the S. by part of South Petherton hund. and part of East Kingsbury hund.; and on the W. by Taunton and Taunton Dean hunds. It contains the pars. of Ashill, Beer-Crocombe, Bickenhall, South Bradon, Broadway, Buckland St. Mary, Cricket-Malherbe, Curland, Curry-Malet, Curry-Rivel, Donyatt, West Dowlish, Drayton, Earnshill, Fivehead, Hatch-Beauchamp, Ilminster, Ilton, Isle-Abbots, Isle-Brewers, White-Lackington, Puckington, Staple-Fitzpaine, Stoke-linch St. Magdalen, Stokelinch-Ottersay, and Swell.

ABDIE, a par. in the district of Cupar, in the co. of Fife, Scotland, 2 miles S.E. of Newburgh. It lies among the Ochill hills, on the south shore of the Frith of Tay. The par. is broken up into three separate parts. It contains the Grange of Lindores, Lindores, and Mount Pleasant. The district has no woods, and is generally well cultivated. There are no rivers, except the Tay, but it is watered by several lochs, the principal of which is the Loch of Lindores. This lake is about a mile in length and of varying breadth, and it contains an abundance of fish. The scenery of the neighbourhood is very fine. There are many ancient mansions which have fallen into decay. Freestone and whinstone are quarried here, as also granite, which is shipped in considerable quantity for paving the streets of London. A few hands are engaged in linen weaving. The living, val. £233, is in the presb. of Cupar, and in the patron. of the Earl of Mansfield. Near the old abbey church stands Lindores House, the residence of Admiral Maitland. Denmill Castle, said to have belonged to Macduff, the celebrated Thane of Fife, is in this parish. There are traces, on the highest hills of the district, both of Danish and Roman fortifications, especially on Clatchart Crag and Norman's Law, which are remarkable for their height and precipitous fronts. In 1309, a battle was fought between the English and the Scots under Wallace, at Blakearnside, in which the English were defeated.

ABDON, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. of Munslow, in the co. of Salop, a short distance from Bridgnorth, and 10 miles N. of Ludlow, which is a market town and railway station on the Shrewsbury and Hereford railway. It is situated near the foot of the Clee hills, and looks out upon Corve Dale, through which flows the small river Corve. The living, a discharged rect.,* val. £147, is in the dioc. of Hereford, and in the patron. of Lord Herbert. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ABENBURY-FAWR, a tnshp. in the par. of Wrexham, and hund. of Bromfield, in the co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 3 miles to the N. of Wrexham. According to an arrangement made in March, 1830, this tnshp. supports its own poor.

ABENBURY-FECHAN, a tnshp. in the par. of Wrexham, in the hund. of Maylor and co. of Flint, North Wales, 3 miles N.N.W. of Wrexham. It is watered by the river Clywedog, over which is a bridge. There are iron foundries in the town. It is the only tnshp. in the par. of Wrexham that lies in Flintshire; all the other tnshps. are in Denbighshire. It has a separate assessment for the maintenance of its poor.

ABENHALL, Gloucestershire. See ABINGHALL.

ABER, a vil. in the par. of Llandyfriog, hund. of Troedyraur, in the co. of Cardigan, South Wales, 2 miles N.E. of Newcastle Emlyn. The river Teifi passes through it. This word Aber is Celtic, and signifies the "mouth of a river." In this sense it serves as a prefix to many ancient British names of places, as Aberdeen, "the mouth of the river Dee;" Aberbrothwick, now called Arbroath (in Scotland), "the mouth of the river Brothwick;" Abergavenny (in Wales), the confluence of the river Gavenny with the river Usk.

ABER, or ABERGWYNGREGYN, a par. in the hund. of Uchaf, and union of Bangor, in the co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, 4 miles E. of Bangor, and now a station on the Holyhead railway. The vil., which is small, stands at the opening of a pleasant glen, near the Lavan sands, on the Menai Straits, which at this point are about 7 miles in breadth. At low water there are 4 miles of fine sands, pleasant for walking. The small river Gwyngregyn flows through the glen and falls here into the straits. The prospect is very fine, extending over the Bay of Beaumaris, and the hills of the Isle of Anglesey, to Great Orme's Head, and the distant Island of Priestholme. The native princes had once their residence here. A castle was built near the village by Llewellyn the Great, but of this no vestiges remain. It was from this place that Llewellyn sent his wife, the daughter of King John, to intercede with her father, who was attempting the subjugation of North Wales. And hence, too, the last Llewellyn led his forces to the final conflict with Edward I. The church, which is dedicated to St. Bodvan, is spacious and old, with a square tower. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bangor, val. £382, in the patron. of Sir R. B. W. Bulkeley, Bart. The Independents and Wesleyans have places of worship here. There is a school in the village which was established and endowed by Dean Jones, for the purpose of teaching ten poor children of the parish to read Welsh.

ABERAËRON, or ABERAYRON, a seaport town, partly in the par. of Henfynyw, but mostly in the par. of Llandewi-Aberarth, hund. of Ilar, in the co. of Cardigan, South Wales, 21 miles N.E. of Cardigan, and 192 miles from London. It is very pleasantly situated on Cardigan Bay, at the extremity of the Vale of Aëron. The sides of the valley are here abrupt and well wooded. The river Aëron, which flows through the valley, separates the two parishes. It abounds in trout and salmon. The scenery of the vale is charming, and has attracted many visitors of late years. The town has grown rapidly, and the population more than doubled since 1841. There is a good harbour, which was constructed in 1807 by the Rev. A. T. Jones Gwynne, under the authority of an Act of Parliament, and has since been enlarged. There is a bar at the entrance of the harbour, which is dry at low water. The port, which is a subport of Cardigan, has about fifty vessels belonging to it, and one hundred persons are engaged in shipbuilding. Quarter sessions and petty sessions, and the county-court, are held in the town-hall, which was erected in 1836, and enlarged in 1846. Saturday is the market day, and on the 13th Dec. there is a fair for horses and cattle. Here is a large school connected with the Church of England, which was established in 1849. The Dissenters also maintain another. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £50. The patron. is in the hands of the inhabitants. On the shore, near the town, is an ancient circular earthwork, called Castell Cadwgan, which is supposed to have been constructed in the middle of the 12th century by Cadwgan-ab-Bleddyn.

ABERAMMON, near Adare, in the hund. of Mirkin, in the co. of Glamorgan, 2 miles S.E. of Aberdare. Here stood the old mansion of the Matthewes, who have left considerable charities to Adare.

ABERARAD, a vil. in the hmlt. of Emlyn, par. of Kenarth, and hund. of Elvet, in the co. of Carmarthen, 1 mile distant from Newcastle Emlyn.

ABERARTH, Cardiganshire. See LLANDEWI ABERARTH.

ABERAVON, a par. in the hund. and union of Neath, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales. It lies on the road from Swansea to Cardiff, and is a station on the South Wales Railway, distant 30 miles N.W. from Cardiff, and 196 miles from London. It is a place of very great antiquity, having at one time some peculiar privileges, which have long fallen into disuse. The Norman chieftain Fitzhamon conferred it, along with other territories, on Caradoc-ab-Jestyn, who is said to have erected the castle, the foundations of which are still discernable in a field near the churchyard. The castle was laid in ruins in the middle of the 12th century, by Madoc-ab-Meredydd, Prince of Powys. The town is situated about 1 mile above the mouth of the Avon, on the shore of Swansea bay, and is protected on the north by lofty hills. The port has been very greatly improved by the construction of a floating harbour, in the year 1838. In former times, the town suffered from frequent inundations. A very destructive one occurred in 1768. The late increase and present importance of the place is almost entirely owing to the great works at Cwm Avon, which are among the most extensive in Wales. They include collieries, iron-works, copper-smelting, tin-plate, and charcoal-works, and are under the management of the governor and company of Copper Miners in England. The town is a borough by prescription. By the Reform Bill of 1832 it was made contributory to Swansea, in returning a member to parliament. It was formerly governed by a portreeve, 2 aldermen, burgesses, &c. Under a charter of incorporation granted in July, 1861, it is now governed by a mayor, 4 aldermen, and a body of councillors. There is a town-hall, and a bridge over the Avon. The living is a vic.• in the dioc. of Llandaff, with Baglan annexed, val. £154, in the patron. of J. Richards, Esq. The church, a handsome Gothic edifice lately rebuilt, is dedicated to St. Mary. The Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, Bible Christians, Primitive and Calvinistic Methodists have chapels.

ABERBAIDEN, a hmlt., parcel of the chapelry of Llanfihy, hund. of Crickhowell, in the co. of Brecon, South Wales, 4 miles S.W. of Crickhowell. It is situated at the confluence of the small river Baiden with the Usk, and is intersected by the river Clydach, which flows through a deep valley and joins the Usk. In the course of the Clydach are several cascades, the most remarkable of which is named Pwll-y-Cwn, "the dog's pool." Over this river the Brecknock canal is carried along an embanked aqueduct, at the height of 84 feet above the river bed. Employment is furnished by collieries, lime-works, and the Clydach iron-works, which are very extensive, producing above 200 tons a week. The hmlt. maintains its own poor. South of the hill, near the Pwll-y-Cwn, may be seen remains of an ancient British fort, called the Gaer.

ABERBECHAN, a tnshp. in the par. of Llanllwchaiarn, hund. of Newtown, in Montgomeryshire, North Wales, not far from Newtown. It stands at the confluence of the rivers Bechan and Severn, Aberbechan House is the residence of Sir J. Clifton, Bart.

ABER BIGA, a small place under Plinlimmon, in the co. of Montgomery, 5 miles N.W. of Llanidloes, and 15 S.W. from Montgomery, situated on the river Cywedog.

ABERBROTHICK, Forfarshire. See ARBROATH.

ABERCAIRNIE, a vil. in the par. of Glammis, in Forfarshire, Scotland, 8 miles N.W. of Dundee. Abercairnie House is the seat of the Earl of Strathearn.

ABERCARFAN, near Caron-ys-Clawdd, in the co. of Cardigan, 3 miles S. of Tregaron, and 6 N.E. of Lampeter; not far from Tregaron Hill, which rises to the height of 1,747 feet.

ABERCARNE, a town in the lower div. of Wentlooge hund., in the co. of Monmouth, 7 miles N.W. of Newport. It is situated on the river Ebwy and on the Crumlin canal. The Abercarne station on the Western Valleys' railway, is at the confluence of the Gwydden with the Ebwy, near Abergwydden.

ABERCASTLE, a vil., in the par. of Mathry, hund. of Dewisland, in the co. of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles to the N.E. of St. David's. It is situated on a creek, not far from Abercastle Shoal and Abercastle Island.

ABERCEGID, Carnarvonshire. See PORT PENRHYN.

ABERCHIRDER, a vil. in the par. of Marnoch, in Banffshire, Scotland, 7 miles W. of Turriff, and 8 from Banff. It was formerly the name of the whole parish, but is now confined to the village, which stands at the intersection of the roads from Huntly to Banff, and Turriff to Portsoy. It is situated on the bank of the Doveran. Besides a handsome, new church belonging to the Free Kirk, the Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, and Baptists have places of worship. There is a branch office of the North of Scotland Bank, and a stamping office. An annual fair is held on the second Tuesday of March for the sale of horses and cattle, and a weekly market for grain.

ABERCONWAY, Carnarvonshire. See CONWAY.

ABERCORN, a par. and district in the co. of Linlithgow, Scotland, 5 miles N.E. of Linlithgow. It is situated on the south bank of the Frith of Forth, and is a station on the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway, and on the Union canal. The village and church of Abercorn, which is an old structure, are delightfully situated on an angular point, where two small rivulets unite about 100 yards before their junction with the Forth. Winchburgh is the nearest post town. Its greatest length E. and W. is about 4¼ miles, and its greatest breadth is about 2¼ miles. The surface is exceedingly diversified, and eminently picturesque, especially along the seaboard, which is rich with wood, and surpassingly beautiful. The parish contains the villages of Newton and Philpstown. It is said that a Pictish dioc. was established here at the end of the 7th century, mentioned by the Venerable Bede. A monastery, one of the most ancient in Scotland, was founded here, in 1140, by David I. The castle, which belonged to the family of the Douglases, was built on the site of a Roman fort, and was destroyed in 1455 during the rebellion of the Earl of Douglas, but no remains now exist, either of the monastery or the castle. The country is fertile and well wooded. Coal is obtained, together with limestone, ironstone, and a useful building-stone. The Earl of Hopetoun, chief heritor, is the pat. of the living, val. £189, in the presb. of Linlithgow. Hopetoun House, the seat of the Earl, is a noble mansion, situated on the brow of a hill, commanding a prospect over the Forth; 3 miles from Queensferry, and 12 from Edinburgh. George IV. on the occasion of his visit to Scotland, was entertained here. The parish gives the British title of Marquis, and the Scotch title of Earl, to the Hamiltons of Duddingstone.

ABERCOWARCH, near Dinas Mowddwy, in the par. of Mallwyd and co. of Merioneth, 9 miles S.E. of Dolgelly, and 200 from London; a fine spot among the Aran Mowddwy mountains.

ABERCRAF, near Ystradynglais, in the hund. of Devynnock, in the co. of Brecon, 8 miles N. of Neath. Here was the Gwyns' old seat, now a farm.

ABERCROMBIE, or ST. MONANCE, a par. in the district of St. Andrew's, in the co. of Fife, 1 mile S.W. of Pittenween, 20 from Perth, and 34 from Edinburgh. With the post-office village of St. Monance, it forms a burgh or barony under the laird of Newark, and is governed by a town council of fifteen, and three bailies. The living, val. £162, is in the presb. of St. Andrew's, and in the patron. of the crown. The parish church is part of an old convent, situated on a rock projecting into the Frith, and is a stately Gothic pile in the form of a cross, originally built by David II. in 1369 after escaping shipwreck. It was granted by James III. to the Black Friars, and was restored in 1827, with much taste, as the parish church. The coast consists of free and lime-stone rocks, and the village has a tolerably good harbour, accommodating three or four trading vessels and thirty large fishing boats. It was formerly one of the most considerable towns on the coast of Fife, but is now only a village of second-rate importance. There are in the neighbourhood quarries of lime, ironstone, and coal. It gives the title of Baron to the son of Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who fell at the battle of Alexandria; and the surname of Abercrombie to Sir Robert of Birkenbog, the head of the Clan. Here are the remains of New House, the seat of General Leslie, famous in the Commonwealth time.

ABERDALGIE, a par., now united with Dupplin, in the district of East Perth, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 3 miles S.W. of Perth. It lies on the north bank of the river Earn, which affords good fishing. Freestone is abundant, and there are some lime quarries at Milton. Dupplin Castle is the seat of the Earl of Kinnoul; it was destroyed by fire in 1827, but has been rebuilt in the Elizabethan style. The living, val. £158, is in the presb. of Perth, and in the patron. of the Earl of Kinnoul, chief heritor. The battle of Dupplin was fought here in 1332, between Baliol and the Earl of Mar. The parish was the estate of the Oliphants, from the reign of David II. to 1625, when the Earl of Morton sold it to the ancestors of the Earl of Kinnoul.

ABERDARE, a par. in the hund. of Miskin, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 4 miles to the S.W. of Merthyr Tydfil, 19 miles to the E. of Neath, and 23 miles N.W. of Cardiff. It has a station on the Taff-Vale Line, by which it communicates, viâ Cardiff, with London, 194½ miles. It comprises the hmlts. of Cefnpennar, Cwmdare, Forchaman, and Llwydcoed. The situation and surrounding scenery of Aberdare are particularly pleasant. The village lies on the banks of the river Dâr, near the point of its junction with the Cynon, in the romantic vale of Cynon. Groves of oak and fir are intermingled with green meadows and corn-fields, with rugged rocks, and the windings of the stream. Coal and iron ore are found; and the works furnish employment for 8,000 hands. The works at Llwydcoed and Abernant are capable of producing 1,400 tons of iron weekly. There are other extensive iron-works in the parish. A canal, 7 miles in length, connects these works with the Cardiff canal, and a railway, 8 miles in length, connects them with the Taff Vale railway. There is also a railway to Neath, and another to Hereford. By the Reform Bill of 1832, Aberdare is made to form part of the borough of Merthyr Tydfil. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Llandaff, with St. Elvan's and Hirwain annexed, val. £305, in the patron. of the Marquis of Bute. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is ancient, small, singularly plain, and has no steeple. There are, besides the parish church, three handsome new churches, and a fourth, dedicated to St. Fagan, which is now a perpet. cur., val. £120, in the patron. of the Bishop of Llandaff. There are also places of worship for the Independents, Baptists, Unitarians, Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists. Dyffryn, in this parish is interesting as the birthplace and the residence of Owen (Jenan dda ab Davydd-ab-Owain), the poet and patron of bards, who lived about the middle of the 15th century. It is also the birthplace of Edward Evan, the Congregational minister, distinguished both as poet and divine, who exerted himself so zealously for the preservation of the bardic institutions in his country. He died in the year 1798. This parish was the scene of a fierce contest, in the reign of William Rufus, between the forces of the British and the Normans; the latter being led by Fitzhamon, who defeated Jestyn, and divided his territories between himself and his followers.

ABERDARGIE, a vil. in the par. of Abernethy, in Perthshire, Scotland, 1 mile from Abernethy.

ABERDARON, a par. in the hund. of Commitmaen, in the co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, 14 miles S.W. of Pwllheli. It is situated, as its name indicates, at the mouth of the river Daron, at the extremity of the peninsula of Lleyn, and opposite to Bardsey Island. On this island a famous monastery once existed which used to attract a large number of pilgrims. Aberdaron was the usual place of embarkation for the island, and was much frequented by the pilgrims. On the highest ground a chapel was erected, Capel Vair, or "Chapel of Our Lady," in which it was customary to invoke the protection of the Virgin before passing over to the island. There was also another chapel at a little distance from the former, and near the shore, named Capel Anhaelog. These have both shared the destiny of the monastery to which they were related, and have fallen into decay. The church had anciently the privilege of sanctuary attached to it; and in 1115 Griffydd-ab-Rhys, prince of South Wales, took refuge within its precincts, from Griffydd-ab-Cynan, prince of North Wales, who desired to capture and give him up to Henry I. The isolated position of the village, and the want of roads, cut it off from communication with other towns. Good limestone is quarried, and a small quantity of lead ore is found, in the parish. A fair is held on the 10th June. The living, which is in the dioc. of Bangor, and in the patron. of the bishop, is a rect. and vic.; val., with Llanfaelrhys, £120. The church, which was formerly collegiate, had privilege of sanctuary, and was dedicated to St. Hyrwyn, the tutelary saint of Bardsey Island. The Independents, and the Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists, have chapels in the village. Beneath the hill on which the chapel of Our Lady stood, was the cave of Ogo Vair, and in the cave was a kind of wishing well. The devout visitor had to carry a mouthful of its water up a difficult and dangerous way to the top of the hill.

ABERDAUGLEDDAN, Pembrokeshire. See MILFORD HAVEN.

ABERDEEN, a city, the capital of the co. of Aberdeen, in the N. of Scotland, 110 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh by road, and 130 by rail, through Perth, or 112¾ through Broughty Ferry. Being 526 miles from London by the Great Northern, and 542¾ by the North Western railway. It is a royal and parliamentary borough, and takes rank as fourth among the cities of North Britain. It is situated on the north bank of the river Dee, near its mouth, and about 1¼ mile from the mouth of the Don. The approach to it by sea lies along a bleak sandy coast, with low rocks and reefs, so that the impression produced upon a stranger of the magnificence of the city is heightened as he rounds the point of sudden ingress. The ancient form of its name is Abredon, Aberdon, or Aberdoen, signifying the "confluence of the Don and the Dee," more properly applicable to Old-Aberdeen, whence the inhabitants still bear the title of Aberdonians. The earliest mention of the locality occurs in the writings of Ptolemy, who speaks of a town existing here which he calls Devana. There is an ancient tradition which affirms that municipal privileges were conferred on the town as early as the 9th century, by King Gregory. But this is unquestionably apocryphal

The earliest historical fact in relation to the town is, that it was made a royal burgh in the year 1179, in the reign of William the Lion; it is therefore one of the oldest boroughs in Scotland. During the early part of the following century, Alexander II. built a palace, and occasionally resided here, as did also Alexander III. Both these sovereigns conferred various privileges on the town, and, amongst others, the right of holding fairs on Sundays. In 1244 it was burnt down, with seven other towns in Scotland the same year. Its inhabitants were in that age, and have always been, distinguished for their bravery. The town was defended by gates and a castle. After the death of Alexander III in 1268, English troops kept possession of the castle for Edward I., and Wallace failed in his attempt to reduce the place. After the betrayal and execution of the patriot warrior, one of his "quarters" was exposed to view here. In 1308 the citizens bravely and zealously aided Robert Bruce, defeating the forces of the English in battle, and afterwards driving the garrison out of the town. The present privileges of the borough are founded upon a charter granted by Robert Bruce in 1319, in acknowledgment and requital for the important services he had received from the citizens. The trade of the town was extensive in the 14th century, and was carried on, not only with England, but with Holland, Flanders, Brabant, and Norway. It exported at that time dried fish, salmon, corn, and bacon. Indeed, there is evidence of its being known in Norway as a commercial town in the latter half of the 13th century. In the 14th century a curiously mixed dialect was spoken; the presence of a French element is indicated by the present civic motto, "Bon Accord," which was given by Bruce in honour of the citizens who in one night completely destroyed the English garrison. In 1336, when Edward III. ravaged the north of Scotland, and laid waste the district of Mar, he burnt Aberdeen, and put many of its inhabitants to the sword. The Aberdonians, headed by Provost Davidson, greatly distinguished themselves by their courage and impetuosity at the battle of Harlaw, where Donald of the Isles was defeated. The town must at that period have been known to be wealthy, as it was selected, with three other burghs, to be security to England for the ransom of King James I. A royal mint was established and maintained here during the reigns of James I., James II., and James III. The lane in which it stood is still called Exchequer Row. Most of the Scottish monarchs, from Bruce to James VI., visited the town, or resided in it. James II. visited it in 1448. James IV. was frequently there. Margaret, queen of James IV., and daughter of Henry VII., was in the town once; and James V. also. The visit of Queen Margaret was commemorated in a poem by William Dunbar. When the English, under the Duke of Somerset invaded Scotland in 1547, the Aberdonians took a conspicuous part in the decisive battle of Pinkey, at which they had a cannon called the "great falcone." It is said that an unusually good feeling existed between the clergy and the people of Aberdeen for a long time previous to the Reformation, and that consequently the new faith did not at first make rapid progress there. Bishops Elphinstone and Dunbar, among the churchmen of the age, are spoken of as men of great worth and public spirit. The introduction and establishment of plays, especially of pieces, with dramatic performances similar to that known by the title of the Abbot of Unreason, were encouraged and encouraged by both clergy and civil magistrates. The town became notorious for its gaudiness; its fondness for them was particularly exhibited at baptisms; indeed, to so unreasonable a degree, that a statute law was passed to lay restraint upon the practices of the "gossips" on such occasions. At the time of the Reformation, the magistrates succeeded in restraining violence, and saved the ecclesiastical buildings from destruction, and their valuable treasures from spoliation. An interesting and curious list of these valuables has been preserved. In 1562, Queen Mary visited the city, on which occasion she was regaled, it is said, to witness from a window the execution of Sir John Gordon, who suffered death by the "maiden." James VI. was a frequent visitor of the city. In the year 1638, when the famous Covenant was adopted, the Aberdonians refused to join in taking it; for which refusal Charles I. gave them his thanks, and conferred fresh privileges on their city. In 1647 the plague broke out and raged in the city, famine accompanied the pestilence, and the number of deaths in one year was 1,600. There had been previous visitations of the plague in 1514 and 1546.—It was not till the year 1622 that a printing-press was established at Aberdeen. The first printer was Edward Raban. In 1625 he printed here the first almanacks published in Scotland, bearing the title, "A Prognostication for this Year of our Redemption 1625," &c. As the monopoly of almanack printing was secured for many years to Aberdeen, the name "Aberdeen Almanacks" became established, and is still retained and applied to those which are hawked about the streets in Scotland, although they are printed elsewhere. The Aberdeen Journal was the first newspaper published in Scotland. It appeared on the 5th January, 1748. This journal is still published. During the 17th century witchcraft was supposed to prevail, and many wretched victims suffered death on account of it. In the years 1596 and 1597, not less than twenty-three old women were burnt to death at the Castle Hill for witchcraft. The dean of the guild was presented by the city with a sum of money for "his extraordinarie takin' pains" in the matter. In the year 1644 the city was taken, and given up to pillage by Montrose, the greater number of the inhabitants being at that time Covenanters, and very many were put to the sword. A regular post between Aberdeen and Edinburgh was established in 1667, the journey being performed three times a week. The postage was at the rate of two shillings per letter, and four shillings for a double one. In 1715, the Chevalier de St. George was proclaimed at Aberdeen, and a contribution of £2,000 was demanded of the citizens by the Earl of Mar. In December of that year the Pretender himself passed through the town, but without winning the support of many of the townsmen. The town was occupied in 1745 by Lord Lewis Gordon, as Lord-Lieutenant for Prince Charles. It was evacuated in February, 1746, on the approach of the Duke of Cumberland. At the commencement of the present century, heavy expenses were incurred in carrying out improvements in the town, the harbour, and the roads, in consequence of which the burgh was declared insolvent in 1817. Trustees were immediately appointed, who, by their prudent plans and skilful management, in the course of a few years succeeded in clearing off the debts, and setting the town again free for progress.—Aberdeen returns one member to parliament, both for the Old and New towns; which, though included within the limits of one parliamentary borough, are perfectly distinct towns, about a mile from each other, with distinct charters and privileges; they will therefore require to be described separately. The borough of New Aberdeen is governed by a provost, four bailies, fifteen councillors, &c.—The educational institutions of Aberdeen are numerous and important. A grammar school existed here as early as the year 1418; and what is perhaps more singular, a music school was established before 1745. These facts are certainly significant of a comparatively high degree of prosperity and intelligence. Aberdeen had formerly two universities, Marischal College and University in Aberdeen, and King's College and University in Old Aberdeen, but they were united in 1858. Marischal College, which is situated in Broad-street, was founded by George Keith, Earl Marischal, in 1593. It was erected on the former site of a monastery and church of the Grey Friars, or Franciscans. The buildings, which are of granite, were entirely rebuilt in a classic and elegant style in 1840, and towards the west form three sides of a square, in the centre of which has lately been erected a statue to the late Sir James McGregor. There is a museum and an observatory in the central tower of the college. The hall is adorned with paintings, some of which are portraits by Jamieson. Marischal College was united with King's College in Old

Aberdeen by Charles I. in 1641, and this union was confirmed by Cromwell in 1654. The united colleges received the designation of the "Caroline University." The union, however, terminated in 1661, but was again revived in 1858, at the recommendation of the Royal Commissioners, so that the two colleges form now the University of Aberdeen, with one staff of officers and professors, the buildings in the Old Town being devoted chiefly to the medical school. The students are at liberty to choose their place of residence. The dress of the students at both Colleges is a red gown. Many distinguished men have been connected with this university, among whom are Bishop Burnet, Dr. Arbuthnot, Dr. Beattie, Dr. Campbell, and Dr. Reid. In addition to its university, Aberdeen has two grammar schools —one in the old and one in the new town—above forty day schools, besides Sunday and evening schools, and one of Dr. Bell's, endowed by him.—Gordon's Hospital, an institution for the maintenance and education of sons and grandsons of decayed burgesses, was founded in 1733 by Gordon of Straloch, a noted miser. The building stands on the site of a Dominican monastery. It was greatly enlarged and extended some years since, by the liberality of Alexander Simpson, Esq. Its revenue at present is very large. The period of maintenance is five years, and no boy is permitted to stay in the hospital after he is sixteen years of age. On leaving, the pupils are usually apprenticed in Aberdeen, and become entitled, on certain conditions, to a gratuity from the institution at the end of the first year of the apprenticeship, and to another at the end of the complete term. There are several other charitable institutions for the benefit of poor and orphan children, and for the sick. The infirmary, which is situated near the centre of the town, was established in 1742. There is a lunatic asylum, which was built by subscription, and also a private asylum; a dispensary, and a vaccine institution. Juvenile vagrancy and crime have been diminished by means of industrial schools, elsewhere called ragged schools, which were first devised by Sheriff Watson in this town some twenty years ago.—Aberdeen has made during the last half century great advance in wealth, and this has been followed and exhibited by great improvements in the general appearance both of the surrounding country, which is by nature extremely bleak, and of the city itself. The best view is obtained from Stocket Hill, on the north-west side of the city. The streets have been made broader and finer; a higher style appears in the public buildings; the harbour has been deepened and made more easily accessible; docks and quays of great extent have been constructed. All the public buildings of the city, and most of the private ones, are of granite, obtained from quarries in the neighbourhood. It is very hard, and shines when chiselled. The approach to Aberdeen from the south is by the two bridges across the Dee. The old bridge, which is of stone, and has seven arches, was erected by Bishop Dunbar, in 1530. It was rebuilt in 1718, and doubled in width about 1841. It is a fine structure, of seven arches. At the north end there was formerly a chapel in which travellers could pause on their way for purposes of devotion. In 1640 this bridge was the scene of a fierce conflict between the Cavaliers and the Covenanters, called the "battle of the Brig o' Dee." The new suspension bridge at the Craig Lug was erected in 1829, and is a very splendid structure of 140 feet in span. From these bridges the entrance to the town is by Union-street, one of the handsomest streets in the kingdom, and built almost entirely since 1814. It is about 70 feet broad, and a mile in length. A ravine, in which runs the rivulet Denburn, intersects Union-street, and is crossed by a noble bridge of one arch, which has a span of 132 feet, with a rise of 50 feet. It has been pronounced by some to be superior to the famous Rialto at Venice. Union-street leads to Castle-square, the most important part of the town. The name is derived from the fact that Cromwell erected a fort on this spot. Here are situated the beautiful market cross, a colossal granite statue to the last Duke of Gordon, the Athenæum, the court houses, town house, and other public buildings. The market cross is an object of great admiration. It is an octagonal structure, and has a column proceeding from its centre, with a unicorn bearing a shield. In the cornice round the upper part there are twelve compartments, with portraits in relief of Scottish monarchs. This cross was once adjudged a nuisance by the civic magistrates, and actually removed from the square; but, in 1842, it was rebuilt where it now stands, with a basement, and other improvements. About thirty feet in front of the cross is a colossal statue to the late Duke of Gordon, hewn out of a single stone. The town house was erected in 1730; it has a remarkably elegant spire of 120 feet in height. There is the new court house, and in connection with it a prison, the best, it is said, north of Edinburgh. The old name for the prison is "Mids o' Mar." which is of similar meaning to the "Heart of Mid-Lothian." The county buildings, which were erected in 1820 at the cost of £11,500, are of fine granite, and are splendidly decorated within. They are used for the assemblies and meetings of the gentry. A large music-hall has recently been added, in which the British Association met in 1859, under the presidency of the late lamented Prince Consort. To the west of the town is the Bridewell, or West-prison, a castellated structure, built in 1809. It is adapted to the solitary system, and contains 109 cells.—There are in Aberdeen twelve churches belonging to the Establishment. The church of St. Nicholas, the patron saint of the town, was the original parish church. It was an old Gothic edifice, but was reconstructed about 1750. It is now called West Church, and is a plain structure in the Italian style, containing an effigy of Provost Davidson, who was the leader of the Aberdonians at the battle of Harlaw, and fell there in 1411; adjoining this church to the east is the new East Church, a masterly and much-admired Gothic building, erected about 1838, in place of the old Gothic structure which formerly stood there. The churchyard, of 2 acres, which surrounds it, is separated from the street by a very beautiful Ionic façade. A division of the parish was made in 1828, and, at the same time, a new arrangement of the places of worship to suit the new parishes. Several new churches have been erected—North Church, in King-street, and the South Church, in Belmont-street. The former of these is an elegant structure, in the Grecian style, with a circular granite tower 130 feet in height. The latter has four ornamented buttresses, with pinnacles rising to the height of 110 feet. Greyfriars Church stands in a court adjacent to Marischal College, and St. Clement's is at Footdee. There are seventeen places of worship belonging to the Free Church—three of which, the South, East, and West, are built in juxtaposition, with an elegant spire rising between them, on the banks of the Denburn, and form a very conspicuous object in the town. There are fifteen other places of worship, belonging to the United Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, Roman Catholics, and Episcopalians. The Episcopalian church dedicated to St. Andrew stands in King-street. It is a handsome Gothic structure, built in 1817. A Roman Catholic cathedral has lately been erected in Huntley-st., in the Gothic style. The episcopal see of Aberdeen was transferred thither from Mortlach by David I., in 1154. Aberdeen is the seat of a presbytery, and a synod. The synod includes the several presbyteries of Aberdeen, Alford, Deer, Ellon, Fordyce, Garioch, Kincardine O'Neil, and Turriff.—The trade of Aberdeen is considerable, and its manufactures are various and important. Towards the end of the 16th century, a Fleming settled here, permission being given him to do so on condition that he taught his art, the manufacture of grograms, worsted, and stamings, to an apprentice of the town. The woollen manufacture was important in the 17th century. The principal articles made were stockings, mits, and woollen plaiden. Since the introduction of machinery great changes have been effected. The linen manufacture was introduced in 1749, and at present employs about 5,000 hands, while cotton and wool afford occupation for about the same number. There are several paper-mills, which give employment to about 400 hands. There are also iron foundries, at three of which the heaviest anchor work is done. Chain-making is carried on in two foundries, and boiler-making in several others. Ship-building is extensive—ten vessels of aggregately 5,678 tons having been built in 1852. There are eight rope-making works, which are on a large scale, and several smaller works. The manufacture of combs was commenced in 1788, and has been carried on on an enlarged scale and by means of steam since 1830. Among the lesser miscellaneous manufactures and industrial processes may be named, the making of quill pens, tanning, distilleries, and breweries.—The fisheries form a very important part of the industrial occupations of Aberdeen. They consist of three main branches, the whale, the salmon, and the herring fisheries. Whale fishing was commenced in 1753. In 1820, there were fifteen vessels engaged in it, and in 1823 they brought home 1,841 tons of oil, the largest quantity ever obtained in one season. From various causes the fishery has declined, and in 1845 only two vessels were engaged in it. The salmon fishery has been generally successful. About 200 men are engaged in it, and the average number of fish taken in a season is 20,000. The rents of the Dee fishings form a very large item in the revenue of the city, amounting to about £8,000 a year. Great part of the salmon are packed in ice and shipped for London. Ice packing was introduced about forty years ago. The herring fishery is of more recent growth, but is increasing. The number of boats employed in it in 1844 was sixty.—The Aberdeen Banking Company was established in 1766, the Town and County Bank in 1826, and the North of Scotland Banking Company in 1836. Besides these establishments, which transact business on a large scale, there are several branch banks. There is a Savings' Bank conducted according to a plan formed by the Rev. Dr. Duncan in 1815, the advantages of which are considered so great, that no savings' bank on the national plan has ever been introduced.—The port of Aberdeen has a geographical position very advantageous for trade with Northern Europe. It was originally a mere shallow channel near the side of the basin through which the Dee passed to the ocean; the entrance to it was impeded by a bar. By successive endeavours, and at very heavy expense, principally by the skill of Mr. Smeaton (1770), and of Mr. Telford (1810), very great improvements have been effected, and Aberdeen is now one of the most commodious harbours in Scotland. On the north side of the entrance a stone pier has been erected, extending 1,200 feet into the sea. A breakwater, of 800 feet in length, stretches out from the opposite side. The cost of these works was £140,000, and £500,000 has been expended since in extending them. All round the harbour are magnificent quays, and a spacious wet dock has been formed of a reach of the river. The area of the harbour contains thirty-four acres, an extent greater than that of any other single dock. In 1807 the canal was opened which connected the port with the river Don at Inverury, fifteen miles distant. The cost of this canal was £44,000. It is now superseded by the Great North of Scotland railway, which passes along part of its course. There is a light on the north pier, to direct vessels entering the harbour, and two leading lights to the south of the harbour. The number of vessels belonging to the port was, in 1861, 270, their total burden, 78,696 tons. The receipts of the port for the same year £93,300. The Scottish North-Eastern, the Deeside, and the Great North of Scotland railways furnish communication with other towns, and regular communication is kept up, by steam, with London, Leith, Inverness, Hull, Newcastle, &c. Besides the coasting trade, which is considerable, Aberdeen has an extensive foreign commerce, chiefly carried on with North America, the East and West Indies, the Mediterranean, the Baltic, and the port of Archangel. Its principal exports are granite, oats, beer, salmon, eggs, woollen and cotton goods, cattle, horses, &c. Its chief imports are coal, lime, cotton, flax, iron, salt, hides, wheat, &c. The police arrangements of the city are similar to those of Edinburgh. It is well supplied with gas. Water is supplied from the Dee.—There is a Mechanics' Institution, which was established in 1824. Besides the libraries of the University, the School of Divinity, the Medical Society, the Society of Advocates, and the Mechanics' Institution, there are several subscription libraries, chiefly consisting of light literature. —A weekly market for meal is held on Thursday. On Friday, a market for meat and provisions. There is a daily fish-market. A fair is held for timber, on the last Wednesday in August. A feeing-market, for hiring servants, is held on the second Friday in May and November. Fairs for the sale of horses and cattle are held in the neighbourhood of the town at short intervals: at the Bridge of Don on the first Tuesday of each month; at Mannofield on the second Monday of every month; at Ruthriestone on the third Monday, and at Old Aberdeen on the last Thursday of April, and the first Wednesday of November.—Amongst the eminent men, natives of Aberdeen, must be named John Barbour, born in 1330, author of "The Bruce," a metrical history of Robert Bruce; George Jamieson, the portrait painter, born in 1586; he studied under Rubens, and painted above a hundred portraits of distinguished persons in his time, many of which are still preserved in the collections of the nobility; James Gregory, born in 1638, the inventor of the reflecting telescope, afterwards Professor of Mathematics at Edinburgh; and David Anderson, a mechanical genius, who obtained the title of "Davie do a' thing." He removed a rock from the middle of the entrance to the harbour. Amongst the distinguished men connected with the city, though not by birth, are Dr. Robert Hamilton, Professor of Mathematics; author of the "Treatise on the National Debt," &c., Dr. Patrick Copland, Professor of Natural Philosophy; Drs. Thomas Reid, James Beattie, George Campbell, and John Abercrombie. Sir James Mackintosh and Robert Hall were students of King's College. Lord Byron once lived in Broad-street.—Aberdeen gives the title of earl to a branch of the Gordon family, royalists of the 17th century. According to the census of 1861, there were 5,901 inhabited houses within the borough, occupied by 18,784 separate families, consisting of 73,794 individuals, of whom 12,222 were children attending school between the ages of five and fifteen.

ABERDEEN, OLD, a small town, the capital of the par. called Old Machar, in Aberdeenshire, Scotland; 1 mile north of the city of Aberdeen. Its ancient name is Aberdon, or Aberdon. It is situated on the south bank of the river Don, from which the ground rises in a gentle slope, commanding a prospect of great beauty and variety over the windings of the Dee and the Don, woods and gentlemen's seats, factories, and villages. But the town itself is decayed and dull, deriving importance chiefly from its college and a few manufactures. There are seven incorporated crafts, but no guildry. It was once the seat of a bishopric. The see was transferred in 1137 from Mortlach, in the county of Banff, to Old Aberdeen, which was at the same time made a burgh of barony by David I., who granted "the hail village to God and the Blessed Mary, St. Machar, and Bishop Nectarius." On the abolition of episcopacy, the right of nominating the magistrates fell to the crown. Its charter of incorporation was renewed by George I. in 1723, who, by warrant of privy council, authorised the magistrates to elect their successors in office in future. Previous to the Municipal Act, it was governed by a provost, three bailies, treasurer, and council, &c. It possesses the magnificent edifice of King's College, and a great portion of the ancient cathedral. King's College was founded in 1494 at the instance of Bishop Elphinstone, and by virtue of a bull of Alexander VI issued at the request of James IV. The king's letter to the Pope, suggesting the foundation of this university, describes the inhabitants of the north as almost uncivilised; deplores the want of fit persons to preach and administer the sacraments; and speaks of the mountains, and the rivers, and the distances, as insuperable hindrances in the way of young men availing themselves of the advantages of the universities then existing, viz. those of St. Andrew's and Glasgow. The bull, in response, acknowledges that a third university would do no harm, as science is not diminished but increased by diffusion. The constitution of the new university was formed after that of the university of Paris, and included the faculties of theology, canon and civil law, medicine, and the liberal arts. It was largely endowed both by the king and the bishop. The latter gave to the college twenty-four acres of land, and at his death, which took place in 1514, bequeathed to it £10,000 Scots. The first principal was Hector Boece, or Boethius, the historian and biographer. A new charter was granted by parliament in 1578. After the Reformation the college was subjected to spoliation, and was seriously injured; but, through the exertions of Bishop Forbes, was restored to its original condition. It was again a sufferer in the confusions and conflicts of the 17th century. Part of its revenues having been alienated, it received, prior to the union with Marischal College in 1858, a grant from the Crown. The college buildings stand apart from the town. They are in the form of a quadrangle, with a court in the centre. The architecture is in the pointed style. There is a chapel at the north-west corner, with a lofty square tower, surmounted by the imperial crown and a cross. From the earliest times, young men, from the most remote parts of the Highlands and Hebrides, have been in the habit of flocking to the University, every autumn, after the harvesting was over, and before steamers and coaches were known. They had to travel on foot, and many of them depended for their subsistence afterwards on obtaining one or other of the numerous bursaries, which were competed for at the opening of each winter's session. The library of the college contained from 30,000 to 40,000 volumes. — The cathedral was founded in 1154, and entirely rebuilt in 1357 by Bishop Alexander Kinninmouth. It was eighty years in building, and was nearly destroyed by the fury of the mob in the time of the Reformation. The nave is now used as the parish church, and was entirely repaired in 1832. The western end is fine, being flanked by two pointed steeples. The ceiling is of oak, and is in forty-eight compartments, containing the armorial bearings of eminent persons, whose names are given in the Latin language, but in the old Gothic character. The arrangement of these is in three columns,—one of kings, the second of churchmen, and the third of laymen. There are also some fine monuments and tombs, but no remains of the bishop's palace.—Mar's Castle is a curious object, and several streets and closes in Old Aberdeen attract attention from their ancient appearance. But perhaps the object of greatest interest and curiosity in Old Aberdeen, is the old bridge over the Don. It consists of one spacious arch from rock to rock, pointed at top like a Gothic window, and is the only one of the kind in Great Britain. The span of the arch is 72 feet, and its height 34½ feet. Its ancient name was Polgown; its present name, Balgownie. It was erected in the days of Bruce, and, as some believe, by Bruce himself. It had, like the Brig of Dee, a small chapel with an endowment. It is a structure of great solidity and strength. A new bridge of five arches has been erected, out of a fund established by Sir Alexander Hay in the reign of James VI. for the support of the old bridge, amounting at first to £2 5s. 8*d.*, and which had at last grown to the large sum of £200,000. This bridge is of granite, and is very handsome and convenient, being 500 feet in length. There are a Trades' Hospital, founded in the year 1532 by Bishop Forbes or Bishop Dunbar, for the support of twelve poor men, and a hospital for aged women. The town has one of Dr. Bell's schools.—The market is on Thursday. A cattle fair is held on the last Thursday of April, and the Wednesday after the third Tuesday of October, old style.

ABERDEENSHIRE, a co. on the eastern coast of Scotland; bounded on the N. and E. by the German Ocean; on the S. by the principal chain of the Grampian Hills, which separate it from the counties of Perth, Forfar, and Kincardine; and on the W. by the counties of Banff and Inverness. It lies between the parallels 56° 52′ and 57° 42′ N. latitude, and between 1° 49′ and 3° 48′ W. longitude. Its greatest length, which is in the direction from N.W. to S.E., is about 85 miles; its greatest breadth, in a direction at right angles to its length, is about 40 miles. The length of its coast-line is 60 miles. The area of the county is about 1,980 square miles, which is equal to a million and a half acres. Not more than one-third of it is under cultivation; the remaining two-thirds consisting of mountain or moss. It was formerly divided into five districts, the names of which were as follows: Mar, Formartin, Buchan, Garioch, and Strathbogie. Mar was again subdivided into three districts, distinguished by the names, Braemar, Midmar, and Cromar. These districts have no longer any political or administrative importance. The present divisions of the county are the following:—In the S.E., Aberdeen (answering to the old Cromar); S.W., Kincardine O'Neil (Mid- and Brae-mar); W., Alford (Mar and Strathbogie); middle, Garioch; and E., Ellon (Formartin); N., Deer (Buchan); N.W., Turriff (Formartin and Buchan); and W., Strathbogie. In respect to size, Aberdeenshire holds the fifth rank among the counties of Scotland; in respect to population, the third.—Its coast-line is regular. From the mouth of the Dee, which separates the county in the south from Kincardineshire, to the headland named Buchan Ness, it inclines to the north-east. From Buchan Ness to Fraserburgh it has a north-western inclination. And from Fraserburgh to the mouth of the Banff stream its direction is westward. Buchan Ness is one of the easternmost points on the Scottish coast. A lighthouse of granite, of the unusual height of 118 feet, has been erected on this headland. From the Dee to the Ythan the coast lies generally low. From the Ythan, northward, it rises, and at some points to the height of 200 feet, with great fissures in the rocks, and many caves, which in former days served the smuggler for hiding-places. The rocks along this part of the coast consist, for the most part, of lime-stone, black basalt, gneiss, mica slate, and red granite. North of Peterhead the coast becomes less precipitous; a range of clay hills appears, and then it becomes low and sandy, with occasional rocks. There is no important island on the coast.—The county is generally hilly, and in the south-western districts, mountainous. From the western extremity of the Grampians, a branch is given off in a north-easterly direction, which runs between Aberdeen and Banff; and from this, other branches spread themselves over the central parts of the county. The highest peaks in the principal chain bounding the county on the south, are—Cairn Taggart, whose elevation is 3,000 feet; Lochnagar, 3,815 feet; and Mount Kean, 3,126 feet. The loftiest peaks on the western chain are Cairn Toul, 4,220 feet; Breriach, of about the same elevation; and Ben Macdhui, 4,390 feet. The latter is believed, from recent measurements, to be about 20 feet higher than Ben Nevis, and therefore the loftiest mountain in Great Britain. On another branch are the peaks Bennabuird, 3,940 feet; and Morven, 2,934 feet. These mountain masses consist chiefly of granite. Their most common form is that of table-land, with precipitous sides. Only here and there is the conical form met with. In the country lying between the Don and the Dee are some rounded hills. Syenite is found, especially in the upper half of the valley of the Dee; also near the coast at Peterhead, and at some other points. The rock which prevails most in the county is mica slate. Trap rocks occur frequently in the inland parts, and some veins and dykes of trap near the coast.—The principal rivers of Aberdeenshire are the Dee, the Don, the Ythan, the Ugie, and the Dovern or Deveron; the first four having a course from west to east; the last, from south to north—all falling into the German Ocean. On the Dee are several fine falls or "linns," the principal of which is the Linn of Dee, at which there are four rapids, and the river rushes through a very narrow passage between the rocks. The length of the Dee is 96 miles. It receives several tributary streams on its course; its motion is rapid, the bed of the river between Aboyne and Aberdeen, a distance of 30 miles, having a fall of 10 feet per mile. It abounds in fine salmon. Balmoral, the favorite northern residence of Her Majesty, is situated on Dee side, 60 miles from Aberdeen, in the midst of wild and magnificent scenery. The Dee rises on the side of the mountain Breriach, at an elevation of 4,000 feet. The Don has its source in a peat moss, among the mountains on the western side of the county, at an altitude of 1,640 feet. In the upper part of its course it has many windings. Trout abound in it, and it used formerly to be frequented by salmon. These are now taken at the mouth of the river, by means of stake-nets. It is said that pearls were at one time found in this river, but they are not found now. The Ythan is a less rapid stream than the Dee and the Don. Its length is 37 miles. It is only navigable by small craft for a short distance above its mouth. It is well stocked with fish: trout, eels, and salmon. Occasionally seals have been observed in it. The pearl mussel is found. There is a tradition that the large pearl in the Scottish crown was found in the Ythan, or in one of its tributary streams. The Ugie is formed by the confluence of two streams, the north and south Ugie, and after a course of not more than 6 miles from the point of junction, it falls into the German Ocean near Peterhead. Its motion is very slow. Black or brown trout are very plentiful in it. The Dovern, or Deveron, takes its rise in Aberdeenshire, and flowing thence partly through Banffshire, partly through Aberdeenshire, and partly on the borders of these two counties, falls, after a course of 51 miles, into the German Ocean. It flows very rapidly, and for the greater part of its course, through a deep and narrow valley. The Bogie falls into it near Huntly. Aberdeenshire has no lakes of importance. On the Muick, a tributary of the Dee, there are two lochs, Dhuloch, or the "Black Lake," and Loch Muick. There are several others connected by small streams with the Dee; lochs Connor, Dawan, Drum, and Skene.—The Scottish North-Eastern railway connects the city with the principal towns in the south, passing along the coast, and parallel with it, to Stonehaven; thence taking a more inland course to Arbroath, with branches to Montrose and Brechin; and from Arbroath, close along the coast to Dundee and Perth. The Great North of Scotland, and Aberdeen and Inverness Junction railways connect Aberdeen with the north; passing by Kintore, Inverury, and Turriff, to Keith; and from Keith, through Elgin, to Inverness. There are branch lines to Alford and Old Meldrum. Another line has been opened along the valley of the Dee, from Aberdeen to Aboyne, a distance of 32 miles. The principal roads in the county are the following: from Edinburgh, passing through Montrose to Aberdeen, and thence to Peterhead; from Aberdeen to Banff; from Aberdeen to Elgin and Inverness; to Castletown in the Grampians; and from Peterhead to Banff.—The climate is cold; yet it is less liable to extreme cold than other districts lying further south and inland. The soil is of very various character. Two-thirds of the whole surface of the county consist of mountain or moss. In the highlands, about the source of the Dee, the soil is loamy, resting generally on clay or gravel. In this district are 10,000 acres of forest. The principal native timbers consist of birch, poplar, alder, and the mountain ash. Larch and Scotch firs have been extensively planted. In the forest of Mar is produced the largest and best fir timber in Great Britain. Red deer and roes abound here. In the valley of the Don the soil is generally loam, on a gravelly substratum. There are peat-mosses on many hill-tops. Lime is the usual manure in this district, and each farm has its own limekiln. Between the Don and the Ythan there is more arable and cultivated land than in the former districts. About 250,000 acres of land throughout the county are annually under crop, but the cultivation of wheat is seldom attempted, and little hay is made. Much progress has been made of late years in agriculture. Thorn hedges have been introduced, taking the place of the stone walls used previously. A better style of farm-house has been adopted. The breed of sheep is improved, and tenantry-at-will is now exchanged for leases of 19 to 21 years; but the tenant is frequently restricted in the management of his land to the five- and seven-course rotations, although the six-course shift has been proved the best adapted to the soil. In the district extending along the coast south of Peterhead, there is but a small portion of waste land or of forest. About four-fifths of this district are under cultivation. Since the facilities of conveyance to the London market have been increased, the cultivation of turnips for fattening stock has been greatly extended. The breed of horses and cattle is improved. Farmhouses and roads have shared in the general progress. The heritors are for the most part resident on their estates; and the efforts of the Highland Society have given a useful stimulus to agriculture. Aberdeenshire contains one city, Aberdeen, the capital of the North of Scotland, and a royal and parliamentary borough; three other royal and parliamentary boroughs, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead; and six boroughs of barony, namely, Charlestown, Fraserburgh, Huntly, Old Meldrum, Rosehearty, and Turriff. The county returns one member to parliament, and the population, according to the census of 1861, is 221,380, against 212,032 in 1851, showing an increase of 9,348 in the decennial period, and no less than 100,315 over the census of 1801, so that the population has nearly doubled since the commencement of the present century. It is governed by a Lord-Lieutenant and about seventy deputies, with a sheriff and his substitute. It is included in the Synod of Aberdeen, which comprises also parts of the counties of Banff and Kincardine. The number of parishes is 88, besides 14 quoad sacra parishes. The Free Kirk numbers 70 congregations in the county. There are several congregations of other Dissenters and Roman Catholics, and a large number of Episcopalians. Schools are numerous. Aberdeen has a county gaol and a Bridewell; small burgh prisons, which are not much used at present, exist at Old Aberdeen, Old Meldrum, Inverury, Kintore, Peterhead, and Fraserburgh. Peterhead has also a newly erected prison, and a sheriff's court.—Aberdeenshire has been long noted for its woollen manufactures, particularly the knitting of stockings and hose, in which numbers of the common people have for centuries been employed; and which, till lately, were exported in large quantities to Germany. The manufactures, which are principally carried on at Aberdeen, Peterhead, and Huntly, are those of flax, linen, cotton, stockings, woollens, worsted, tweeds, rope, twine, lint, combs, carpets, and paper. There are also a great number of blacksmiths, iron-founders, masons, quarriers, millwrights, and cabinet-makers, who supply not only the surrounding agricultural population with the necessaries and luxuries of life, but export largely.—The county can boast many interesting remains of ancient times: its cairns, Druidical stones, and Picts' houses. There is a Roman road in Braemar, the ancient Tamia, which led from Perth to Burghead; another led, by way of Ituria, Mons Grampius, and Gordon Castle, to the same place. In Chapel of Garioch parish is a remarkable stone, 10 feet high, 3 feet broad, and 1 foot in thickness, marked with hieroglyphic characters, which is supposed to be of Danish origin. It is said that this stone extends to the depth of 6 feet below the surface. At Aboyne are the remains of a Picts' house, a circle of stones laid without cement, 83 feet in diameter, on the summit of a hill. By means of dykes, this circle is connected with others at a distance. The series of circles, and their connecting dykes, may be traced for 50 miles near the Dee. In the 14th century a battle was fought between Robert Bruce and Comyn, Earl of Buchan, at or near Barra Hill, in this county, in which Comyn was defeated. In 1411, Donald of the Isles was defeated by Mar, at the battle of Harlaw, in Chapel of Garioch parish. In 1644 an engagement took place between the Royalists, under Montrose, and the Covenanters, under Burley, near Aberdeen, in which the Covenanters were worsted. Aberdeen was occupied by General Monk, in the year 1651. It was at Peterhead that the Pretender landed in 1715, when Mar set up his standard in Braemar. At the rising of '45, Lord Lewis Gordon and the troops of the Pretender occupied Aberdeen and the royal forces suffered defeat at Inverury. Ruins of many feudal castles still exist in Aberdeenshire. On the northern coast is Dundargue, situated on a rock, which rises 60 feet above the sea, and is connected by a narrow ridge of rock with the mainland. On the same coast, near Banff, is Ken Edgar Castle, the old residence of the Comyns. Pitsligo and Pittulie Castles are near Fraserburgh. On the eastern coast stands Slains Castle, the seat of the Earls of Errol. It was destroyed, in 1594, by order of James VI., but has been rebuilt. On the Ythan was Fyvie Castle, a very fine Gothic structure. Many others might be mentioned. The monastic remains are not numerous. There was a Cistercian abbey near the village of Old Deer; and a priory of the Tyronenses, in Fyvie, which is said to have been founded in the 12th century, by Fergus, Earl of Buchan. The principal seats in the county are the following: Haddo House (the Earl of Aberdeen); Aboyne Castle (the Marquis of Huntley); Slains Castle (the Earl of Errol); Keith-hall House (the Earl of Kintore); Mar Lodge (the Earl of Fife); Philorth House (Lord Saltoun); Castle Forbes (Lord Forbes); Strichen (Lord Lovat); Monymusk (Grant, Bart.); Fintray, Crimonmogate, Scotstown, Pitsligo, Edinglassie, Rannes, Logie Elphinstone, Fyvie, &c., &c.

ABERDINAS CREEK, on the north coast of Pembroke, South Wales, not far from Dinas Head, an anchorage for small craft.

ABERDOUR, a par. in the district of Buchan, in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 6 miles W. of Fraserburgh. It is situated at the mouth of the river Dour, and extends for 6½ miles along the coast of the Moray Frith, which is here very rugged and broken, having not more than three points at which landing is possible. There are many caves, one of which, called the Cow's Haven cave, is of considerable size, being 90 feet in length and 22 in breadth. On a promontory stand the ruins of Dundargue Castle, formerly a seat of the Earls of Buchan. Here King David Bruce was once confined and besieged by the Regent Murray. The parish contains the villages of Aberdour New, and Pennan. It is chiefly a moorland district. There are two millstone quarries. Fishing forms the principal occupation of the people. The living is in the presb. of Deer, val. £204, and in the patron. of Gordon of Aberdour House. The par. contains above 20 square miles.

ABERDOUR, a par. in the Dunfermline district, of Fifeshire, Scotland, 3 miles W. of Burntisland. Its name is Gaelic, and signifies the "mouth of Dour." It is a port and favourite bathing-place, situated on the Frith of Forth, at the ferry to Leith. It is near the Edinburgh and Northern railway, and the Cullelo hills. The living is in the presb. of Dunfermline, val. £208, and in the patron. of the Earl of Morton. The par. includes the vils. of Aberdour Easter and Aberdour Wester, New Town and Inchcolm Island. The district is less bleak and much more cultivated than it used to be. Coal and iron are obtained here, as are also lime and stone; and there are manufactures of muslin and coarse linen. The Earl of Morton, whose seat is Aberdour Castle, takes hence the title of Baron, and the popular one of "Carle" or "Gudeman of Aberdour." The nuns commonly called "Poor Clares," had a convent here; and there is still an hospital for four widows, founded by Anne, Countess of Moray. The small island of Inchcolm, upon which are the ruins of Inchcolm monastery, founded in the 12th century by Alexander I., belongs to this parish, and is held by the Morays.

ABERDOVEY, a vil. in the tnshp. of Cefnrhos, in Merionethshire, North Wales, 4 miles S.E. of Towyn. It is a bathing-place at the mouth of the river Dovey, which here falls into the bay of Cardigan, and is a subport to Aberystwith. The harbour is good, with a bar north of the entrance to it. The vessels belonging to it are engaged in the coasting trade. There is a ferry to Cardiganshire. The new road from Pennal to Powyn, constructed in 1827, passes through Aberdovey, that part of it which lies between Pennal and Aberdovey being cut through the solid rock. Here are some extensive slate quarries, and mines of copper and lead. Petty sessions for the hundred are held in the village. Ienan Dyvi, a bard of the 15th century, was born in this parish The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bangor, in the patron. of trustees.

ABERDULAIS, a hmlt. in the par. and union of Neath, in the co. of Glamorgan, 2 miles N.E. of Neath, at the confluence of the rivers Dulais and Neath. Here are considerable iron and tin works.

ABEREDW, a par. in the hund. of Colwyn, and union of Builth, in the co. of Radnor, South Wales, 3 miles S.E. of Builth. It is situated at the mouth of the Edwy, a small stream abounding in trout and eels which falls into the Wye. The surrounding scenery is highly picturesque: the ground generally rocky and uneven. The church, which is dedicated to St. Cewydd, stands on a precipitous rock overlooking the Edwy, which flows by in a deep and narrow channel between the rocks, which are partly bare, partly wooded. Llewellyn is said to have resorted to a small cave here during his last struggles with the English. He had a castle at the head of the dell, of which part of the tower and a wall still remain. The inhabitants of the town are said to have sent intelligence to the English of his place of retreat, which led to his being surprised and overpowered. For this they were called the "traitors of Aberedw." The living is a rect., with Llanvareth annexed, val. £355, in the dioc. of St. David's. The bishop is patron.

ABERERCH, a par. in the hund. of Dinlaen, union of Pwllheli, in the co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, 1 mile N.E. of Pwllheli. It lies pleasantly on the shore at the mouth of the river Erch, and the surrounding scenery is very agreeable. It has a large ancient church dedicated to St. Cwrda. The living is a perpet. cur. with the cur. of Penrhoss annexed, val. £96, in the patron of the Lord Chancellor. The Independents, and the Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists, have chapels in the parish.

ABER-ESCIR, or ABER-ESGAIR, Brecknockshire. See ABERYSCIR.

ABERFELDIE, a vil. in the pars. of Dull and Logierait, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 6 miles from Kenmore. It stands in the midst of the finest scenery on the river Tay, at the foot of the Grampians, near the falls of Moness. The "birks of Aberfeldy" are the theme of one of the most graceful songs of Burns. A bridge, built by General Wade, crosses the river here. The Marquis of Breadalbane has his seat here, and there are a few Druidical remains.

ABERFFRAW, a par. in the hund. of Malltraeth, in the co. of Anglesey, North Wales, 16 miles S.W. of Beaumaris. It is a station on the Holyhead railway. Bangor is the post town. The vil. is situated on the bay of Carnarvon, and the port is subordinate to Beaumaris. The par. includes 9 tythgs., and was formerly a market town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bangor, val. £888, in the patron. of the Prince of Wales. The church is dedicated to St. Beuno; its tower was destroyed many years ago. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists. Fairs are held on the 7th March, Tuesday after Palm Sunday, Wednesday after Trinity Sunday, the 15th August, the 23rd October, and the 11th December. At a very remote period, Aberffraw was the principal residence of the princes of North Wales. A palace was erected, it is said, as early as the middle of the 5th century. In the year 870 the seat of government was re-established here after it had been removed to Carnarvon by Roderic the Great; and here it was fixed till the death of Llewellyn in 1282. One of the three copies of the laws of Hywel Dha was deposited here. Here too was held the Eistedvodd, or triennial assembly of the bards of the district. No traces of the ancient palace exist, but at the south-eastern extremity of the village there is an enclosure still called Gardd-y-Llys, or the "palace garden." "Snake Gems," which are large beads of blue glass, and are supposed to be of Roman manufacture, are sometimes found near this village, and are even at the present time used superstitiously as charms.

ABERFOIL, a par. in the district of West Perth, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 15 miles N.W. of Stirling. It is situated in a valley, which is considered one of the loveliest and most picturesque in Scotland, 11 miles in length, and about 5 in breadth, forming a pass between the Highlands and Lowlands. The most striking feature of the scenery is the series of lakes and streams which water the valley. At its head is Loch Ard, and beyond this lake is seen the noble form of Ben Lomond. The other lakes in the series are Loch Chon and Loch Dhu, all of which abound with trout and pike. Near the Clachan, the two sources of the Forth unite, which here bears the name of Avon-dhu, or the black river, from the dark colour of its waters. The river Foyle also falls into it here, whence is taken the name of the parish. The scenery is wild and beautiful at the point where the Duchray joins the Forth. The rocks are principally granite, but there is also limestone, marble, and slate. Near the lakes the soil is mostly fertile; on many of the hills there are sheepwalks, and others are covered with forests of oak. The botanist finds some rare plants in this district. The scenery of this parish, which confines on Loch Katrine, has been immortalised by Sir Walter Scott, in his adventures of "Rob Roy," and his poem of the "Lady of the Lake." The Duke of Montrose is chief heritor, and the pat. of the living, which is included in the presb. of Dumblane, val. £158.

ABERFORD, a par. in the wap. of Lower Skyrack, in the West Riding of York, 5 miles S.W. of Tadcaster, and 16 miles S.W. of York. Milford Junction is the nearest post town. The town, which consists mainly of one long street, stands on the slope of a limestone rock, near the small river Cock, and not far from the York and North Midland railway. A handsome stone bridge crosses the river here. The par. includes the tnshps. of Parlington and Thornton. There are many villas and gentlemen's residences in the environs of the town, which are very pleasant and agreeable. Formerly it was a market town, and in Camden's time, it is said that a pin factory existed here. Coal is obtained in the parish, and there are some quarries of limestone. The church is an ancient one, and is dedicated to St. Richard. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £305, and is in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford. The vestiges of a Norman fortress may be seen about a mile north of the town. Near this fortress, which is called Castle Cary, the battle of Towton was fought in the year 1461. Fairs are held on the last Monday of April and May, on the first Monday of October, and the first Mondays after the 18th October and the 1st of November. They are principally for the sale of cattle and sheep.

ABERFORD, a hmlt. in the par. of Sherburn in the upper div. of the wap. of Barkstone Ash, union of Tadcaster, in the West Riding of York, 13 miles S.W. of York, and near the North Midland, and Hull and Selby railways. There are traces of an old Roman way.

ABERFORD, Yorkshire. See LOTHERTON-CUM-AMPLETON.

ABERGARW, a vil. in the par. of Llangeinor, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 8 miles N. of Bridgend.

ABERGAVENNY, a par. and market town in the hund. of Abergavenny, in the co. of Monmouth, 14 miles to the W. of Monmouth, and 143 miles from London, or 165¼ by the Great Western railway. It is situated in a range of pleasant meadow grounds at the confluence of the Usk and Gavenny. The mountains here rise abruptly near the town, and the scenery is very picturesque. One of the hills, called the Sugar Loaf, rises to the height of nearly 1,900 feet. Another lofty one is the Skirrid Vawr. The town itself is long and straggling, with narrow streets, and houses not regularly built, but the enlargement of the market-place, and the removal of some unsightly projections, has improved the general appearance of the place. An ancient bridge, of fifteen arches, plain yet noble in aspect, crosses the river Usk. There are some remains of a castle built by Hammelino de Baladun, or Balun, one of the followers of William the Conqueror, now held by the Neville family, and from which they take the title of Earl of Abergavenny. A priory of the Benedictine order was founded here soon after the Conquest, and of this there are still some slight vestiges. There are also traces of a Roman camp near the town, with a balneum, or sudatory; and many Roman coins and other remains have been discovered in the neighbourhood. The place is considered to have been the Roman Gobannium, a station so named from the river Gobannius (Gavenny). The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient and spacious building in the Norman style, and contains some curious and interesting old monuments of the Herberts, Hastings, Beauchamps, &c. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £510, in the patron. of Sir John Guest, Bart. The free grammar school was founded in 1543, having a fellowship and exhibitions at Jesus College, Oxford. National and British schools have been established in the town. Besides the ancient one, there is a district church, called Trinity Church, the living of which is a perpet. cur. in the patron. of Miss Rachel Herbert; and there are chapels belonging to the Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. The chief trade of Abergavenny is in wool; but from the abundant supply of coal and iron in the mountains, many works have been established in the surrounding district, among which are those of Blaenavon and Clydach; and the trade is greatly promoted by the facilities for transport afforded by the Monmouthshire and Brecon canal, which passes within half a mile of the town, and the Hereford railway. The town had anciently a charter of incorporation, but this became forfeited during the reign of William III. Abergavenny is the seat of a poor-law union, and the head of a county-court district. There is a town-hall, gas-works, a union poor-house, and a large hall, erected for the use of the Abergavenny Cymreigyddion Society. This society was established in the year 1832, for the purpose of promoting the study of Welsh literature and music, and for the encouragement of native industry and manufactures. Large numbers of persons from all parts of the principality assemble at the annual festival of this society, which is held in the month of October, in the great hall. It is said this hall is capable of holding 2,000 persons. Cantilupe, a bishop of the 13th century, and Baker, the Benedictine chronicler, were natives of Abergavenny. The market is held on Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on the 14th May, the Monday after Trinity, the 25th September, and the 19th November. Races take place annually in April.

ABERGAVENNY HUNDRED, in the northern part of Monmouthshire, is bounded on the N. by Herefordshire; on the E. by Skenfreth, Rayland, and Usk Hundreds; on the S. by Wentlooge Hundred; and on the W. by Wentlooge Hundred and the county of Brecknock. It is separated into the upper and lower divisions. The upper division, which comprises about 43,300 acres, includes the parishes of Aberystruth, Goytrey, Llanellan, Llanfoist, Llangattock-nigh-Usk, Mamhilad, Llanhileth, Llansaintfread, Llanover, Llanvair-Kilgidin, Llanvihangel-nigh-Usk, Trevethan with Pentypool, and part of Abergavenny, and of Llanwenarth. The lower division, which contains 32,990 acres, includes the parishes of Llangattock-Llingoed, Llanthewy-Rhytherch, Llanthewy-Skirrid, Llantillio-Pertholey, Llanvapley, Llanvetherine, Oldcastle, with part of Abergavenny, of Cwmyoy, of Llanarth, of Llanvihangel-Crucorney, and of Llanwenarth.

ABERGELDIE, a mansion on the banks of the Dee, in the pars. of Crathie and Glengairn, in the co. of Aberdeen, 6 miles from Ballater, and adjoining the royal park of Balmoral. The house is principally modern, with an old turreted, square tower, but the grounds are pre-eminently picturesque, and well sustain the ancient fame of the "birks of Abergeldie." This estate was purchased in 1848 by the late Duchess of Kent.

ABERGELE, a par. in the hund. of Isdulas, in the co. of Denbigh North Wales, 10 miles N.W. of Denbigh, and 213¾ miles from London, being a station on the Holyhead railway. Rhyl is the nearest post town. The town is situated in the valley through which the river Geley flows, which here falls into the Irish Sea. In the neighbourhood, the scenery is bold and picturesque, the mountains rising to a great height south of the town. It is believed that the sea has considerably encroached on this part of the coast. At some points there are sandy cliffs overhanging the sea, and at low water a wide tract of loam is exposed, in which oaks, nearly entire, have been found. The place has not a few historical associations. Before the Norman conquest was achieved, Harold the Saxon encountered Grufydd-ab-Llewellyn, Prince of North Wales, in the vicinity of the great rock Cevn Ogo. A bloody battle was fought, which terminated in the defeat of Harold. During the reign of William the Conqueror, the Welsh attacked Hugh Lupus in the pass of Cevn Ogo, which is very narrow, as he was on his way to invade and take possession of Anglesey. In the reign of Henry II., Owain Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, made a stand against the English on this ground and succeeded in repulsing them; and it was near this pass that Richard II., having been invited by Earl Percy to a friendly conference with Bolingbroke, while on his way was betrayed, and carried off as a prisoner to Flint Castle. Traces of an ancient camp are found on a limestone hill near the town, and bear the name of Castell Cawr. On another hill, at a little distance from the former, called Mount of the Watch-tower, are remains of an ancient British fort. Cevn Ogo is a limestone rock, about 2 miles W. of the town, in which there are several caves, one very large and magnificent. The entrance to this principal cave is by an arch 48 feet in height. The large chamber to which it leads is 30 feet high, and is said to extend an unknown distance into the rock. The sides and roof are rich in beautiful stalactites, and the floor is covered with stalagmites of a deep orange colour. A large quantity of limestone is obtained from the Llysfaen quarries, in the mountains south of the town, and shipped to Liverpool. There is a telegraph in communication with Liverpool on these mountains, at the height of above 700 feet. The church is very low and plain, but of great length, and has a lofty square tower. It is dedicated to St. Michael. The living is a vic., val. £400, in the dioc. of St. Asaph, and in the patron. of the bishop. The Independents, Baptists, Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. Petty sessions are held in the town; Saturday is the market day. Fairs for cattle and horses are held on the 2nd April; on the Wednesday before Holy Thursday; 18th June, 20th August, and 9th October. Gwyrch Castle, the seat of the Hesketh, stands on the summit of a rock between the town and Cevn Ogo. It is a very large structure, recently erected, with spacious terraces and eighteen embattled towers.

ABERGLASNEY, near the vil of Llandilofawr, in the co. of Carmarthen, 14 miles N.E. of Carmarthen. It is situated on the river Glasney, at a short distance from Grongar Hill.

ABERGORLECH, a vil. in the par. of Llanybyther, hund. of Cathinog, in the co. of Carmarthen, South Wales, 6 miles N.W. of Llandilofawr, at the confluence of the rivers Gorlech and Cothy. The living is a cur., val. £60, in the dioc. of St. David's, and in the patron. of the vicar.

ABERGWILLY, a par. in the hund. of Elvet, in the co. of Carmarthen, South Wales, 2 miles N.E. of Carmarthen, on the road from Carmarthen to Llandilofawr. It is pleasantly situated on the Gwilly, at its confluence with the Towy, amidst the meadow grounds watered by these streams. The Gwilly is here crossed by a stone bridge of three arches. A fierce conflict took place on this ground in the year 1020, between Llewellyn-ap-Sytsyllt, Prince of Wales, and a Scottish chief, named Rhûn, who pretended that he was the son of Meredydd-ap-Owain; the pretender was defeated and slain. The chief points of interest in the place at present are the old church and the episcopal palace. The church, dedicated to St. David, is very plain, and consists of two aisles, separated by a series of pointed arches and octagonal columns. It has no tower. The churchyard is planted with evergreens. The church was made collegiate in 1287, but its establishment was removed by Henry VIII. to Brecknock College. The episcopal palace stands on the Towy, which winds through the grounds. It is a recent structure, in the Elizabethan style of architecture, the old palace having been allowed to fall into decay. The living is a vic.,* val. £172, in the dioc. of St. David's. It is in the patron. of the Dean and Canons of Windsor, but the bishop is by courtesy allowed to present. He is also lord of the manor. Besides the parish church, there has lately been erected a new one at Llanvihangel Uwahgwilly, which is a perpet. cur., val. £75, in the patron. of the vicar. Slate is obtained from quarries in the parish, and many hands are employed in working it. Petty sessions are held once a month. Fairs, chiefly for cattle, take place on the 2nd and 27th October. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Methodists. Twelve poor children of the parish are educated by means of an endowment of £6 a year, originated by some unknown benefactor. At White Mill, near the village, is a wood, on ground rising steeply from the road, and called Merlin's Grove, where the great enchanter, sage, or sorcerer, resided and was buried. Tradition speaks of a cave in the centre of this wood as the scene of the incantations to which allusion is made in Spenser's "Faery Queen." The principal seats are Cwm-Guilly, and Gallt-y-Gôg.

ABERHAFESP, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. and union of Newtown, in Montgomeryshire, North Wales, 2 miles N.W. of Newtown. This place derives its name from its situation at the confluence of the river Hafesp with the Severn. The Roman road from Caer-sws to Mediolanum, passed through the parish, and traces of it still remain on a farm named Llwydd Coed. The views from the church and the rectory are very fine, over the rich and varied scenery of the Vale of Severn, bounded in the distance by Plinlimmon and other mountains. The living is a rect.,* in the dioc. of St. Asaph, val. £356, and in the patron. of the bishop. The church is an ancient edifice, in the early English style, and is dedicated to St. Cynog (Gwynnog). The Baptists and Independents have places of worship here. The principal occupations of the inhabitants are flannel-weaving, fishing, and working in the quarries. A medicinal spring, named Black Well, is much thought of and resorted to for relief in cases of scrofula.

ABERHALE, a tnshp. in the par. of Tregynon, in the co. of Montgomery, North Wales, 5 miles to the N. of Newtown.

ABERHALL, a small place in the par. of Hentland, in the co. of Hereford, 4 miles N.W. from Ross railway station, near the junction of the road from Hereford to Monmouth.

ABERHONDDHU. See BRECKNOCK.

ABERKENFIGG, a vil. in the tnshp. of Higher Newcastle, par. and hund. of Newcastle, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, near Bridgend.

ABERLADY, a par. and district in the co. of Haddington, Scotland, 5 miles N.W. of Haddington, and 15 E. of Edinburgh. It is situated at the head of an extensive, flat, sandy beach, where the river Peffer, or Leddie, as it is conjectured to have been once called, falls into the Frith of Forth. David I. made a grant of the parish to the bishopric of Dunkeld, which he established. In 1522 it passed from Gavin Douglas, at that time the bishop, to his brother, Archibald Douglas. It was converted into a temporal barony by James VI. The village is large and clean. The soil near the sea is light and sandy, and a rabbit warren extends along the shore. The views from the village are very fine, embracing the Frith of Forth, the Pentland Hills, Arthur's Seat, Edinburgh, with its churches, and spires, and castle, and the Grampian Mountains in the far distance. Gosford House, the seat of the Earl of Wemyss, and its beautiful grounds, are situated along the Forth, and extend to a distance of 2 miles west of the village. Ballencrieff, the seat of Lord Elibank, and Luffness, the seat of Sir Alexander Hope, are in this parish. The living is in the presb. of Haddington, val. £281, in the patron. of the Earl of Wemyss. In the church is a monument to Lady North. It has been conjectured by some that an establishment of the Culdees once existed near this village; for a fortalice between the village and the shore, of which no traces are now left, bore the name of Kilspindy, which signifies "cell of the black-heads" or "black-hoods." This "cell" was probably connected with the Culdee monastery at Dunkeld.

ABERLEMNO, a par. in the district and co. of Forfar, Scotland, 4 miles N.E. of Forfar. There is a railway station at Aulbar. It lies at the confluence of the river Lemno with the south Esk. The district is undulating, the surface in the higher parts covered with broom and heath, that in the lower fertile, and subject to inundations from the Esk. There are several quarries of slate and stone, both for building and paving. The living, val. £288, is in the presb. of Forfar, in the patron. of the Crown and Smythe of Morven. The extensive remains of Melgund Castle, which is said to have been built by Cardinal Beaton, and to which he was accustomed to retire for purposes less innocent than mere relaxation from business, are to be seen here. The property is now in the Panmure family. Many interesting indications exist of this parish having been the scene of a battle in remote times, such as cairns, coffins, and monumental stones; one of the most perfect of the stones is in the churchyard, it has on one side a curious cross in bold relief. It has been conjectured that these "Cross Stones of Aberlemno" commemorate a defeat of the Danish army which was sent into Scotland early in the 11th century. On the highest point in the parish are remains of an ancient fort, now called Camp Castle, bearing some resemblance to a summer camp of the Romans. The Castle of Auldbar, another ancient fort, is of feudal origin. There were several of these strongholds on this border-ground between the Braemen and the Lowlanders. The Arbroath and Forfar railway passes south of this parish.

ABERLLUNVEY (Aberllynfi), a par. in the hund. of Talgarth, and union of Hay, in the co. of Brecon, South Wales, 4 miles S.W. of Hay. It is situated at the confluence of the Llunvey and the Wye. The par. is united with Glasbury, and is commonly considered a hmlt. or chplry. thereto. There is no church. The inhabitants marry and bury at Glasbury, but they pay no church-rates. No tithes have been paid here within the memory of man. An old yew-tree tells where once a church stood, and persons lately living could recollect tombstones. The ground is now covered with fir-trees. Aberllunvey is on the south bank of the Wye, and in the midst of scenery beautiful and diversified.

ABERLOUR, a par. and district in the co. of Banff, Scotland, 11 miles S.W. of Keith. It is situated on the south bank of the river Spey, at the confluence of the Lour with that river, and at a short distance from Craigellachie Bridge. The district is mountainous. In the centre of the parish Ben Rinnes rises to the height of 2,747 feet. A deep and narrow gorge separates this hill from the Convals, two dome-shaped hills, of much less elevation than Ben Rinnes, and covered with heath. The soil is generally fertile. Traces of an old monastery exist here, as also some ruins at a place called Leachell Beandich, (i.e., the Blessed Chapel, from a circular stone monument, which formerly stood near it. The living, val. £287, is in the presb. of Aberlour, synod of Moray. The Earl of Fife, who is chief heritor, is the patron.

ABERLUTHNOTT, Kincardineshire. See Marykirk.

ABERMARCHNANT, a tnshp. in the par. of Llanrhaiadr-yn-Mochnant, hund. of Llanfyllin, in the co. of Montgomery, North Wales, 4 miles to the N.W. of Llanfyllin.

ABERMARLAIS, an ancient seat of the Griffiths, 1½ mile N.W. of the town of Llangadock, in the hund. of Perfodd in the co. of Carmarthen, situated in a pleasant spot on the river Towy, and not far from the Sawdde. It was here that the famous Sir Rhys-ap-Thomas resided. There are traces of the Roman road called the Via Julia Montana.

ABERMAW, Merionethshire. See Barmouth.

ABERMULE, a vil. in the par. of Llandyssil, in the co. of Montgomery, North Wales, 5 miles N.E. of Newtown. It is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the river Mule with the Severn.

ABERNANT, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Elvet, in the co. of Carmarthen, South Wales, 5 miles N.W. of Carmarthen. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Cywyn. Silver coins of the reigns of Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I., have been found at the vicarage. Some years since, a Roman urn was discovered containing some ashes. From this circumstance, and from the vicinity of the village to Newchurch, where a battle between the Romans and the Britons took place, of which a memorial stone still exists, it is conjectured that this may have been the place of burial of those who fell in the fight. The Carmarthen races formerly were held in this parish. Petty sessions are held once a month. The living is a vic.,* with the perpet. cur. of Conwil annexed, val. £131, in the dioc. of St. David's, and in the patron. of the Duke of Leeds. The church, small and neat, is situated in a retired spot, and is dedicated to St. Lucia. Pant-y-Cendy is the seat of the Evanses.

ABERNANT, in the par. of Aberdare, in the hund. of Miskin, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, close to Aberdare. Here are extensive iron works, which, with those at Llwydcoed in the same parish, are capable of producing above 1,500 tons of iron weekly.

ABERNCHILL CASTLE, an old mansion built in the commencement of the 17th century, in the district of Middle Perth, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, situated on a beautiful spot near the falls of the river Earn, renowned in story for the conflicts of the Campbells and Macgregors.

ABERNETHY, a par. lying partly in the co. of Elgin, partly in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, 4 miles S.W. of Grantown. It formed originally the two parishes of Abernethy and Kincardine. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Nethy and Spey, and is bounded on the south by the Cairngorm, or Blue Mountain, one of the loftiest peaks of the Grampians, which separates it from Braemar. This hill rises to an elevation of 4,050 feet. Below this, about a mile from its base, lies Loch Aven, which is the source of the river Aven. At one end of this loch is a large natural cave called Chlachdhian, or the Sheltering Stone. The Cairngorm yellow or brown rock crystals are found here. The parish is of considerable extent, being 15 miles in length and 12 miles in breadth. It contains several lakes, Morloch, Loch Aven, Green Loch, and others. There are fine hilly sheep-walks, and extensive woods of fir, which is of excellent quality. Granite and freestone are quarried here. Abernethy is the seat of a presbytery. The living, val. £234, is in the patron. of the Earl of Seafield, who is chief heritor. Castle Roy, formerly the residence of Bailie Roy, is at a short distance from the church. Chief Justice Grant, and John Stuart, a Gaelic poet of the 17th century, were natives of this parish.

ABERNETHY, a par. partly in the co. of Perth, and partly in the Cupar district of the co. of Fife, Scotland, 6 miles S.E. of Perth. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Earn and Tay, and on Balloburn in the Glens of Abernethy. It is a station on the Edinburgh and Northern railway, and has a ferry to the Carse of Gowrie. The village of Aberdargie is contained in this parish, which is itself a burgh of barony under Lord Douglas. Its name is traditionally derived from the Gaelic Obair Neachtain, "the work of Nectan, or Nethan," and the place is supposed to have been made the capital of a Pictish kingdom about the year 456. It was afterwards the seat of an archbishop, until the Picts were conquered by Kenneth II., King of Scots, who removed the archbishopric to St. Andrew's in 840. At a later time the cathedral became a collegiate church. A Culdee house, or university, was established here, which was converted into an Austin priory in 1273. The most striking evidence of the antiquity and early importance of the place is its round tower. There is only one other structure of this kind in Scotland, that at Brechin. It stands in a corner of the churchyard, and is used at present as a steeple, a clock and bell being placed in it. This circumstance may give a clue to the real origin of these towers, which, from their peculiar construction, appear well adapted to answer the purpose of the minarets of the East, and to have been employed to call the people to church before the invention of bells. This would account for their being found so frequently near the ruins of ancient churches in Ireland. It is 74 feet in height, its circumference at the base is 48 feet, and the walls are 3½ feet thick. It has only one door, facing the north, and four windows near the top, equidistant, and each supported by two small pillars. On the side of the tower, in the period of persecution, there was an iron collar and a chain in readiness as a pillory for persons convicted of breaking the law of the church. It is similar to the round towers of Ireland, and was probably built by the Hibernians in some of their incursions into Scotland. During the Pictish era, Abernethy was far more extensive than at present, and was the seat of a royal residence, which tradition asserts to have stood on the hill called "Castle-law." The land in the parish is fertile; the houses are irregular and thatched. Linen-weaving is the chief occupation of the people. The living is in the presb. of Perth, val. £256, and in the patron. of the Earl of Mansfield. Fairs are held, principally for the sale of cattle, on the 12th February, the fourth Wednesday in May, and the second Thursday in November.

ABERNYTE, a par. in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 10 miles N.E. of Perth. Its post town is Inchture. The village lies in a valley, with braes and rocks surrounding it. There is a ravine leading to the Carse of Gowrie, with a waterfall at the head of it. King's Seat is a spot on the edge of this ravine, so called from a castle said to have been built there by King Edgar. A farm-house now occupies its site. The view from this point, which is 1,155 feet above the sea, is very extensive and varied, with the Frith of Forth bounding it on the south. The soil is poor, but well cultivated. The living, val. £160, is in the presb. of Dundee, and in the patron. of the Crown. The parish church was built in 1736, and can accommodate the whole population. There is also a free church for Abernyte and Rait.

ABERPERGWYN, a chplry. in the par. of Cadoxton, hund. of Neath, in Glamorganshire, South Wales, 9 miles N.E. of Neath. It is situated at the head of the rich and beautiful vale of Neath. There is a colliery, which gives employment to above 150 hands. The living is a cur. united with Cadoxton. Aberpergwyn House is an ancient seat of the Williams family. Oliver Cromwell is said to have halted here on his way to Milford Haven, when going to embark for Ireland.

ABER PORTH, a par. in the hund. of Troedyraur, in the co. of Cardigan, South Wales, 6 miles N.E. of Cardigan. It is situated on the shore of Cardigan Bay, in a cove near the mouth of the river Howny. There are some small craft belonging to the village, which are employed in the carriage of limestone from Carmarthen and Pembroke; and of coal from Glamorgan and Liverpool. Others are employed in the bay fishery. Cribach Roads, off this village, afford good shelter for ships, and in time of war have been frequently resorted to by the French. The surrounding district is hilly, and has several rapid streams, of which the principal is the Howny. The church, which is of considerable antiquity, is very small and plain, not exceeding 45 feet in length, by 22 in breadth. It stands on a hill about a mile from the village. The font is a square basin, supported by a round pillar. The living is a rect., val. £100, in the dioc. of St. David's and in the patron. of the bishop.

ABERPWL, a vil. in the par. of Bangor, hund. of Uwchgorfai, in the co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, not far from Bangor.

ABERRHEIDOL. See ABERYSTWITH.

ABERRHIW. See BERRIEW.

ABERSOCH, a vil. in the hund. of Gaflogian, in the co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, 6 miles S.W. of Pwllheli. It is situated on the shore of St. Tudwell's Bay.

ABERTANATT, a tnshp. in the par. of Llanyblodwell, hund. of Oswestry, in Shropshire, 4 miles S.W. of Oswestry. It is situated on the river Tanat, near Clawd Coch, the Mediolanum of the Romans.

ABERTARFF, a par. in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, now united with Boleskine. It is situated near Fort Augustus, at the mouth of the river Tarff, which here falls into Loch Ness. It is the seat of a presbytery.

ABERTAWE, Carmarthenshire. See SWANSEA.

ABERTEIFI, Cardiganshire. See CARDIGAN.

ABERTHAW, a small vil. in the par. of Penmark, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 5 miles S.E. of Cowbridge. It is situated on the Bristol Channel, at the mouth of the river Thaw, or Ddaw. The harbour is small and the port is subordinate to Cardiff. It is frequented only by coasting vessels of small size. The principal produce of the district is lias limestone, here called Aberthaw tarras, and is used in making cement for subaqueous works, canal locks, &c.

ABERTHIN, a hmlt. in the par. of Llanblethian, hund. of Cowbridge, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 1 mile N.E. of Cowbridge. The scenery around it is of a pleasing character.

ABERUTHVEN, Perthshire. See AUCHTERARDER.

ABERWHEELER (Aber-chwiler), a tnshp. in the par. of Bodfary, in the hund. of Ruthin, co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 3 miles N.E. of Denbigh. It stands at the confluence of the river Chwiler with the Clwyd. The course of the Chwiler here lies through a deep and well-wooded valley between lofty mountains. Llewellyn-ab-Grufydd, the last Prince of Wales, had a residence at Maes Mynan in this tnshp., the foundations being traceable till within a few years.

ABERYSCHAN GELLYWOOD, a vil. in the par. of Trevethan, hund. of Abergavenny, in the co. of Monmouth, 2 miles N.W. of Pont-y-pool. It is situated at the junction of the river Sychan with the Afon, and in the neighbourhood of the British iron-works. The living is a cur., value £44, in the dioc. of Llandaff, and in the patron. of the incumbent.

ABERYSCIR, ABER-ESGAIR, or ABER-ESCIR, a par. in the hund. of Merthyr Cynog, in the co. of Brecknock, South Wales, 2 miles W. of Brecknock. It derives its name from its situation on the river Yscir, near its junction with the Usk. The Yscir is here crossed by two bridges, the Pont ar Yscir, and the Pont ar Vrau; and the Usk by Aberbran Bridge, two stone bridges in private grounds, and a small suspension bridge. The lordship of the parish was granted by Bernard Newmarch to Sir Hugh Surdwall, whose seat is fixed by tradition on a spot now occupied by a farm-house. The site of the keep of the old mansion of the Surdwalls is supposed to be indicated by an artificial mount, surrounded by a moat near the Usk. Hywel Surdwall, one of the heraldic bards of the 15th century, was a member of this family. A Roman road passed through this parish, and the station called Caer Bannan is on the eastern bank of the Yscir, nearly opposite the church. From this station the Sarn Helen joined the Via Julia Maritima. The living is a rect., val. £136, in the dioc. of St. David's, and in the patron. of the Rev. D. Jones. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, or, as some say, to St. Cynidr. It is a mean building in a beautiful situation on the western bank of the Yscir, and formerly belonged to the priory of Malvern.

ABERYSTRUTH (Aberystwith), a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Abergavenny, in the co. of Monmouth, 8 miles S.W. of Abergavenny. Tredegar is the post-town. Of the population, above 4,000 are employed in the Beaufort coal and iron works, and nearly 3,000 in those of Sirhowy and Ebbw Vale. The living is a perpet. cur., val. £265, in the dioc. of Llandaff. The pat. is the Earl of Abergavenny. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Besides the parish church, there are two district churches, one at Beaufort, which is a perpet. cur., val. £150, and another at Nantyglo, also a perpet. cur., val. £150, both in the patron. of the crown and bishop alternately. This par. is sometimes named Blaen Gwent, or "corner of Gwentland."

ABERYSTWITH, or ABERRHEIDOL, an assize and petty sessions town, port, and bathing place. It is a chplry. in the par. of Llanbadarn Fawr, in the hund. of Geneur Glynn, in the co. of Cardigan, South Wales, 37 miles N.E. of Cardigan, and 208 miles from London. It was originally called Llanbadarn Gaerog, and was fortified at an early period. The village at that time stood westward of the present site, on ground now covered by the sea. The town stands now at the junction and the mouth of the rivers Ystwyth and Rheidol, which fall into Cardigan Bay. Its origin is traced back to the erection of a castle in 1109 by Gilbert de Clare, in defence of his recently acquired possessions. In 1114, an unsuccessful attack was made on the castle by the Welsh. Owain Gwynedd and Cadwalader, with a large force, took and demolished it in 1135, slaying nearly all the Saxons and Normans who had settled there. It was rebuilt by Cadwalader, and in 1142 was besieged and burnt by his brother Owain. These changes of possession and fortune were frequent during the struggles between the Welsh and the English. In 1277 it was rebuilt by Edward I., and a strong garrison of English placed in it. It was once captured by the Welsh when they were roused by the oppression of their English governors, but it was soon given up again. In the reign of Henry IV. it was assailed and taken by Owain Glyndwr, who held it for three years, and after having given it up to Prince Henry, recovered it by stratagem. From 1408 the English held the place unmolested. William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, was appointed captain of the castle and the town of Aberystwith by Henry VIII., in the thirty-fifth year of his reign. In 1631, Charles I. gave permission to Mr. Bushell, owner of the royal mines of Cardiganshire, to establish a mint in the castle, for the convenience of paying the miners. Some silver coins then struck, bearing the crest of the Prince of Wales, have been found. During the civil war the fortifications were strengthened and held for the king till 1647, when the place was besieged and taken by the parliament and soon dismantled. There are no remains of the town walls or gates. Aberystwith is pleasantly situated in the valley of the Rheidol, here bounded by lofty hills, and overlooks the Bay of Cardigan. It consists chiefly of two long streets, crossed at right angles by others leading to the shore. The houses are well built, the modern ones being of stone. The streets are lighted with gas. The Rheidol is crossed by a stone bridge of five arches, forming the approach to the town from the south. Its delightful situation on the bay, its pure air, and some mineral springs in the neighbourhood, have made it a favourite resort for invalids, and one of the most fashionable watering places on that coast. The beach is pebbly, and is bounded by steep rocks of dark slate, which are worn by the waves into caverns and fantastic forms. The harbour is small, with a bar at the entrance; but since the improvements planned by Mr. Bush and carried on by Mr. Page, craft of 400 tons burden are admitted to the pier. There were 300 vessels belonging to the port in 1860, principally engaged in the coasting trade. The principal exports are lead ore and oak bark; the imports, corn, butter, coal, timber, hemp, tar, &c. The custom-house, a small, neat building, was erected in 1828, at the expense of the government. Aberdovey and Aberaeron are sub-ports. Markets are held on Monday and Saturday—the former in the townhall, for corn, butter, cheese, &c.; the latter for butchers' meat, in the new market-place erected in 1822, in the street leading to Castle Hill. The principal occupations are flannel weaving, the fisheries, and the shipping trade. Aberystwith is the seat of a poor-law union. The borough, which under the Reform Bill of 1832 is contributory to Cardigan, received its first charter from Edward I. It is governed by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the style of the "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, of the town, borough, and liberty of Aberystwith." The mayor is the returning officer. The townhall which was built in 1770, and stood in the principal street, has been taken down and a clock tower erected on its site. A handsome new townhall has been built on the marsh, in which the magistrates hold their meetings. There is a small prison. The new assembly rooms were opened in 1820. There are several libraries in the town. A theatre was commenced some years since, but the funds failed, and the building was converted into dwelling-houses. Races take place annually in August, in a field near the town. Water was formerly supplied from the Ystwyth and the Rheidol; it was brought into the town in barrels, on one-horse sledges, and sold at a cheap rate. Waterworks have been established on the hills to the north-east of the town, and the inhabitants are now supplied by pipes to the houses.—The living is a perpet. cur., united with Llanbadarn-Vawr, val. £170, in the dioc. of St. David's, and in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was built by subscription in 1787, and rebuilt in 1833. It is neat and plain, and stands in the grounds of the castle. Service is performed in Welsh on Sunday afternoon. There are also chapels belonging to the Baptists, Independents, Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists, &c.—The remains of the castle, on the summit of a rock standing out into the bay, consist of portions of the towers, still forty feet high, the principal gateway, and fragments of the walls. The area was originally an irregular pentagon, and of considerable extent, but it has been greatly diminished by the action of the sea, which has undermined the rock. It is now laid out in walks and pleasure grounds, under the directions of Mr. Probart, of Shrewsbury. There are traces of encampments in the neighbourhood; and a small rock called Bryn Dyoddef, or Suffering Mount, was formerly a place of execution. A British celt, and a gold angel of Henry VII., have been found on Pendinas Hill, adjoining the town.—About the year 1779, a mineral spring was discovered near the east end of the town, on the road to Llanbadarn-Vawr, which is prized for its chalybeate properties. Several other springs impregnated with iron exist in the parish, and at Penglais there are traces of sulphur.—Fairs are held on the Monday before the 5th January, on Palm Monday and Whit Monday, and on the first Monday after the 15th November for hiring servants.

ABINGDON, a municipal and parliamentary borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hund. of Hormer, in the co. of Berks, of which it is the chief town, 6 miles S.W. of Oxford, and 56 miles N.W. of London. It is on a branch of the Great Western railway, the Abingdon-road station being about 2¼ miles from the town. It consists of several large streets, diverging from the market-place, and is pleasantly situated on the Thames, where the small river Ock falls into it. In the time of the Britons it was a city of importance, and a royal residence, where the councils of the nation were held. Its earliest name was Scouchesham or Scuckesham (Chron. Abbend.). In the year 680, a Benedictine monastery, which had been previously founded at Bagley Wood by Cissa, viceroy of the King of Wessex, was removed to this place, which then took the descriptive name of Abbandune, or Abbendon, the "town of the abbey." King Offa afterwards erected a palace here, in which he and his immediate successors occasionally resided. In 871, during the reign of Alfred the Great, the monastery was destroyed by the Danes. A new house was commenced by Edred, the grandson of Alfred, completed by the Abbots Ethelwold and Ordgar, and more largely endowed and privileged by Edgar and Canute, so that it attained the dignity of a mitred abbey. William the Conqueror was entertained at Abingdon during Easter, 1084, by Robert d'Oilly, a powerful baron, and he left his son Prince Henry, afterwards named Beauclerc, to be educated in the monastery. Two other royal visits were paid to this town, one in 1267, by Henry III., and another in 1518, by Henry VIII. In 1431 an insurrection of the Levellers took place here, under Mandeville.

The town was garrisoned for Charles I. early in the civil war, and the head-quarters of his cavalry was fixed here. But in 1644, when the royalist forces retreated to Oxford, the Earl of Essex took Abingdon, and it was garrisoned for the parliament. Many attempts were subsequently made by the royalists to recover possession of it, but without success, and the garrison used to put to death every Irish prisoner they took, without trial; hence arose the phrase, "Abingdon law."—The borough received its first charter of incorporation from Philip and Mary, in 1557, by which its government was vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, twelve principal and sixteen secondary burgesses, two bailiffs, a town clerk and chamberlain. Under the Reform Bill, it is governed by a mayor (who is returning officer), four aldermen, twelve councillors, with the style of the "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Abingdon." It returns one member to parliament. It is a polling town and place of election for the county members, who are nominated at Reading. Borough sessions are held quarterly, and borough petty sessions weekly, on Tuesday. The county magistrates hold a petty session once a fortnight for the Abingdon division. The town is the centre of a county court, and assizes are held here alternately with Reading. Since the census of 1851, the population of the town has considerably declined, having been then returned at 5,954 against 5,691 in 1861, showing a diminution of 263 inhabitants in the decennial period. The number of inhabited houses has likewise fallen from 1,244 in the former period to 1,187 in 1861.—The manufacture of woollen cloths was anciently carried on here to such an extent that Leland says, "The town standeth by clothing;" but this had declined before the time of Queen Mary. This branch of trade has lately been revived with great success, and at present gives employment to above 3,000 men and women This, with malting, the dressing of hemp, the manufacture of carpets, sacking, and sail cloth, furnishes the principal occupation of the industrious classes. The Wilts and Berks canal joins the Thames here, near the confluence of the Ock with that river, and wharfs and warehouses have been erected at this point. The market days are Monday and Friday, the former for corn principally, the latter for provisions only. Fairs are held on the first Monday in Lent, the 6th May, the 20th June, the 5th August, the 19th September, the Monday before Old Michaelmas Day, the Monday after October 12th, and the 11th December, for horses and horned cattle.—Abingdon includes the two pars. of St. Helen and St. Nicholas, in the archdeac. of Berks and dioc. of Oxford. The living of the former is a vic., with the perpet. cur. of Drayton, val. £225, in the patron. of the bishop of the diocese. The church is in the early English style, and has a square embattled tower with a lofty spire. It was built before 1573, and contains brasses of Barber and another, the former of the date of 1417. The living of St. Nicholas is a sinecure rect., value £30, the vicarage being annexed to St. Helen's, and is in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor. The church, which stands close to the abbey, was built by the Abbot Nicholas about the close of the 13th and commencement of the 14th century. It is partly Norman, and partly Gothic. There is an arch in the Norman style, and the circular door at the west end, with zigzag ornaments, appears to be of a much earlier date. Nothing is left of the abbey but the west gate-house, with some remnants of the old buildings occupied as a brewery by Miss Spenlove! It had 136 charters, and its revenue at the Dissolution amounted to £1,876 10*s.* 9*d.* It contained the tombs of its founder, and its abbot, Geoffrey of Monmouth, and others. A beautiful octagonal cross formerly stood in the market-place, and around it, in 1641, a company of two thousand singers celebrated the accommodation with the Scots. When Waller's army, which had been stationed at Wantage, entered the town, a few days after Essex had taken possession of it, this cross was destroyed. It formed the model of one subsequently erected at Coventry. There are four chapels in the town belonging to the Society of Friends, the Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists.—There is a large and elegant market-house, built of freestone in 1678, containing a hall in which the County Court and the Nisi Prius Court are held, and borough or county business transacted. The county gaol, in Bridge-street, a handsome stone building, was erected in 1811, at a cost of £26,000, and includes a court-house in which the Crown Court at the summer assizes, and the January and July county sessions, are held. Near the town are Burford and Culham bridges, with a causeway uniting them, forming an agreeable promenade. They were constructed in the reign and by licence of Henry V., by the fraternity of the Holy Cross. The bridges have been widened and improved. There is an oval race-course of a mile and a quarter, on which races take place in July. The town has a mechanics' institution, a reading-room, horticultural and philanthropic societies, and a savings-bank.—There are several free schools, and other charitable institutions. The revenues of the charities amount to the large sum of £1,953. The free grammar school was founded by John Royse in 1563, for the education of three-score and thirteen boys. It was endowed with two messuages, called at that time "the Bell and the Unicorn," situated in Birchin Lane, London. These were afterwards burnt down, and the site now forms part of the premises of the London Assurance Company. There are ten scholarships at Pembroke College, Oxford, connected with this school. It had Goodwin the antiquary for a master; and among its pupils have been several men afterwards distinguished: Chief Justice Holl, Graves, author of the "Spiritual Quixote," Holwick, the Greek scholar, and Morant, the antiquary. In 1608, William Bennett left lands for the maintenance of six poor scholars in this school; and in 1609, Thomas Tesdale gave lands to support an usher. Mayott's free schools were founded in 1756 by Robert Mayott, for the education of poor children of Abingdon. There are at present ten boys and six girls on this foundation. They are nominated by the feoffees, and are educated, clothed, and apprenticed. Another free school was founded in 1703 by John Provost, for the instruction of ten boys in reading and writing, and for apprenticing poor children. Richard Belcher, in 1713, gave £14 per annum, and in 1753, Joseph Tomkins gave £100, South Sea Stock, for the education of children in this borough. There are also national and British schools.—St. Helen's, or Christ's Hospital, which is situated on the west side of St. Helen's church, was built in 1446, and belonged to the fraternity of the Holy Cross. In 1553 it was refounded by letters patent of Edward VI., granted on the application of the inhabitants of the town, who lamented the loss of the establishment by its dissolution in 1547. It was placed under the government of twelve persons who were incorporated by the name of "The Master and Governors of the Hospital of Christ." It consists of almshouses for twelve poor men and twenty-two women, and a nurse, with cloisters in front, and a turret and dome in the centre, with a handsome hall and council chambers, containing portraits of the founder and other benefactors to the hospital, in which the governors meet, and where prayers are read morning and evening. Additional almshouses have been built, and donations made to the hospital from time to time. St. John the Baptist's Hospital, endowed before the Reformation, for six poor men, was rebuilt in 1801. There are also almshouses endowed by Twitty in 1707, and by Tomkins in 1733. The poor have the benefit of several charitable bequests by Mr. Klein, Mr. Beasley, and others.—St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, who died in 1240; Sir John Mason, British Ambassador at the Court of France, and Chancellor of the University of Oxford, who was born in 1500, and had for his motto, "Do, and say nothing;" Sir T. Smith, who died in 1609; E. Moore, author of "The Gamester;" and W. Stevens, a poet, born in 1755, died in 1800, were natives of Abingdon.—It confers the title of earl on the family of the Berties, of Wytham Abbey.

ABINGER, a par. in the first div. of the hund. of Wotton, in the co. of Surrey, 4 miles S.W. of Dorking, and 3 from Gumshall railway station. It is situated at the foot of Leith Hill, on a branch of the river Wey. The living is a rect.,* val. £453, in the dioc. of Winchester, and in the patron. of W. J. Evelyn, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, is in the early English style of architecture. The manor belongs to the Scarlett family of Abinger Hall, who take the title of baron from this parish. It is a place of meeting for the Surrey Union hounds.

ABINGHALL (Abenhall), a par. in the hund. of St. Briavell, in the co. of Gloucester, 1 mile S.E. of Mitcheldean. Newnham is the post-town. It is situated in a pleasant district of the Forest of Dean, and had at one time a seat of the abbots of Flaxley. There is a mineral spring in the parish, called St. Anthony's, which is in repute for its efficacy in cases of cutaneous eruption. Gun's paper-mills, a large establishment, gives employment to many hands. The living is a rect.,* val. £142, in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol. The pat. is the Rev. J. Probyn.

ABINGTON, a vil. in the par. of Crawford-john, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, 13 miles S.E. of Lanark. It is a station on the Caledonian railway, 5 miles from Leamington, and 48½ from Edinburgh. It is situated on the river Clyde, where the Gonnar rivulet falls into it. It is a neat and picturesque place, and is the rendezvous for the coursing matches in which the best dogs of England and Ireland are pitted against those of the West of Scotland. Great excitement was caused by the discovery of a few particles of gold here in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

ABINGTON, a par. partly in the bars. of Owneybeg and Clanwilliam, in the co. of Limerick, partly in the bar. of Owney-Arra, in the co. of Tipperary, and partly in the co. of the City of Limerick, in the prov. of Munster, Ireland, 7 miles E. of Newport. It was at an early period a place of importance, and had a Cistercian abbey which was founded in 1189, or, according to other authorities, in 1205, by Theobald Fitzwalter, ancestor of the Butlers, Earls of Ormond. Its ancient name was Wotheney or Woney. King John endowed the abbey with lands and several advowsons, and its abbot was a peer of the Irish House of Lords. Queen Elizabeth granted the abbey and its possessions to Captain Walshe, who erected here a fine mansion. The estate was forfeited to the crown in 1641. Only a few fragments of the abbey and the mansion now remain. The parish contains the village of Moroe, and towards its north-eastern boundary includes part of the Slieb Phelim Mountains. Although a large portion of the ground is barren mountain, there are some lands well cultivated and some valuable meadows. The living, which is united with Tuogh, val. £788, is a rect., in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, and is in the patron. of the bishop. Here is a police station, and petty sessions are held on alternate Tuesdays. Fairs are held on the 29th May and 31st August, and at Moroe on the 29th April and 27th October. Deer Park is the seat of the Earl of Carbery. There are several other seats in the par.

ABINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Spelhoe, in the co. of Northampton, 1½ mile N.E. of Northampton. It is situated near the river Nen, and the Northampton and Peterborough railway. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £200. The pat. is Lord Overstone. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, and is in various styles of architecture, chiefly the early English. It contains the tombs of the Bernards. Abington Abbey has been converted into a private lunatic asylum. The favourite granddaughter of Shakspeare is buried here, and there is on the spot a mulberry-tree planted by Garrick.

ABINGTON, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Chilford, in the co. of Cambridge, 2 miles N.W. of Linton. Cambridge is the post town. It is situated on the south bank of the river Granta, 6 miles from the Chesterford station of the Eastern Counties railway. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £120, and in the patron. of T. Mortlock, Esq., whose seat is Abington Park. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and is in the early English style.

ABINGTON, LITTLE, a par. and vil. in the hund. of Chilford, in the co. of Cambridge, close to Great Abington, and on the north side of the river Granta. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £87, and in the patron. of T. Mortlock, Esq. The church, which formerly belonged to Pentney Abbey, is dedicated to St. Mary. It has a double niche in the chancel, and contains the tombs of the Daltons.

ABINGTON-IN-THE-CLAY, or ABINGTON PIGOTT'S, a par. in the hund. of Armingford, in the co. of Cambridge, 4 miles N.W. of Royston station, and 42 from London. It is situated on a branch of the river Cam. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £310. The patron. is with M. G. F. Pigott, Esq., of Abington Hall, who is the representative of a family which has held the manor from the time of the Conquest. The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and has nave, chancel, south porch, and tower, with two bells. The register extends as far back as 1600. There was formerly a market on Fridays, granted to the Bassingbourns about the year 1335.

AB-KETTLEBY, a par. in the hund. of Framland, in the co. of Leicester, 3 miles N.W. of Melton Mowbray, and 2½ N. of Kirby railway station. It is situated near Broughton hill, on a branch of the river Wreak, and contains the chplry. of Holwell. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £297, in the patron. of the Rev. T. Bingham, the vicar, whose residence is Ab-Kettleby Hall. The church, which formerly belonged to Laund priory, is dedicated to St. James, and has a square embattled tower, surmounted by a lofty spire. It was restored in 1853. There is a neat Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1843.

ABLINGTON, a tythg. in the par. of Bibury, and hund. of Brightwell's Barrow, in the co. of Gloucester, 5 miles N.W. of Fairford, on the river Coln. Ablington House is the principal residence.

ABLINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Figheldean, and hund. of Amesbury, in the co. of Wilts, 4 miles to the N. of Amesbury, on the river Avon.

ABNEY and ABNEY GRANGE form a joint tnshp., consisting of two small hmlts. in the par. of Hope, and hund. of High Peak, in the co. of Derby, 4 miles N.E. of Tideswell. At the time of Domesday Survey this manor belonged to William Peveril, or Peveril of the Peak. It is situated on a branch of the river Derwent, and was for some time the seat of the Abneys, who became afterwards, through the family of the Gunstons, possessors of Abney Park, near London, in the south-eastern part of Middlesex. This park derives its interest from the circumstance of Dr. Watts having resided in the old house. It is now converted into a cemetery, having a chapel and a monument to Dr. Watts.

ABOVE-DERWENT, a tnshp. in the par. of Crosthwaite, Allerdale ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 2 miles W. of Keswick. It is situated near the foot of Derwent-water, and commands an extensive view of the lake, with the surrounding hills.

ABOVE-PARK, a hmlt. in the par. of Cheadle, hund. of Totmonslow, in the co. of Stafford, not far from Cheadle.

ABOVE-SAWTHE (Sawddy), a hmlt. in the par. of Llangadock, and hund. of Perfedd, in Carmarthenshire, South Wales, near Llangattock. It is situated between the rivers Sawddy and Sevin, near the western slope of the Black Mountains.

ABOYNE, a par. united with Glentanmar, in the district of Kincardine O'Neil, in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 26 miles S.W. of Aberdeen, with which it is connected by the Dee-side railway. It lies on both banks of the Dee at the confluence of Tannar Water with that river, and at the foot of the Grampian Mountains. The Braes of Angus partly bound it on the south-west. The ground is hilly, and there were extensive woods chiefly of oak and fir; but they are fast being cleared. About a mile to the south, the Dee is crossed by an elegant suspension-bridge. The parish is noted for its goat's whey, which is taken by consumptive patients. The living is in the presb. of Kincardine, val. £161, in the patron. of the Marquis of Huntley. Aboyne Castle is the seat of that nobleman, who is chief heritor, and takes hence the title of earl. The earldom was created by Charles II. in 1660, in recompense for the services of Charles, third son of the Marquis of Huntley, during the civil war.

ABRAM, a tnshp. in the par. of Wigan, and hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 3 miles S.E. of Wigan. It is situated on the Leigh canal and the Newton railway. The population has been increasing of late years, and is chiefly employed in the collieries. The living is a cur., val. £120, in the dioc. of Chester, and in the patron. of the rector.

ABRIDGE, a hmlt. of Lambourne, in the hund. and union of Ongar, and co. of Essex, 4 miles S. of Epping, and 7 from Romford, its post town. It is seated on the small river Roding, about 13¼ miles from Whitechapel and Shoreditch, and is a cur. united with the rect. of Lambourne, in the dioc. of Rochester.

ABSON, or ABSTON, a par. in the hund. of Pucklechurch, in the co. of Gloucester, 5 miles S.W. of Chipping Sodbury, and 7 miles N.E. of Bristol. It is united with Wick, and contains the hmlts. of Holbrook and Bridge-Yate. It is situated on a branch of the river Avon on the Cotswolds, at the foot of a rocky hill which rises to the height of 200 feet, and consists of alternate strata of limestone and petrosilex. An ancient camp exists here which is considered to be of British origin. This parish was formerly a possession of Glastonbury Abbey. Toghill, the scene of an engagement in 1642, in which Waller suffered a defeat, and Sir B. Granville was killed, is included in it. Coal and lime are obtained here. Roman coins, urns, bricks, &c., have been found. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the vic. of Pucklechurch, in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ABTHORPE, a par. in the hund. and union of Towcester, in the co. of Northampton, 3 miles S.W. of Towcester. It is situated on the small river Tove, and contains the hamlets of Charlock and Foscote. The Duke of Grafton is lord of the manor. The charities of the parish amount to £191 a year, and are applied partly to the support of a school founded in 1646 by Jane Leeson for the instruction of poor children, and partly to the relief of the poor in this and 29 other places. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £215, and is in the patron. of the Bishop of Lichfield and trustees of Leeson's Charity alternately. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

ABURY, Wiltshire. See AVEBURY.

ABY, a par. in the Marsh div. of the hund. of Calceworth, in the co. of Lincoln, 3 miles to the N.W. of Alford. It contains the hamlet of Greenfield. The living is a vic. united to the rect. of Belleau in the dioc. of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ACASTER MALBIS, or MALBYSSE, a par. chiefly in the wap. of Ouse and Derwent, partly in the ainsty of the City of York, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles S. of York. It was the estate of the Malbisses after the Conquest. It is situated on the river Ouse, which is navigable, and near the North Midland railway. It has a charity school, which was founded and endowed with land by John Knowles in 1603. Fourteen poor children appointed by the feoffees are educated in it. The living is a cur., val. £56, in the dioc. of York, in the patron. of F. Lawley, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

ACASTER SELBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Stillingfleet, in the ainsty of the City of York, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles S.W. of York. Tadcaster is the post town. It was formerly part of the possessions of Selby Abbey. It is pleasantly situated on the Ouse, near the junction of the Wharfe with that river. A college for a Provost and Fellows was founded here by Robert Stillington, one of the fellows being required to instruct children. Its revenue at the Dissolution was £33 10*s.* 4*d.* The living is a cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £40, in the patron. of Sir W. M. Milner, Bart.

ACCOT, a hmlt., 2½ miles distant from Swinbridge, in the hund. of Southmolton, in the co. of Devon, 5 miles E. from Barnstaple railway station. It is situated in a valley surrounded by hills.

ACCRINGTON, a chplry., post-town, and considerable vil. in the par. of Whalley, and hund. of Blackburn, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles N.W. of Haslingden. It includes the two townships of Old and New Accrington, and has become within the last few years a place of some consequence. The population has increased at a very rapid rate. It is situated on the river Henburn, near the Leeds and Liverpool canal, and is a station on the East Lancashire railway. Its importance is derived from its position in the centre of the calico-printing trade. Several large cotton-mills and print-works have been established, which afford abundant occupation to the working classes. Many hands are employed in the coal-mines and quarries. The living of Old Accrington is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £300, in the patron. of Hulme's Trustees. The church was taken down and rebuilt in 1826. The living of Christ Church is a cur., in the patron. of trustees. There is a national school which was erected in 1806.

ACHARACLE, Inverness-shire. See AHARACLE.

ACHARN, a vil. in the par. of Kenmore, in Perthshire, Scotland, 2 miles S.W. of Kenmore. It is situated near the south shore of Loch Tay, on Acharn Burn, which has a fall of 80 feet, and runs into Loch Tay.

ACHILL, a par. in the bar. of Burrishoole, in the co. of Mayo, in the prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 14 miles to the N.W. of Newport. It comprehends the islands of Achill and Achillbeg, and the peninsula of Currawn Achill. The parish lies between Clew or Newport and Black Sod bays, and was formerly the property of the O'Donnells. The Island of Achill is the largest off the Irish coast, from which it is separated by Achill Sound. It is about 16 miles in length, and 7 in breadth, and has a coast line of about 80 miles in circuit. It consists entirely of mountain and bog. The eastern side is well sheltered, the western is mostly rocky and precipitous. At its south-western extremity is the promontory called Achill Head, and at its northern extremity, that called Saddle Head. The smaller Island of Achillbeg is separated from Achill by a narrow sound called Achill Hole, an excellent and safe harbour for vessels of large size in all weathers. It has a coastguard station and a fishing-pier. Its western side is very wild and unapproachable, even in still weather, on account of the Atlantic swells, which run to a great height. Currawn Achill, which is also named the Hook of Achill, lies east of the island. The isthmus of Pollranny connects this peninsula with the mainland. The hill of Currawn has an elevation of 1,715 feet above the level of the sea. At Slievemore, the hills rise to the height of 2,204 feet; at Mincelin, 1,530 feet, and at Knockmore, 1,190 feet. On Mincelin Hill, there is a precipice rising abruptly from the sea to the height of 700 feet. There were no roads in Achill till about forty years ago. The people are in a very primitive state, and are principally occupied in fishing. There is no church, glebehouse, nor glebe. The living is a rect., val. £89, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, and in the patron. of the bishop. A Protestant mission was established at Dugarth in 1832, and divine service is performed at the mission house there twice each Sunday in the English and Irish languages. A paper, called the Achill Herald, is also published there. There is a coastguard station at Keel. Amethysts are found there. Remains of churches and burial-grounds exist at Kildavnet and Slievemore, and at Kildavnet are traces of an ancient castle, which belonged to Grace O'Malley.

ACHINDAVY, or AUCHENDAVY, a vil. in the par. of Kirkintilloch, in the co. of Dumbarton, Scotland, 2 miles E. of Kirkintilloch. It is situated on the river Kelvin, and was formerly a Roman station on the wall of Antonine.

ACHMUTHIE, Forfarshire. See AUCHMUTHIE.

ACHNACRAIG, a vil. in the par. of Torosay, in the Isle of Mull, co. of Argyle, Scotland, 8 miles W. of Oban. It is situated on Achnacraig Loch. There is a ferry for cattle to the mainland, across Kerrera Island.

ACHONRY, a par. and the head of a dioc. in the bar. of Leyney, in co. of Sligo, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.W. of Ballymote. An abbey was founded here in the 6th century by St. Finian, Bishop of Clonard, to whom the place was granted about 530, by the chief of the territory of Luigny. His disciple, St. Nathy, or Dathy, whom he set over the abbey, was afterwards appointed Bishop of Achonry, or Luigny, as it is sometimes called in the ancient annals from the district in which Achonry is situated. In the year 1623, this bishopric was permanently united to that of Killala. The par. contains the vils. of Tobercurry, Bellaghy, &c., besides several elegant seats. A large part of the surface is mountain and bog; the rest arable and pasture land. Limestone and granite are quarried here. The living is a rect., val. £614, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, in the patron. of the crown. The church is a plain building with a tower and spire; the ruins of the old church are near it. Petty sessions are held at Tobercurry every week.

ACHRIS, a hmlt. in the bar. of Ballinahinch, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 8 miles N.W. of Clifden, and not far from Claggan Bay.

ACHURCH THORPE. See THORPE ACHURCH.

ACKENTHWAITE, a hmlt. in the tnshp. and par. of Heversham, Kendal ward, in the co. of Westmoreland. It lies close to Milnthorpe, which is a station on the Lancaster and Carlisle railway.

ACKERGILL, a vil. in the par. of Wick, in the co. of Caithness, Scotland, 2 miles N. of Wick. It is situated near Sinclair Bay, and contains Ackergill Tower, a strong castle, which was once the residence of the Earls Marischal. It is now the property of Lord Duffus.

ACKLAM, or EAST ACKLAM, a par. in the wap. of Buckrose, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles S. of Malton. It comprises the tnshps. of Acklam with Barthorpe and Leavening. It is situated on the Wolds, and commands an extensive prospect. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £108, in the patron. of the Chancellor of the Cathedral Church of York. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Wesleyans and the Primitive Methodists have chapels here.

ACKLAM, WEST, a par. in the western div. of the lib. of Langbaurgh, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles S.E. of Stockton-upon-Tees. Yarm is the post town. It lies near the river Tees and the Darlington railway. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of York, val. £44, in the patron. of T. Hustler, Esq., of Acklam Hall.

ACKLETON, a tnshp. in the par. of Worfield, Bridgnorth div. of the hund. of Brimstree, in the co. of Salop, 5 miles to the N.E. of Bridgnorth, and 2½ miles N.E. from the parish church, which is an old red sandstone building in the early decorated style of architecture.

ACKLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Forden, hund. of Cawrse, in the co. of Montgomery, North Wales, 3 miles N. of Montgomery.

ACKLINGTON, and ACKLINGTON PARK, tnshps. in the par. of Warkworth, Morpeth Ward, in the co. of Northumberland. They are situated on the small river Coquet, near the coast, and have a station on the York and Berwick railway, 7 miles S.S.E. of Alnwick. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £250, and in the patron. of the Duke of Northumberland. Coal is obtained here, and the population are chiefly employed in coal mining and blanket weaving.

ACKTHORPE, a hmlt in the par. of South Elkington and hund. of South Ecke, in the co. of Lincoln. It is situated on the Wolds, 2 miles to the W. of Louth.

ACKWORTH, a par. in the upper div. of the wap. of Osgoldcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles S.W. of Pontefract. It is in a healthy situation, and is near the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway. It contains High Ackworth and Low Ackworth. A school was established here in 1758, in connection with the Foundling Hospital. In 1777, the Society of Friends purchased the premises with eighty-five acres of land, and founded a school for the education of youth in their own religious principles. There is a free school for the education of twenty children, and a hospital founded by Lowther, for six women. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of York, val. £403, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Llandaff. The church is small and ancient, and is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. There are several seats: Ackworth Park, Ackworth Grange, Ackworth House, and Ackworth Moor Top.

ACLARE, a vil. in the bar. of Leyney, in the co. of Sligo, Ireland, 27 miles to the S.W. of Sligo, and 140 miles from Dublin. It is situated near the river Moy, and has a police station. A market is held on Saturday.

ACLE, a par. and small town in the hund. of Walsham, in the co. of Norfolk, 8¾ miles W. of Yarmouth—a new road having been cut through the marshes in 1833, which shortens the distance 3½ miles,—and 5½ miles distant from each of the Brundall, Buckinham, and Reedham stations on the Norwich and Yarmouth railway. It is 10 miles E. of Norwich. The village is pleasantly situated, with some genteel and good houses, on slightly rising ground, on the banks of the river Bure, which is navigable, and joins the Yare near this place. Here is a stone bridge of one arch, called Acle-bridge in Weybridge, which is an important point, as there is no other bridge between this and the mouth of the Yare. This parish was a fief of the crown after the Conquest, and when the Conqueror conferred it on Roger Bigod, it obtained the privilege of a market and fair. Richard II. granted the inhabitants further privileges, including freedom from all tolls. In the reign of Edward I. a priory of Augustine canons was founded at Weybridge by Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk. Its revenue at the Dissolution was £8. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £605, in the patron. of Lord Calthorpe. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund, and contains an old font. A fair is held on the 24th June.

ACOL, sometimes called WOOD, is a vil. or lib. in the hund. of Ringslow, in the Isle and union of Thanet, in the Lathe of St. Augustine, Kent, 4 miles S.W. of Margate. It is a member of the Cinque Port liberty of Dover, and is situated on the London road. There was formerly a chapel belonging to the liberty at the small hamlet of Woodchurch, 2 miles N.W., which was attached to the living of Monkton, but the service was discontinued there in the reign of Elizabeth, and the chapel allowed to fall into ruins, of which traces still remain. The ancient name of the village was Mill Burgh.

ACOMB, a par. in the ainsty of the city and in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles W. of York. It is situated near the river Ouse and Sivers Hill, the spot on which the body of the Roman Emperor Severus was burnt. The Great Northern railway passes through it. It contains the tnshps. of Drinkhouses and Knapton. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £109, in the patron. of E. Barlow, Esq. It is a peculiar which formerly belonged to the treasurer of the Cathedral Church of York, and was surrendered with the rectory to the crown in 1547. James I., in 1609, granted it to Thomas Newark and his heirs. The church, which is small and ancient, stands on rising ground, and is dedicated to St. Stephen. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. There are two lunatic asylums, a free school founded by Lady Hewley, and a national school. The new waterworks for the city of York are at Acomb.

ACOMB, EAST, a tnshp. in the par. of St. Peter's Bywell, in Tynedale Ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 7 miles E. of Hexham. It lies near the river Tyne and the Newcastle railway.

ACOMB, WEST, a tnshp. in the par. of St. John Lee, in Tynedale Ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 2 miles North of Hexham. The river Tyne forms its southern boundary. The inhabitants are mostly engaged in the collieries.

ACONBURY, or ACORNBURY, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Wormelow, in the co. of Hereford, 4 miles S. of Hereford, and 2½ S.W. from Holme Lacy railway station. It is situated on the turnpike road from Hereford to Ross, and possesses scenery of romantic description, which is blended with woodland. In the reign of King John, Margery, wife of Walter de Lacy, founded here a nunnery of the Augustine order, to the honour of the Holy Cross. Its revenue at the Dissolution was £75. There are some stone coffins still preserved, but the remains of the building have been converted into a farm-house. On Aconbury Hill, from which there is an extensive view, are traces of a large Roman encampment, with the eastern rampart clearly distinguishable. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £258, in the patron. of the governors of Guy's Hospital, to whom the manor belongs, with Aconbury wood.

ACRE, SOUTH, a par. in the hund. of South Greehoe, union of Swaffham, in the co. of Norfolk, 1 mile from Castle Acre, and 3 miles N. of Swaffham station, on the Eastern Counties railway. The living is a rect. in the archdeac. of Norfolk, and dioc. of Norwich, val. £572, in the patron. of Andrew Fountain, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The church is dedicated to St. George, and is situated in a pleasant valley watered by the river Nar. It is an ancient structure, with nave, chancel, aisles, and a tower containing three bells. There are several monuments and a brass.

ACRE, WEST, a par. in the hund. and union of Freebridge, Lynn, in the co. of Norfolk, 5 miles N.W. of Swaffham, and 2 miles N.E. of Narborough station, on the Eastern Counties railway. The living is a donative in the archdeac. of Norfolk and dioc. of Norwich, val. £31, in the patron. of Anthony Hamond, Esq., who is lord of the manor. Near the church, which is dedicated to All Saints, are the ruins of an old priory. The village lies in a deep valley on the north side of the river Nar, and the soil is sandy and clay.

ACRES, a small place near the vil. of Kilburne, in the par. of Horsley, in the co. of Derby, 3 miles N.E. of Duffield.

ACRISE, a par. in the hunds. of Loningborough and Folkestone, in the lathe of Shepway, in the co. of Kent, 5 miles N.E. of Hythe, and 10 from Dover, being about 4½ N. of Folkstone railway station. It is mentioned in Domesday Survey as Acres, and is situated in a wild, dreary country. There is no village, the houses being scattered; but an annual fair is held on the first Tuesday after the 10th October. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £171, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. Acrise Place is the residence of T. Papillon, Esq, who is lord of the manor. This par. is a meet for the East Kent hounds.

ACTON, a vil. in the bar. of Lower Orior, in the co. of Armagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland. It was founded by Sir Toby Poyntz, of Iron Acton, in Gloucestershire, who, for military services, received a grant of 500 acres of land, part of the forfeited estates of the O'Hanlons. He erected a large barn, a house for himself, and twenty-four cottages for English settlers, and named the place after his native village. It now consists of one principal street, and contains about fifty houses. The parish is intersected by the Newry canal. The inhabitants are engaged in the weaving of linen cloth, diapers, checks, and calicoes. The living is a perpet. cur., val. £98, in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher. It is in the patron. of the incumbent of Ballymore. The church is situated at Poyntz Pass, and was erected in 1789. It is in the early English style. There are some remains of the old church built by Sir Toby Poyntz in the midst of a wood, and a tablet to his memory is still preserved. He was interred beneath the chancel. Acton Lodge is the seat of P. Quinn, Esq., who is a descendant of the founder of the village. Fairs are held on the 4th May and 11th December.

ACTON, a par. in the hund. of Nantwich, in the co. palatine of Chester, 1 mile N.W. of Nantwich. It is situated on the Grand Junction and Ellesmere canals, and contains the tnshps. of Acton, Aston-juxta-Mondrum, Austerson, Baddington, Brindley, Burland, Cholmondstone, Cool-Pilate, Eddlestone, Faddiley, Henhull, Hurleston, Newhall, Poole, Stoke, and Worleston, and a part of Sound. It was the seat of the Saxon Earl Morcar, and has descended to the Earl of Dysart through the families of the Lovels, Ardens, and Wilbrahams. Here are two almshouses, endowed by Sir R. Wilbraham, and charities producing about £80 per annum, £40 of which is devoted to the maintenance of four poor widows, and apprenticing poor girls. There is a free school. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chester, val. £627, in the patron. of J. Tollemache Esq., M.P., of Tilstone. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has some curiously ornamented windows. It is partly in the early English style, and contains the tombs of the Mainwarings, &c. This church and Dorfold Hall, the seat of the Tomlinsons, were occupied by the royalists in October, 1643, and on their retreat were garrisoned by the parliament. They were taken again by Lord Byron, but the garrisons surrendered to Fairfax after the raising of the siege of Nantwich. In addition to the parish church, there is a district church at Burley Dam, which is now a perpet. cur., val. £100, in the patron. of Viscount Combermere.

ACTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Wrexham, hund. of Bromfield, in the co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 1 mile N.E. of Wrexham.

ACTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Langton Matravers, in the Isle of Purbeck, hund. of Rowbarrow, in the co. of Dorset, 3 miles to the S.E. of Corfe Castle, and 2 W. of Swanage, near the seacoast.

ACTON, a par. in the Kensington div. of the hund. of Ossulstone, in the co. of Middlesex, 2 miles N.E. of Brentford, and 5¾ W. of London, on the Oxford road. It is a station on the Hampstead Junction railway. The name, which is composed of the Saxon ac, "oak," and tun, "town," indicates that the neighbourhood formerly abounded in oak timber. There is a tract in the parish from time immemorial called Old Oak Common. In 1642, the Earls of Essex and Warwick had their head-quarters here; and it was at this place, in 1651, that the Lord President, the Council of State, the members of the House of Commons, and the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and citizens of London met Cromwell, to offer him congratulations on the great victory at Worcester. It formerly belonged to Bartholomew Priory. The village consists chiefly of one long street. The houses are mostly of great antiquity, but the place is cleanly and healthy. It is near the Great Western railway, and the Paddington canal passes through the parish. There is a mineral spring on Old Oak Common, but it has lost the repute it once enjoyed. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of London, val. £963, in the patron. of the bishop, who is also lord of the manor. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the early English and partly in the perpendicular style, and has lately undergone great alterations at a cost of £3,000. It contains two brasses, and the tombs of Ladies Conway and Southwell. The Independent chapel was erected in 1815. Some private buildings are used as a chapel by the Roman Catholics. At East Acton are some almshouses, founded and endowed by the Goldsmiths' Company, for twelve men and twelve women. There is a Lancasterian school. Baxter, Sir Matthew Hale, Bishop Lloyd, one of the seven bishops imprisoned by James II., and Thicknesse, the traveller, have been residents at this place. The village stands on rising ground, and contains many gentlemen's seats, the most picturesque of which is Berrymead Priory, the former seat of the Savilles and Evelyns. A fair is held on the 24th August.

ACTON, a tnshp., joined with Old Felton, in the par. of Felton, ward of Coynetdale, in the co. of Northumberland, 7 miles to the S. of Alnwick. It is near the river Coquet. Acton House is the principal residence.

ACTON, a tnshp. in the par. of North Lydbury, hund. of Purslow, in Shropshire, 3 miles from the parish church, and 4. E. of Bishop's Castle.

ACTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Swinnerton, hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 3 miles to the S.W. of Newcastle-under-Lyme.

ACTON, a par. in the hund. of Babergh, in the co. of Suffolk, 3 miles N.E. of Sudbury station, 71 from London, and 1 E. from Long Milford, not far from the river Stour. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £255, in the patron. of Earl Howe, who is also lord of the manor. The church is dedicated to All Saints, and contains five monumental brasses, the earliest dated 1302, of the families of the Bures, Brians, and Daniells of Acton Place, besides a beautiful marble monument to Robert Jennings, Esq., and his lady. There are some ancient paintings, and other curiosities, in the old mansion.

ACTON, ACKTON, or AIKTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Featherstone, in the wap. of Agbrigg, West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles W. of Pontefract.

ACTON BEAUCHAMP, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Doddingtree, in the co. of Worcester, 11 miles to the S.W. of Worcester. Bromyard is the post town. It was formerly the estate of the Beauchamps. Part of the land is laid out in hop-grounds. There are some mineral springs in the parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £320, in the patron. of the Rev. R. Cowpland. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

ACTON BURNELL, a par. in the hund. of Condover, in the co. of Salop, 8 miles to the N.W. of Much Wenlock, and 9 S.E. from Shrewsbury, the post town. It includes the chplrys. of Acton-Pigott and Ruckley with Langley. In this parish are the remains of an ancient castle, situated on Acton Hill, and which belonged to the Burnells. In the year 1282, a great council or parliament of Edward I. was held here, at which the "Statutum de Mercatoribus" was passed, a law to facilitate the recovery of debts by merchants. It is called the "Statute of Acton-Burnell." The castle at that time belonged to Robert Burnell, who was Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Lord High Chancellor. The king and his court were entertained at the castle, the lords met in the hall, and the commons in a large barn belonging to Shrewsbury Abbey, which stands there to this day. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £350, in the patron. of Sir E. J. Smythe, Bart., who resides at Acton Park. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains a canopied brass of a Burnell. The parish is a meet for the Wheatland hounds.

ACTON DELAMARE, a tnshp., vil., and railway station of the London and North Western, in the par. of Weaverham, and hund. of Eddisbury, in the co. palatine of Chester, 4 miles to the N.W. of Northwich, and 172¾ miles from London. It is situated on the river Weaver, at the bridge, which was built of the remains of Vale Royal Abbey, and is a station on the London and North Western railway. A branch of the Chester canal passes through the township.

ACTON GRANGE, a tnshp. in the par. of Runcorn, hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the S.W. of Warrington. The old Roman way, called Watling Street, passes through it. The river Mersey, which is navigable, forms the northern boundary of the township; and the Mersey and Irwell canal, the Duke of Bridgewater's canal, and the London and North Western, and Lancashire, and Cheshire railways pass through it.

ACTON, IRON, Gloucestershire. See IRON ACTON.

ACTON-PIGOT, a chplry. in the par. of Acton-Burnell, and hund. of Condover, in the co. of Salop, 1 mile N.E. of Acton-Burnell.

ACTON REYNOLD, a tnshp. in the par. of Shawbury, hund. of North Bradford, in the co. of Salop, 7 miles to the N.E. of Shrewsbury. It is near the river Roden.

ACTON ROUND, a par. in the hund. of Stottesden, in the co. of Salop, 6 miles to the N.E. of Bridgnorth. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £85, in the patron of Sir F. R. E. Acton, Bart., of Aldenham, who is lord of the manor. The church is an ancient stone building in the Tudor style, and was repaired with much taste in 1850. It consists of a small tower, nave, transepts, porch, and chancel, with three handsome monuments to the memory of the Acton family. Cardinal Acton was a member of this family.

ACTON SCOTT, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Munslow, in the co. of Salop, 3 miles to the S. of Church Stretton, and 1 mile from Marsh Brook station on the Shrewsbury and Hereford railway. It is situated under Wenlock Edge, near Watling Street and the river Onny. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £238, in the patron. of F. W. Pendarvis. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ACTON STONE, a tnshp. in the par. of Rushbury, hund. of Munslow, in the co. of Salop, 3 miles to the E. of Church Stretton.

ACTON TRUSSELL, a chplry. united with Bednall, in the par. of Baswich, hund. of Cuttlestone, in the co. of Stafford, 2 miles to the N.E. of Penkridge. It is situated on the river Trent, and the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal; and is near the London and North Western railway, and the great heath called Cannock Chase. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £234, and in the patron. of Hulme's trustees. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ACTON TURVILLE, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. of Grumbald's Ash, in the co. of Gloucester, 5 miles to the E. of Chipping Sodbury. It is situated near the Cotswold hills, and the ancient British and Roman road called Fosse Way. There are traces of a Saxon sanctuary in the parish. The living is a vic. united with Tormarton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ADAM'S ROW, a vil. in the par. of Newton, in the co. of Edinburgh, Scotland, 4 miles to the S.E. of Edinburgh.

ADAM'S WOOD, a small place in the par. of Upper Sapey, in the co. of Hereford.

ADAMSTOWN, or MURNEVAN, a par. in the bar. of Bantry, in the co. of Wexford, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 6 miles to the N.E. of New Ross. It is situated in a pleasantly undulating district, near the rocky hill of Carrickburn, which has an elevation of 766 feet, and commands a fine prospect. The land is light, and under good tillage. There are quarries of granite and limestone. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £625, and in the patron. of the bishop. There is a Roman cross in the burial-ground, considered to be of great antiquity. Here are also remains of Devereux Castle, which was built in 1556, by Nicholas Devereux and his wife Katherine; consisting of a square tower in a quadrangle, surrounded by a wall, with turrets at the angles. A Latin inscription on a shield, over the gateway, preserves the names of the founders, and the armorial bearings of their family. In 1798, a large number of Protestants, nearly 200 in all, were burnt by the rebels at Scullabogue barn, in this parish. Merton is the principal seat.

ADARE, a par. in the bars. of Coshma, Kenry, and Upper Connello, in the co. of Limerick, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 10 miles to the S.W. of Limerick, and 129 miles from Dublin. Its name signifies the "lord of the oaks." A castle and a church appear to have existed here in the reign of Henry II. In 1279, John Fitzgerald, first Earl of Kildare, founded and endowed a monastery here, for the redemption of Christian captives. After the Dissolution, Queen Elizabeth granted it, with other religious houses, to Sir Henry Wallop, Knt. It is now called the Black Abbey; and the remains of the church, consisting of the tower, nave, and part of the choir, have been fitted up as a Roman Catholic chapel. Within the demesne of Adare Manor are extensive and interesting remains of another abbey, including the nave, choir, and south transept of the church, with a square tower rising from the intersection. The cloisters are nearly perfect, and around them are the principal offices and domestic buildings. In the enclosure there is a very fine old yew-tree. A Franciscan abbey was also founded, by Thomas, seventh Earl of Kildare, the remains of which are on the south side of the river, close to the bridge, and now used as the parochial church. Part of the offices have been converted into a school-house, by the Countess of Dunraven. Adare was a corporate town before the year 1810. The castle was built by the O'Donovans, rebuilt and fortified by the Earls of Kildare, and was forfeited to the crown by Gerald, one of the earls, who supported Perkin Warbeck. The castle was frequently besieged during the 16th century, and in 1657 it was dismantled, by the orders of Cromwell; the walls are of great strength, and the remains extensive, and they were put in good repair by the late Earl of Dunraven. The town is situated on the western bank of the river Maigue, which is broad and, by means of a short canal, navigable up to the town. The river is crossed by a fine bridge of fourteen arches, which was erected by the fifth Earl of Kildare. Two quays have been constructed at the expense of the Earl of Dunraven. The appearance of the place has been much improved by the removal of some of the old houses, and the erection of better ones. A post-office has been established, and a police station; and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. Fairs are held twice a-year for the sale of farming stock. The land is good, and well cultivated; about two-fifths are arable, the rest is meadow and pasture land. There is no bog nor waste land. There is an abundance of valuable limestone, black, grey, and porphyritic. The surrounding scenery is fine, and adorned with many handsome seats. The principal of these is Adare Manor, the residence of the Earl of Dunraven, a descendant of "Con of the Hundred Battles." It is on the west bank of the river, commanding a fine view of the castle and abbeys. It is built of limestone, found on the estate. The earl takes from Adare his title of viscount and baron. At a little distance is Currah, the seat of Sir Aubrey de Vere, Bart., in the midst of a fertile and well wooded estate. About the year 1740, a number of German Protestants, called Palatines, settled in this parish. They still remain a distinct body, and are the principal occupants of the farm-houses, with their gardens and orchards. The living is a vic., val. £284, in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, and in the gift of the Earl of Dunraven. There is a parochial school, supported by the Countess of Dunraven; the fever hospital and dispensary are now converted into a monastery.

ADBASTON, or ABDASTON, a par. in the hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 4 miles to the W. of Eccleshall. It comprises the tnshps. of Abdaston, Bishop's Offley, Flashbrook, and Tunstall. It is situated near the Great Junction canal. The living is a perpet. cur.,* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £100, in the patron. of the Dean of Lichfield. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a small endowed school, founded by John Wright, in 1724, and another endowment, for like purposes, founded in 1764, by Richard Whitworth. This parish gave the title of viscount to Earl Whitworth.

ADBEER, a hmlt. in the par. of Trent, hund. of Horethorne, in the co. of Somerset, 4 miles to the N.E. of Yeovil. A chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, formerly existed here, but it was destroyed during the civil war of the 17th century.

ADBOLTON, formerly a par., but now a hmlt., in the par. of Holme Pierrepoint, and wap. of Bingham, in the co. of Nottingham, 1 mile to the S.E. of Nottingham. It is situated on the river Trent, and is near the Radcliffe and Nottingham stations. The living is a cur. united with the rect. of Holme Pierrepoint, in the dioc. of Lincoln. The church was taken down in 1746.

ADBURY, near Burghclere, in the hund. and union of Kingsclere, in the co. of Hants, 4 miles N.W. of Kingsclere, and 5 miles S. from Newbury station, on the Great Western railway, situated on the river Emborne.

ADCOT, a tnshp. in the chplry. of Little Ness, par. of Baschurch and hund. of Pimhill, in the co. of Salop, 6 miles to the N.W. of Shrewsbury. The river Perry flows near the township.

ADDERBURY, a par. in the hund. of Bloxham, in the co. of Oxford, 3½ miles to the S. of Banbury. Deddington is the post town. It comprises the tnshps. of East and West Adderbury, and the chplrys. of Barford St. John, Bodicott, and Milton. It is situated on Sorbrook, a branch of the river Cherwell, not far from the Oxford canal. In Domesday Book it is named Edburghberie, and, a century later, was called Ebberbury and Abberbury. In 1219, a religious impostor was sentenced, by the bishops at Oxford, to be crucified here. There are several charities in the parish, the revenue of which amounts to £257. Of this sum, the Feoffees' land, for the support of the poor and the maintenance of a school, and other benevolent purposes, produces £249. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, united with the perpet. curs. of Barford and Milton, val., £818, in the patron. of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a cruciform structure, in the perpendicular style, with a tower surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire. The chancel was erected, by William of Wykeham, in 1385, and had anciently a grange attached to it. It contains some interesting specimens of early sculpture. The porch is of the decorated style; there are two fonts, and the church contains family monuments of the Oldys, Bustards, and Cobbs, of Adderbury Green. The bust of William of Wykeham, with his armorial bearings, is sculptured on the external walls, over the east window of the chancel, and his arms are also carved in the roof of the same. Here is a chapel for Wesleyans, and an endowed school for 50 boys, also a school for girls on the national system. The poor have the benefit of annual charities amounting to £100. In addition to the parish church, there is a district church at Bodicote, which is a perpet. cur., val. £150, in the patron. of New College, Oxford. The celebrated Rochester, who had the title of Baron Adderbury, had a seat here, at which he died. The mansion is now gone to decay. It was here that Pope visited the Duke of Argyll, who was occupying this seat at the time.

ADDERGOOLE, a par. in the bar. of Dunmore, in the co. of Galway, and prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 5 miles to the N.W. of Dunmore. It is situated on the river Clare, and on the road from Dunmore to Castlebar. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight, and a police station is established here. The land consists chiefly of moor with bog. In 1745, a lough of 300 acres in extent was formed by the bursting of this bog after heavy rains. The living is a vic. united with Tuam, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. There is a chapel of ease at Kilconly.

ADDERGOOLE, a par. in the bar. of Tyrawley, in the co. of Mayo, and prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 6 miles N.E. of Newport. It is situated on Lough Conn, which forms its northern boundary, and contains the greater part of the hill of Nephin, which rises to the height of 2,640 feet. The surface is chiefly mountain and bog. There are quarries of limestone. The living is a vic. united with Crossmolina, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. An abbey formerly existed here, of which there are still some remains. There are also some vestiges of an ancient castle. Castle Hill and Woodpark are the principal residences.

ADDERLEY, or ATHERLEY, a par. in the hund. of North Bradford, in the co. of Salop, 4 miles to the N.W. of Market Drayton. It is situated on the Grand Junction canal and the river Weaver. It comprises the tnshps. of the Morrey and Spoonley. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £665, in the patron. of Richard Corbet. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The parochial charities amount to £68 a year. Shavington Hall, the residence of the Earl of Kilmorey, and Adderley Hall, are the principal seats.

ADDERLEY GREEN, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Weston Coyney, par. of Caverswall and hund. of Todmonslow, in the co. of Stafford, 1 mile to the E. of Lane End. The Adderleys, of Warwick, take their name from this hamlet. The North Staffordshire hounds meet here.

ADDERSTONE, a tnshp. in the par. of Bambrough, Bambrough Ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 3 miles to the S.E. of Belford. Adderstone House is the chief residence.

ADDES, a hmlt., 2 miles N.E of the market and union town of Petersfield, in the South Alton div. of the hund. of Finch Dean, in the co. of Hants.

ADDINGHAM, a par. in Leath Ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 6 miles to N.E. of Penrith. It comprises the tnshps. of Gamblesby with Unthank, Glassonby, Hunsonby with Winskill, and Little Salkeld. It is situated near the river Eden, and the Roman road, called Maiden Way, can be traced, at various points, through the parish. There is a Druidical monument at Little Salkeld, called "Long Meg and her Daughters," which consists of a circle of sixty-seven stones, of various form and height; the diameter of the circle is about 350 feet. A chapel formerly stood at the same place, in a village bearing the name of Addingham, which has disappeared. Human bones, crosses, and other remains, have been discovered here. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £253, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The celebrated Dr. Paley, author of the "Evidences of Christianity," and "Natural Theology," held this living from 1792 till his death, which took place here in 1805. There are two free schools, at Maughamby and Hunsonby, liberally endowed. The church stands detached, about a mile from the village of Glassonby, in the township of Glassonby. It is dedicated to St. Michael, and was repaired in 1850. There are also, at the adjoining villages of Gamblesby and Hunsonby, chapels belonging to the Independents and Wesleyans. There are quarries of good red freestone in the parish. The enclosed land is very fertile, and, since the introduction of guano, nearly all under cultivation.

ADDINGHAM, a par., comprising the tnshp. of Addingham and part of the tnshp. of Beamsley, the former being in the wap. of Staincliffe and Ewcross, the latter in the wap. of Claro, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the S.E. of Skipton. It is situated on the river Wharfe, and is near the Midland railway. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in the manufacture of cotton, worsted, and woollen goods. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £360, in the patron. of Mrs. M. Cunliffe. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It is ancient, and stands in a pleasant spot, on rising ground, near the Wharfe. The Wesleyans have a chapel here, and in the vicinity is one belonging to the Society of Friends. There are vestiges of a Roman camp.

ADDINGTON, a par. in the hund. and co. of Buckingham, 5 miles to the S.E. of Buckingham, and 2 miles N.W. of Winslow, the nearest post town. A branch of the river Ouse flows by it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £200, in the patron. of J. G. Hubbard, Esq., M.P., who resides at Addington House. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome structure, with a square tower and four bells. In the reign of Edward III. the barony was held by the Molines, who had the power of trying and executing criminals. By one of that family a gallows was erected on the border of the parish, on a spot now called "Gallows Gap."

ADDINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Larkfield, lathe of Aylesford, in the co. of Kent, 3 miles E. of Wrotham and 8 miles to the N.W. of Maidstone. It is situated on a branch of the river Medway. On an eminence near the church, there is a Druidical monument, consisting of a circle of stones similar to Stonehenge, with a smaller circle near it on the north-west. This has been supposed to mark the spot where Catigern, the brother of Vortimer, was buried after the battle of Aegleshorpe, now Aylesford, in which Horsa, the brother of Hengist, was also slain. Copper swords, British coins, and other remains of antiquity have been found here. This parish has one of those singular periodical landsprings, which abound in the eastern part of Kent, called the Nailbourn. It breaks out with great force once every seven or eight years, flowing along a trench dug for it to the Leybourn rivulet. It is said that the trout in the rivulet, at other times white, are turned red by this stream. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £253. The pat. is the Hon. Colonel Stratford, whose seat is at Addington Place. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret, and contains two monumental brasses of the year 1400.

ADDINGTON, a par. in the first div. of the hund. of Wallington, in the co. of Surrey, 3 miles to the S.E. of Croydon, and 13 from London. It is near the London and Brighton railway. William the Conqueror granted a carucate of land here to Tezelin, his cook, to be held by the singular tenure of presenting a mess of pottage to the king at his coronation. The manor of Addington, which now belongs to the primate, is held subject to this condition, and is mentioned in Domesday Survey. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Canterbury, value £206, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is ancient, and contains two brasses of the year 1540. It is dedicated to St. Mary, and has undergone some very extensive repairs. It has a flint tower, containing four bells. The register dates from 1559. There is a national school. Addington Place, near the village, is the seat of the archbishop. It was purchased of Alderman Trecothick in 1807, when the palace at Croydon was sold. Archbishop Sutton enlarged it, and it has been rebuilt by Archbishop Howley. Tradition makes the site a hunting-seat of Henry VIII. There is a fine view from the hills near Addington Common, and urns have been dug up in the tumuli there, which are twenty-five in number, one of them measuring 40 feet in diameter. On the adjoining common, called Thunderfield, there is a circular encampment of two acres, surrounded by a double moat, the history of which is unknown.

ADDINGTON, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Huxloe, in the co. of Northampton, 4 miles to the S.W. of Thrapston, and 1 from Woodford, near a railway station. It is situated on the river Nen, and the Northampton and Peterborough railway passes through it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £420, in the patron. of Mrs. Clay. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Addington House is the principal residence.

ADDINGTON, LITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Huxloe, in the co. of Northampton, 1 mile to the S. of Great Addington. It formed part of the possessions of the monastery of Sulby. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £245, in the patron. of J. Boodle, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Nen and the Northampton canal pass through the parish. There is a small free school, and a Wesleyan chapel. The land is chiefly arable.

ADDLE, or ADEL, a par. in the upper div. of the wap. of Skyrack, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the N.W. of Leeds. It contains the tnshps. of Addle-cum-Eccup and Arthington, with the hmlts. of Breary and Cookridge. The water-works for the supply of Leeds are in this parish. Its ancient name was Adhill. On the moors in the neighbourhood of the village some remains of the Roman Burgodunum still exist. Stones, bearing Latin inscriptions, and portions of urns have been found. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £623, in the patron. of John Murray, Esq. The church, which was built before the commencement of the 12th century, is a very fine example of Norman architecture; it is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There are several charities, including a free school endowed by some person whose name is unknown.

ADDLESTONE, a vil. in the par. of Chertsey, and hund. of Godley, in the co. of Surrey, 1 mile S.E. of Chertsey. It is seated near the river Thames, and is a station on the South Western railway. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £150, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Paul, and was endowed by Miss Winifred Wightwick, of Sandgate. Near this village is the celebrated hill of St. Anne, commanding views of the valley of the Thames as far as Richmond, and the former residence of the late Charles James Fox.

ADDLESTROP, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Slaughter, in the co. of Gloucester, 3 miles E. of Stow-on-the-Wold. It is a station on the North Midland railway. It is in a pleasant situation on the river Evenlode, near Daylesford, and was formerly among the possessions of the abbey of Evesham. The living is a rect. united with Broadwell, in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. It was rebuilt in the year 1764, and owing to some fault in the work, had to be rebuilt a second time the same year. The manor belongs to Lord Leigh, who has his seat at Addlestrop House.

ADDLETHORPE, a par. in the wap. of Candleshoe, in the co. of Lincoln, 9 miles to the N.E. of Spilsby, and very near the sea coast. Boston is the post town. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £72, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The parish charities, which amount to £16 a year, include some cottages for the poor.

ADENEY, a tnshp. in the par of Edgmond, hund. of South Bradford, in the co. of Salop, 1 mile S.W. of Edgmond, and 3 from Newport. It is situated on the Shropshire Union canal. The manor belongs to Lady Tyrwhitt, who is the sole landowner. Bricks and tiles are made here.

ADERRIG, a par. in the bar. of Newcastle, in the co. of Dublin, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles S.W. of Lucan.

ADFORTON, a tnshp. united with those of Stanway, Paytoe, and Grange, in the par. of Leintwardine, hund. of Wigmore, in the co. of Hereford, 7 miles to the S.W. of Ludlow, and 2 miles from the village of Leintwardine, near the confluence of the rivers Teme and Clun, which abound in trout and grayling.

ADGARLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Urswick, hund. of Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the S.W. of Ulverstone. It is situated near the coast of Morecombe Bay.

ADISHAM, a par. in the hund. of Downhamford, in the lathe of St. Augustine, in the co. of Kent, 5 miles to the S.W. of Canterbury. Wingham is the post town. The living is a rect., united with the cur. of Staple, in the dioc. of Canterbury, val., £952. It is in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is in the form of a cross, and is in the early English style. It has a low tower, and is dedicated to the Holy Innocents. A portion of the land in this parish is laid out in hop-grounds. A court leet and court baron are held for this manor. Adhisham Street is a small village half a mile south.

ADLINGFLEET, a par. in the lower div. of the wap. of Osgoldcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 10 miles to the N.E. of Thorne. Howden is the post town. It includes the tnshps. of Eastoft, Fockerby, and Haldenby. It is situated near the confluence of the rivers Trent and Ouse with the Humber. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £330, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. Besides the parish church, which is dedicated to All Saints, there is a new church at the hamlet of Eastoft, which is a perpet. cur., val. £150, in the patron. of Lady Strickland. The charities amount to £69, and include an endowment by Mary Ramsden for apprenticing and educating poor children.

ADLINGTON, a chplry. in the par. of Prestbury, in the hund. of Macclesfield, in the co. palatine of Chester, 5 miles to the N. of Macclesfield. It is situated in a picturesque neighbourhood, on the small river Bollin, and is a station on the Macclesfield branch of the London and North Western railway. The parish contains some coal mines and quarries of flagstone. Silk weaving is the principal employment of the working classes. Adlington Hall is an old seat of the Legh family. During the civil war it was garrisoned for the king, but was taken in Feb. 1645, after a siege of fourteen days, by the forces of the parliament. There is a small chapel in it which received the bishop's licence in the reign of Henry VI.

ADLINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Standish, and hund. of Leyland, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the N. of Wigan. Chorley is the post town. It is near the Preston and Bolton railways, and the Leeds and Liverpool canal. The living is a cur.* in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £150, in the patron. of the rector of Standish. The chief occupation of the people is in the cotton factories. Adlington Hall, the old seat of the Adlingtons, has a pleasant prospect, and contains some valuable pictures.

ADMARSH, or BLEASDALE, a chplry. in the par. of Lancaster, hund. of Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster. Garston is the post town. It is a cur.,* val. £80, in the dioc. of Manchester, and in the patron. of the vicar of Lancaster.

ADMASTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Blithfield, hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 2 miles to the W. of Abbots Bromley.

ADMASTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Wrockwardine, hund. of South Bradford, in Shropshire, 1 mile to the S.W. of Wellington, and half a mile S. from Admaston railway station.

ADMINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Quinton, hund. of Kiftsgate, in the co. of Gloucester, 5 miles to the N.E. of Chipping Campden. Admington House is the principal residence.

ADMISTON, or ATHELAMPTON, a par. in the hund. of Piddletown, in the co. of Dorset, 5 miles to the N.E. of Dorchester. It is situated on the river Piddle, and is pointed out by an uncertain tradition as the seat of the Kings of Wessex. The living is a rect. united with that of Burleston, in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £200, in the patron. of the Earl of Mornington. The church, dedicated to St. John, was originally a chapel of ease to Burleston, and is a plain stone building in the perpendicular style. The register dates from 1693. Admiston Hall is an ancient edifice, built before the year 1503, by Sir W. Martin, whose tomb is in the church.

ADMORGILL, a tnshp. in the par. of Barnoldswick, wap. of Staincliffe and Ewcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N.W. of Colne. It is situated on a branch of the river Ribble, and is united with the township of Brogden.

ADNEY. See ADENEY.

ADPAR, or ATPAR, a town in the par. of Llandyfriog, in the hund. of Troedyraur, in the co. of Cardigan, South Wales, 10 miles to the S.E. of Cardigan. It stands on the north bank of the river Teify, which is here crossed by a stone bridge connecting the town with Newcastle Emlyn. The town is a borough by prescription, and is now, with Newcastle Emlyn, contributory to Cardigan, in returning one member to parliament. Petty sessions are held here. There are markets every month for the sale of cattle. Adpar Hill is an elegant villa.

ADSTOCK, a par. in the hund., union, and co. of Buckingham, 4 miles to the S.E. of Buckingham. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £444, in the patron. of the Rev. J. Hart. The church is dedicated to St. Cecilia, and is a very ancient structure, with square embattled towers and two bells; there are several very handsome windows. In the chancel is a monument to three successive rectors of the same family, named Thomas Egerton, who held the living from 1587 to 1720. Here is also a Wesleyan chapel. During the plague which raged at Buckingham and Winslow in 1665, the market was held in this village.

ADSTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Wentnor, hund. of Purslow, in Shropshire, 4 miles to the W. of Church Stretton. It lies at the foot of the hill named the Long Mynd, and a branch of the river Onny flows through it.

ADSTONE, a chplry. in the par. of Canons Ashby, hund. of Greens Norton, in the co. of Northampton, 7 miles to the N.W. of Towcester. It is at a short distance from a branch of the river Tove. It has a chapel dedicated to All Saints, and a boys' free school, established in 1846. There is also a Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1849.

ADVENT, or ST. ADVEN, a par. in the hund. of Lesnewth, in the co. of Cornwall, 1 mile S. of Camelford. It is bounded on one side by the river Camel, which separates it from Lanteglos. Part of the parish is moorland, having a substratum of granite and felspar. There is a copper mine, but only a few hands are employed in working it. The living is a rect. united with that of Lanteglos, in the dioc. of Exeter. The parish contains Trethym, formerly a seat of the Vivians.

ADVIE, a par. in Scotland, now united with the par. of Cromdale, in the cos. of Inverness and Elgin, 8 miles N.E. of Grantoun, containing the ancient baronies of Advie and Tulchen on the Spey, which anciently belonged to the Earls of Fife, from whom they passed to the Ballendalloch family in the 15th century, and were lately purchased by Brigadier Alexander Grant.

ADWALTON, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Drighlington, and par. of Birstall, in the wap. of Morley, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the S.W. of Leeds. Adwalton Moor was the scene of an engagement in 1642, in which Fairfax and the forces of the parliament suffered defeat by the royalist forces under the Earl of Newcastle. This hmlt. was formerly a market town. Fairs for the sale of horses, cattle, &c., are held on the 26th January, the 26th February, Easter Thursday, and fortnightly on Thursday from Easter till Michaelmas, on the 5th November and the 23rd December.

ADWELL, a par. in the hund. of Lewknor, in the co. of Oxford, 4 miles to the S. of Thame, and 2 miles S.E. of Tetsworth, the post town. It is situated near the Chiltern Hills. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £125, in the patron. of J. W. Birch, Esq. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, and is a small ancient structure with a square tower. Adwell House is the principal residence. Adwell Cop is an ancient entrenchment, said to have been constructed by the Danes.

ADWICK-LE-STREET, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N.W. of Doncaster. It includes the tnshp. of Hampshall with Stubbs. It was situated on the ancient road called Ermine-street. A branch of the river Don passes through the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of York, val. £450, in the patron. of J. Fullerton, Esq., of Thriberg. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a small endowed free school, which was founded by the Rev. W. Hedges. The water of a spring here is valued as a remedy for weak eyes.

ADWICK-UPON-DEARNE, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the S.W. of Adwick-le-street. Rotherham is the post town. It is situated on the river Dearne and the Dearne and Dove canal, and is near the North Midland railway. The living is a cur. united with the vic. of Wath, in the dioc. of York, and in the patron. of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford.

AFFANE, a par. in the bar. of Decies-without-Drum, in the co. of Waterford, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.E. of Lismore. It is situated on the banks of the river Blackwater, which forms its boundary on the south-west, and is here navigable. Its ancient name was Arthmean or Aghmean. In 1564 it was the scene of a battle between the Earls of Desmond and Ormond, in which the latter was defeated. Here was for a long time the chief seat of the Fitzgeraldsde Decies, one of whom entertained here Sir Walter Raleigh. The place is still noted for a fine species of cherry, which was first introduced by Sir Walter, and continues to flourish in the neighbourhood to this day. The old castle was burnt down, and on its site the present noble mansion, Dromana, was erected, now the seat of Lord Stuart de Decies. Affane House and Belleville Park, are the principal seats. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, val. with Aglish, £289. It is in the patron. of the Duke of Devonshire. Fairs are held on the 14th May, the 12th August, and the 22nd November.

AFFLINGTON, a tythg. in the par. and hund. of Corfe Castle, in the co. of Dorset, not far from Corfe Castle.

AFF-PIDDLE, or AFF-PUDDLE, a par. in the hund of Hundred's Barrow, in the co. of Dorset, 8 miles to the N.E. of Dorchester. It was anciently called Aspenhall. In 1849 the livings of Tomers Puddle and Affpiddle were united by order of her Majesty in council. It contains the hmlt. of Pallington and the tythg. of Bryant's Puddle, and is situated on the river Trent. It was formerly a possession of Cerne Abbey. On the summit of Blackdown, a hill between Puddletown and Poole, there are above a hundred large pits, remarkable for holding no water. One of the largest of them has a diameter of 180 feet. Some small tumuli are near them. The living is a vic. with the rect. of Tomers Puddle, in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £210, in the patron. of J. Frampton, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, with nave, chancel, aisles, and a fine decorated embattled tower of the reign of Edward IV. At the dissolution of the monasteries the vicarage was given to Thomas Lyllyington, one of the monks of Arne Abbey, who caused the beautiful carved pulpit and seats to be erected in the nave of the church. There is a small endowed school founded by Milbourne.

AFTON, a vil. in the lib. of West Medina, in the Isle of Wight, in the co. of Southampton, 2 miles S. of Yarmouth. It is situated near Freshwater Bay, at the foot of Afton Down, which has an elevation of 500 feet, and on the summit of which are some tumuli.

AFTON BRIDGEND, a vil. in the par. of New Cumnock, in the co. of Ayr, Scotland. It is situated near New Cumnock on Afton Water, a small river which rises under Black Larghill, flows through Glen Afton, and falls into the Nith. Afton Water is the subject of one of the songs of Burns. The population of the village is small, and a few hands are engaged in the lead mines.

AGAR TOWN, a hmlt. of St. Pancras par., in the hund. of Ossulstone, in the co. of Middlesex, 2 miles to the N.W. of St. Paul's, London. It lies between the Great Northern and North London railways, and the Regent's canal; and was named after its founder, W. Agar, Esq., of Elm Lodge.

AGATON, a small place in the par. of St. Budeaux, in the hund. of Roborough, in the co. of Devon, 4 miles N. of Plymouth railway station, and 4 from Devonport. The soil is strong and loamy, and there is a lead mine in the vicinity.

AGBRIGG, a vil. in the par. of Warmfield, in the wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the E. of Wakefield.

AGBRIGG WAPENTAKE, one of the 9 waps. of the West Riding of the co. of York, is bounded on the north by Morley wap.; on the east by Osgold Cross wap.; on the south by Staun Cross wap.; and on the west by Lancashire and Cheshire. It comprises two divs. the upper and the lower, the latter of which includes the pars. of East and West Ardsley, Methley, Mirfield, Normanton, Rothwell, Sandall-Magna, Thornhill, Wakefield, Wormfield, and part of Batley, of Dewsbury, of Emly, and of Featherstone. The upper div. contains the pars. of Almondbury, Huddersfield, Kirk-Burton, and Kirk-Heaton, with parts of Emley and Rochdale. The wap. contains about 68,090 acres.

AGDEN, a tnshp. in the pars. of Bowdon and Rostherne, in the hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 4 miles S.W. of Altrincham.

AGDEN, a tnshp. in the par. of Malpas, in the hund. of Broxton, in the co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the S.E. of Malpas. It is on the Duke of Bridgewater's canal.

AGGLESTONE, a huge mass of rock, estimated to be of 400 tons weight, lying detached near Studland Bay, in the south-eastern part of Dorsetshire. There is a curious tradition to explain its position. It is said that the devil was desirous of utterly destroying Corfe Castle, and to effect his purpose hurled this rock over from the Isle of Wight. The people name it now the Devil's Nightcap. There are some tumuli near it.

AGGLETHORPE, a tnshp. in the par. of Coverham, in the wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the S.W. of Middleham.

AGHA, or AUGHA, a par. in the bar. of Idrone East, in the co. of Carlow, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, containing part of the market town of Leighlin Bridge. It is situated on the east bank of the river Barrow, on the road from Carlow to Kilkenny. It was the site of an abbey named Achadfinglass, founded at a very remote period by St. Finian, and plundered by the Danes in 861. The land is good and is all under cultivation. Limestone is quarried for burning. The living is a vic. united with Dunleckny. Fairs are held on Easter Monday, on the 14th May, the 23rd September, and the 27th December, for the sale of live stock. Rathwade and Steuart Lodge are the principal residences.

AGHABE, a vil. in the bar. of Upper Massarene, in the co. of Antrim, 2 miles to the N. of Moira.

AGHABOE, or AUGHAVOE, a par. in the bars. of Clandonagh and Clarmallagh, in Queen's County, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, containing the town of Borris-in-Ossory and the vil. of Ballycolla. Its name (originally Achadh-Bho) signifies the "field of an ox," and was derived from the richness of its pastures. A Culdee monastery was founded here in the 6th century by St. Canice, whose reputation for wisdom and piety soon attracted a large number of disciples, and gave origin to a town. A bishopric was soon established and retained here till the close of the 12th century, when it was transferred to Kilkenny. The parish lies in a rich valley between the mountains of Cullahill, on the south east, and the Slieve Bloom hills, on the north-west. The soil is mostly good, but there is a large tract of bog. There are several limestone quarries, and a brown slate is found at Knockarnadh. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £462. The patron. is with the Rev. G. Carr. The church is part of the ancient cathedral, and was enlarged in 1818. Near the church are some remains of a Dominican abbey. There is a large mount north of the church, surrounded by a fosse, and encircled at the summit by a wall; at a distance from this is an old fortification, called the "Rath of Lara," or the "Moat of Monacoghlan." There are some other remains of ancient forts. Fairs are held at Burros eight times in the year, and petty sessions are held weekly at Burros and Cuffsborough by turns.

AGHABOG, a par. in the bar. of Dartree, in the co. of Monaghan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 6 miles to the S.E. of Clones. It contains five lakes, which cover above 200 acres of land, and a tract of bog of somewhat greater extent. The soil is fertile with a substratum of stiff clay. The linen manufacture constitutes the staple employment of the population. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £538, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was erected in 1775.

AGHABULLOGE, or AGHABOLOGUE, a par. in the bar. of East Muskerry, in co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 7 miles N.E. of Macroom. It is pleasantly situated on the Dripsey rivulet, a branch of the river Lee, near the Bograh hills. It contains some lofty hills, and the greater part of the land is bog. The scenery in the glen of Mullinassig is singularly picturesque. Between the fine woods that beautify the sides of the glen the river flows, passing over a fall and entering a lake below. Several energetic proprietors have exerted themselves for the improvement of agriculture, and the reclamation of the waste lands. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £673, in the patron. of the bishop. St. Olan's Well is at a short distance from the church, and in the churchyard is an Ogham stone, called St. Olan's Cap, with inscriptions still legible. It is six feet in height, and of a square form. The people take oaths on it.

AGHACREW, or AUGHACREW, a par. in the lower div. of the bar. of Kilnamanagh in the co. of Tipperary, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 7 miles to the N.E. of Tipperary. The living is a rect. united with the vic. of Toem, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. The people attend divine service at Toem, as there is no church in the parish, nor is there any school. High Park is the principal residence.

AGHACROSS, or AHACROSS, a par. in the bar. of Condons and Clongibbons, in the co. of Cork, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the W. of Mitchellstown. It is situated on the small river Funcheon, at the foot of the Galtee hills, and on the borders of Limerick county. The living is a rect. united with that of Clenore, in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne. The land is principally pasture. Fairs for cattle are held on the 25th January and the 3rd October.

AGHADA, or AHADA, a par. in the bars. of Imokilly and Barrymore, in the co. of Cork, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Cloyne. It comprises the vils. of Upper and Lower Aghada, Farsid, and Whitegate, and is situated on Cork harbour, at a little distance from Cove. Whitegate is a fishing port, and has a small pier, which was erected by subscription. The Cork steamboats call weekly during the summer months. The plaiting of straw and a peculiar kind of grass is carried on here, giving employment to about fifty or sixty women. The land is chiefly arable, the rest pasture, with little waste. Building stone is quarried at Whitegate. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £258, in the patron. of the crown. The church, erected in 1812, is in the village of Aghada, on a hill by the harbour. Aghada House and Whitegate House are the principal residences. There is an endowed school at Whitegate Hill, founded by R. U. Fitzgerald, Esq., in 1827.

AGHADE, a par. in the bar. of Forth, in the co. of Carlow, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Tullow. It is situated on the river Slaney, where the Derreen joins it. The prevailing character of the land is marshy. Limestone and fine granite are procured here. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. with Ballon, £106, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is old, and is situated on a hill. Ballykealy is the chief residence.

AGHADERG, or AGHADERRICK, a par. in the bars. of Upper and Lower Iveagh, in the co. of Down, in the prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 10 miles to the N.E. of Newry. It contains the villages of Loughbrickland, Pointzpass, and Scarva, and has the Newry canal for its western boundary. There are also two lakes, Loughbrickland, and Loughadian. In 1585, Queen Elizabeth granted this place, among other possessions, to Sir Marmaduke Whitchurch. The castle which he erected was demolished by Cromwell's forces, and its site is now occupied by a dwelling-house. There are remains of the camp formed by William III. in 1690, and many Dutch coins are found. The soil is very fertile, mostly arable, a large proportion of the remainder pasture, and some highly valuable bog. Clay-slate for building and repairs of the roads is quarried here. The linen manufacture furnishes occupation to many of the people, who carry on at their houses the weaving of diaper, shirtings, &c. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £234, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was built in 1688. A tower with an octagonal spire has been added to it. There are three Presbyterian chapels in the parish, and one belonging to the Primitive Methodists. There are numerous schools. At a short distance from Loughbrickland stand the "Three Sisters of Greenan," three stones, probably the remains of a cromlech; and there is a very large cairn at Drummillar.

AGHADOE, a par. in the bars. of Dunkerron and Magunihy, in the co. of Kerry, in the prov. of Munster, Ireland, 2 miles to the N. of Killarney. It comprehends part of the town of Killarney and the island of Innisfallen, and is situated on the upper lake of Killarney, on the roads to Tralee and Cork. It was the seat of an ancient bishopric, afterwards consolidated with that of Ardfert. Some ruins of the old cathedral still exist on the low hills by the lake. Part of a round tower stands near them, now named the "pulpit," and a little further off are remains of an ancient castle, called the "bishop's chair." It is said that an abbey was founded here by one of the O'Donoghues, and it is conjectured that the castle was erected by him. The land consists chiefly of rock and bog, with some gravel. Under the management of Lord Headley, the owner of the manor, much has been done to improve the cultivation of the land. Roads have been made, and drains and fences, and good farm-houses have taken the place of the poor huts previously occupied by the tenants. Aghadoe House, Lord Headley's seat, is a beautiful villa in the Italian style, overlooking the lower lake, with plantations covering 100 acres. Grena, on the river Lane, or Laune, is the seat of John O'Connell, Esq.

There are several other seats in the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, val. £391, in the patron. of the bishop.

AGHADOWEY, or AGHADOEY, a par. in the bar. of Coleraine, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 7 miles S.W. of Coleraine. The river Bann forms its boundary on the north-east, into which the Aghadowey rivulet, which intersects the parish, falls at Garvagh Bridge. It contains the villages of Caheny and Meobill. In the 7th century, a cell to the abbey of Agivey was founded here by St. Goarcus. The surface is on the whole barren, but part of it is very fertile. There is much bog, and an abundance of ironstone. About the middle of the last century this place attracted the notice of some linen manufacturers, as affording great advantages for the bleaching trade, and the first bleach-greens were established in 1744. The number has laterly greatly increased, and large quantities of linen are bleached here annually. The pieces are of the kind called "Coleraines." The manufacture of linens is also carried on here, as also that of earthenware, bricks, &c. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, val. £913, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is small but has a handsome tower. It is situated in a valley. Of the seats, which are numerous, may be named Rushbrook, Landmore, Flowerfield, &c.

AGHADOWN, or AUGHADOWN, a par. in the eastern div. of the bar. of Carbery West, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Skibbereen. It is situated on the river Ilen, which is navigable, and communicates with Baltimore harbour, near Cape Clear. It includes the islands of East and West Calf, East and West Innisbeg, Hare, and Scheams. About one-third of the land is rock and bog, the rest is cultivated, and the soil by the river is very fertile. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £272, in the patron. of the bishop. There are ruins of a castle erected in 1495, and of an abbey called the Abbey of Our Lady. Aghadown House stands on high ground, and is surrounded by fine woods. Fairs are held on the 6th May and the 7th October for the sale of cattle, sheep, &c.

AGHADRUMSEE, a chplry. in the bar. and co. of Monaghan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, not far from Clones. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, and in the patron. of the rector.

AGHAGALLON, or AUGHAGALLON, a par. in the bar. of upper Massareene, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 10 miles to the W. of Lisburn. It is situated on the Lagan canal, at its junction with Lough Neagh, which is the western boundary of the parish. About one-third of the area of the parish is covered with the waters of the Lough. The soil is good, and the bog valuable. There is no waste land. Spinning and weaving are the chief occupations of the inhabitants. The living is a vic. united with that of Aghalee, in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore. The church is in ruins.

AGHAGOWER, or AUGHAGOWER, a par. in the bars. of Burrishoole and Murrisk, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles S.E. of Westport. The parish, which extends over an area of 55,048 acres, consists almost entirely of mountain and bog, not more than a tenth part of the land being under cultivation, and the methods of farming are rude. The living is a vic., united with Westport, or Oughaval, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. The church is modern, and has a square tower. A few persons are employed in the linen manufacture. A round tower, and the ruins of Doone Castle, constitute the antiquities of the parish. A monastery was founded here by St. Patrick.

AGHALEE, or AGHANALEE, a par. in the bar. of upper Massareene, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 8 miles to the W. of Lisburn. It has Lough Neagh for its western boundary. The soil is very good and well cultivated, with abundance of limestone, which is sent by canal to Belfast, and slight traces of lead. There is no bog nor waste land in the parish. Weaving of linen and cotton is carried on by the people in their own houses. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val., with those of Aghagallon and Magheramesk, £285, in the patron. of the Marquis of Hertford, whose seat is Portmore House, where Jeremy Taylor once lived.

AGHALOO, or AUGHALOO, a par. in the bar. of Dungannon, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland. It contains the village of Caledon, and is situated on the river Blackwater, which bounds it on the east. The land is fertile and in high cultivation, and the surface is pleasantly diversified with hills and woods. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, value £96, in the patron. of the archdeacon. Caledon Hill is the seat of the Earl of Caledon, and has a wide prospect.

AGHALURCHER, a par. in the bars. of Magherastephana, in the co. of Fermanagh, and Clogher, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland. It is situated on Lough Earne, and the river Colebrook, and includes the towns of Maguire's-bridge and Lisnaskea, extending seventeen miles in length and five miles in breadth. About one-fourth part of the land consists of mountain and bog, with pasture. The rest is moderately fertile, and well cultivated. Good freestone is obtained at Slushill quarry, and there is abundance of limestone and millstone. Farming, spinning, and weaving, employ the inhabitants. The river, which flows through nearly the whole length of the parish, is navigable, and contains pike, perch, trout, and eels in abundance. It is crossed by two bridges, one at the town of Maguire's-bridge, the other, of seven arches, at Balindanaford. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £822, in the patron. of the provost and fellows of Trinity College, Dublin. The old church is in ruins. It was erected in the 9th century, and was dedicated to St. Ronan. Colebrooke is the seat of Sir A. B. Brooke, Bart. The Presbyterians and Primitive Methodists have chapels here, and the Roman Catholics have two. There are remains of several ancient castles, which belonged to the Maguires.

AGHAMORE, or AGHAVOWER, a par. in the bar of Costello, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles N. of Ballyhaunis. A monastery was established here, it is said, by St. Patrick. The parish contains several lakes, and a large tract of bog. The rest is principally under cultivation. Black marble is quarried here. The living is a rect. joined to that of Killultagh, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. The ruins of the old church still exist. Fairs are held on the 3rd June, the 8th August, the 19th October, and the 18th December.

AGHAMORE, a vil. in the bar. of Ballintober, in the co. of Roscommon, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 5 miles N.E. of Strokestown.

AGHANAGH, or AUGHANAGH, a par. in the bar. of Tiraghrill, in the co. of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 5 miles N.W. of Boyle. It is situated on Lough Arrow, and has the Cesh Corran hills on the south. The village of Ballinafad is included in it. More than a thousand acres are covered with water, and a large proportion of the surface is bog and mountain. A good limestone, very much like marble, is quarried here, and used for building-stone. The living is a vic. united with that of Boyle, in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin. Hollybrook, the principal seat, stands by the lough in a pleasant situation, and has well wooded grounds. An abbey once existed here, of which there are still remains.

AGHANCON, a par. in the bars. of Ballybritt and Clonlisk, in King's County, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles N. of Roserea. It is near the Slieve Bloom hills. The soil is not very good. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Killaloe, Kilfenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh, val. £112, in the patron. of the bishop. There is some bog in the parish, and a mineral spring. Ruins of Ballybritt Castle exist.

AGHANLOO, or AGHANLOE, a par. in the bar. of Keenaght, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N. of Newtonlimavady. It is situated on the river Roe and Lough Foyle, into which the Roe flows, at the foot of the mountain Ben Evenagh. This mountain, which is of basalt, rises to the height of 1,260 feet, and was one of the points selected for the measurements under the Ordnance survey. The soil is mostly fertile and well cultivated. There is abundance of limestone found under the basalt throughout the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, val. £296, in the patron. of the bishop. Here are ruins of Bally Castle, which was built in 1619 by the London Haberdashers' Company, for the defence of the territory allotted to them on the plantation of Ulster.

AGHANUNSHIN, or AUGHANUNCHON, a par. in the bar. of Kilmacrenan, in the co. of Donegal, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the N.E. of Letterkenny. It lies at the upper end of Lough Swilly. The soil is fertile. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, val. £362, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is old and dilapidated.

AGHARNEY. See ARARNEY.

AGHARRA, a par. in the bar. of Shrule, in the co. of Longford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the N.E. of Ballymahon. It is near the royal canal, and has some tracts of bog. The living is a vic. united with the rect. of Kilglass, in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardah, and Elphin.

AGHAVALLEN, or AGHAVALAH, a par. in the bar. of Iraghticonnor, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 6 miles to the S.W. of Tarbert. It is situated on the river Shannon, near the road from Tralee to Limerick, and includes the village of Ballylongford and Carrigafoyle Island. The O'Connors had a castle here, which was their principal seat, the bastions and part of the wall of which are still remaining. The barony and castle were forfeited by them in 1666, and were settled upon Trinity College, Dublin. Two-thirds of the land are arable, the rest is mountain, with pasture and bog. A brown building-stone is obtained here. A large traffic in potatoes and turf, oyster dredging, and fishing are the chief employments of the people. The living is an impropriate vicarage. There are several pleasant seats in the parish.

AGHAVEA, or AUGHAVEA, a par. in the bar. of Maghera-stephana, in the co. of Fermanagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland. It includes the town of Brookeborough, and is situated on the river Colebrook, near Maguire's-bridge. One fourth of the land is mountain and bog, yielding pasturage and fuel, the rest is mostly under cultivation. A good building-stone is quarried here. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £300, in the patron. of the bishop. Nutfield is the residence of Lady Brooke; Abbey Lodge, of J. Macartney, Esq.; and there are several other seats. The Wesleyans have a chapel at Brookeborough.

AGHAVILLER, or AUGHAVILLER, a par. in the bar. of Knocktopher, in the co. of Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.W. of Knocktopher. It contains the vils. of Boolyglass and Hugginstown. A large part of the parish is moorland. There is a quarry of freestone. The living is a rect. joined with that of Knocktopher, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. Castle Morris is the principal seat. Part of a round tower remains near this mansion, almost on the spot where the old church stood.

AGHER, a par. in the bars. of Upper and Lower Deece, in the co. of Meath, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles S.W. of Summerhill. The Royal canal passes near it on the south, and the parish of Laracor intersects it, the separate parts being named Ager and Ginnets. It has a hilly surface, and the soil is generally good. There is some bog, and a large proportion of pasture. Limestone is obtained. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Meath, val. £104, in the patron. of the crown. The church was built in 1804, partly by subscription, and partly by a rate on the parish. A stained window which was formerly in the private chapel of the Wellesleys, at Dangan, was presented by them to this church. It is painted by Gervaise, and is copied from the cartoon of Raphael, representing Paul preaching at Athens. Agher House is pleasantly situated on a large and well-wooded estate.

AGHERN, or AHERN, a par. in the bar. of Kinnatalloon, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the E. of Rathcormack. It lies on the road from Cork to Tullow, and the river Bride flows through it. The land is mostly good and under cultivation, with about 400 acres of bog, and 200 acres of mountain. There is a police station, and petty sessions are held once a month. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne, val., with the rect. of Britway, to which it is united, £365, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was built in 1817, and stands near the bridge. There are interesting ruins of the castle built by the Fitzgeralds at the close of the 14th century, to defend the passage of the river. It was a place of considerable strength. The Bride is crossed by a stone bridge of three arches. Aghern House stands near the old castle, and has beautiful grounds.

AGHERTON, or BALLYAGHRAN, a par. in the lib. of Coleraine, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.W. of Coleraine. It is situated on the river Bann, near the coast of the Atlantic, and includes the promontory between the river and the ocean, with the watering-place of Port-Stewart. Nearly the whole surface is under tillage, and fertile; a small part forms a rabbit-warren, and the rest is pasture land. Trap-rock and basalt lie beneath, and some iron ore and coal have been found. The linen manufacture gives employment to a few of the inhabitants, and many hands are engaged in the Bann salmon fishery. By this river Lough Neagh discharges itself into the Atlantic. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £399, in the patron. of the bishop. J. Cromie, Esq., the principal proprietor, and lord of the manor, resides at Cromore, a fine seat, with extensive plantations. There are several other seats. The early years of Dr. Adam Clarke were spent in this parish, and he frequently revisited it in his latter years. A dial is preserved which he erected in the grounds of Mr. Cromie. Here are ruins of a castle, and of the old church, and several caves.

AGHIART, or BALLINAKILTY, a par. in the bar. of Killian, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 5 miles to the N. of Castle-Blakeney. The soil is good, and well tilled. There is some reclaimable bog. The living is a rect. united with that of Moylough, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. Mount Bellew is the principal seat.

AGHINAGH, or AHINAGH, a par. in the bar. of East Muskerry, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 1 mile to the S.E. of Macroom. It is situated on the river Lee, and has remains of ancient forts, one belonging to the Macartheys, named Carrigadrohig, and one to the Mac Sweeneys, named Mashanaglass. The soil is generally fertile, with some bog, and stone quarries. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne, val. £630, in the patron. of the bishop. There is an old bridge at Carrigadrigoh, which was erected by Cromwell's order. Near the castle of Mashanaglass there is a wild glen called Glen Laum, and there are several Danish forts.

AGHMACART, AGHAMACART, or AUGHAMACART, a par. in the bar. of Clarmallagh, in Queen's County prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles S.W. of Castle Durrow. A priory of the Augustine order was established here, in the 6th century, of which there are still remains. There are also ruins of an ancient castle. The land is fertile, with some mountain waste. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val., with those of Cahir and Killeen, £210, in the patron. of the Ladies G. and F. Fitzpatrick, of Aghmacart Cottage. The priory was the burial-place of the Fitzpatricks, princes of Ossory.

AGHNAMADLE, or AGHNAMEADLE, a par. in the bar. of Upper Ormond, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S. of Monygall. It contains the town of Toomyvara, and is situated at the foot of the Devil's Bit hills. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Killaloe, Kilfenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh, val. £319, in the patron. of the bishop. Here are the ruins of Aghnamadle Court, the old seat of the O'Egans, the remains of Blane Castle, and the ancient church.

AGHNAMOLT. See ANNAMULT.

AGHNAMULLIN, or AUGHNAMULLEN, a par. in the bar. of Cremorne, in the co. of Monaghan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S. of Ballybay. It includes the vil. of Ballytrain. There are many lakes in the parish, the principal being Loughs Eagish, Avean, Chantinee, and Ballytrain. A large part of the land is mountain and bog. Crieve Hill, also called Bunnaninnna, rises to the height of 886 feet, and is six miles in circuit. Lead and slate have been found. Numerous bleaching-mills have been erected on a stream flowing from Lough Eagish, which lies S.E. of Crieve Hill, to Ballybay Water. A large number of persons are employed in the flax-mills at Crieve and Laragh. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £839, in the patron. of the bishop. There are many seats in the parish, the chief of which are Mountain Lodge, Lough Bawn, Chantinee, &c.

AGHOWLE, AGHOLD, or AGH-UAILL, a par. in the bar. of Shillelagh, in the co. of Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the N.W. of Carnew. Much of the surface is mountain and bog. Here is a police station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. The living is a rect. united with the vics. of Mullinacuff, Crecrin, and Lisselman, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £600, in the patron. of the bishop. There was formerly a monastery in this place, of which there are some ruins. Stone crosses are also to be found here.

AGIVEY, a par. in the bar. of Coleraine, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 7 miles to the S.E. of Coleraine. It is situated on the river Bann, where the Agivey rivulet joins it, after a course of 12 miles from Carntogher, where it rises. It was formerly a grange or ext. par. district, contained within the parish of Aghadowey, and formed part of the possessions of the London Ironmongers' Company. In 1834, a light wooden bridge, of 6 arches, and 203 feet in length, was erected over the Bann, over which is carried the road from Newtown Lamagavy to Ballymony. A few remains exist of an ancient religious house, founded here at the commencement of the 7th century; and a cemetery, with tombs of the Cannings. The soil is fertile, but not well cultivated. Coarse earthenware is made from clay found here. Ironstone, and traces of coal and lead, are also found. There is no church nor chapel. A cattle fair is held on the 12th November, under a very ancient charter, granted to the monks of Coleraine.

AGLIONBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Warwick, in the ward and co. of Cumberland, 3 miles to the E. of Carlisle.

AGLISH, a par. in the bar. of East Muskerry, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 10 miles to the S.W. of Cork. It lies between the rivers Lee and Bride, the former flowing north, and the latter south of it. The land is good, mostly arable, with a large extent of pasture, and some woodland and bog. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne, val. £265, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is in ruins. A police station is established here. The par. contains 6,771 acres. The Irish word eglish, or eglish, signifies a church, and is derived from the Greek, ecclesia. There are similar forms in the Gaelic and Welsh.

AGLISH, a par. in the bar. of Magunihy, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the N.W. of Killarney. It is situated on the river Lane. Most of the land is very good, and well tilled. There is some bog, and a quarry of good building-stone. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, val. £95, in the patron. of the Earl of Cork. The ivy-covered ruins of the old church adjoin the new one, which was built in 1822.

AGLISH, or AGLISHMARTIN, a par. in the bar. of Iverk, in the co. of Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the W. of Waterford. It is situated on the river Suir. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £98, in the patron. of the crown. There is no church. Grandison Castle is in this parish, which was erected by the Butlers.

AGLISH, a par. in the bar. of Carra, in the co of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland. It contains the market town of Castlebar. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, united with Breaty and 3 others, val. £665, in the patron. of the bishop. See CASTLEBAR.

AGLISH, a par. in the bar. of Decies-within-Drum, in the co. of Waterford, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S. of Cappoquin. It contains the village of Villierstown, and is bounded on the west by the river Blackwater. The land is generally good, but there is a large surface of waste, and also of bog. The living is a vic. included in the union of Affane, in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore. There is an endowed chapel at Villierstown, and several schools are in the parish. Here are remains of Bewley Abbey, and of a fort erected by King John.

AGLISHCLOGHANE, a par. in the bar. of Lower Ormond, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.E. of Borrisokane. It lies at the upper end of Lough Derg. It contains much bog and waste land, with limestone of good quality, for building purposes. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Killaloe, Kilfenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh, and is held by the Archdeacon of Killaloe, with whom is also the patron. of the perpet. cur.

AGLISHCORMICK, or LISCORMUCK, a par. in the bars. of Clanwilliam and Coonagh, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 2 miles to the S.W. of Pallas Grean. The living is a rect. forming part of the union of Ballybrood, in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore. The old parish church is in ruins.

AGLISHDRINAGH, or AGLISHDRIDEEN, a par. in the bar. of Orrery and Kilmore, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.W. of Charleville. The land is good, partly arable, but chiefly hilly pasture. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne, val. £224, in the patron. of the bishop. There is no church, only some slight traces of the ancient one.

AGMONDESHAM, Buckinghamshire and Hertfordshire. See AMERSHAM.

AGNES, ST., or ST. ANN'S, a par. and market town in the hund. of Pyder, in the co. of Cornwall, 8 miles N.N.W. of Truro, and 267 miles from London. Its ancient name was Broanick. It is situated on the coast of the Bristol Channel, in the midst of scenery wild and picturesque. It is the centre of a very rich and important mining district. The houses are mostly cottages, and their inhabitants workers in the mines. The prevailing character of the rocks is granitic, and they are rich in minerals. At one time, tin was the only mineral obtained here. It was this metal for which the Phœnician traders visited this part of the coast, before the Christian era. The principal mine, after yielding a very large supply, is at length exhausted. Copper is now the chief product of the mines. The principal mine, which is named Wheal Towan or Huel Towan ("Huel" signifying a work or pit), is 150 fathoms in depth, and is worked by 800 men. Others are named South Wheal Towan, Wheal Charles, West Pink, and Polperro, the last two being tin mines, and Polperro, the exhausted one. There is a pier-harbour, capable of holding eight or ten small vessels, which can only enter it at high water. It was formed in 1794, and has been enlarged and improved since. It is a sub-port of St. Ives. There is a large traffic with Ireland and Wales in slate and coal. Some hands are engaged in the pilchard fishery, which was commenced in 1802. St. Agnes' beacon is formed from an ancient British cairn, called Carn Brunnach, and consists of a mass of schist-ore, felspar, and quartz. It is situated on the summit of a rock, rising 621 feet above the level of the sea. During the French revolutionary war, this beacon was always held in readiness to transmit the tidings of invasion constantly expected. The rock on which it stands, was an important centre of observation and measurement, in the trigonometrical survey of these islands. There are shell beds of recent origin, lying 20 feet above high-water mark, at St. Agnes Head. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £280, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, which is dedicated to St. Agnes, is built of granite; it consists of a nave and chancel, with a spire and bells. The chapelries of Mithian and Mounthawke are formed in part out of the parish of Perranzabuloe; and there once existed a chapel at Dingle Combe, near to the seaside. There is also a chapel of ease in the hamlet of Mounthawke. The Independents and Wesleyans have chapels here, and there are a mechanics' institute, national schools, Odd Fellows' lodge, and Tradesmen's club. St. Agnes' Well, famed for miraculous efficacy, is in a dell, near a ruined chapel. This parish was the birthplace of the painter Opie. The market is held on Thursday, and a fair on the 30th April.

AGNES, ST., the southernmost of the Scilly Islands, on the western coast of Cornwall, about 1 mile in length, and half a mile in breadth. A lighthouse, 50 feet in height, with a revolving light of Argand lamps and reflectors, seen all round once a minute, has been erected on one of the highest points of the island. It is an important mark for seamen, and is visible to a distance of 16 miles. It was first established by Adam Walker, in the year 1680. The Gilstone Rock, where Sir Cloudesley Shovel was lost, in 1707, lies a little westward of this island. The island comprises an area of nearly 550 acres, and in 1851 had 204 inhabitants. The church of St. Agnes is a small, plain edifice, containing a nave, one aisle, chancel, and transept. The clergyman is appointed by A. Smith, Esq., lord proprietor of the isles. There is an infant school, and a meeting-house of the Bible Christians.

AHACROSS. See AGHACROSS.

AHAMLISH, or AHAMPLISH, a par. in the bar. of Lower Carbery, in the co. of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 9 miles to the N. of Sligo. It includes the vils. of Ballintemple, Grange, and Kilkilloge, and the islands of Innismurray and Dhernish, and is situated near the entrance to the bay of Sligo. Lord Palmerston is proprietor of almost the whole parish, which extends over an area of about 16,414 acres, and under his directions much of the bog has been reclaimed, and great improvements have been made. Limestone is quarried at the hill, Ben Albin, which lies between this parish and Drumcliffe. The fisheries, especially the salmon fishery, in the river Bunduff, form an important part of the occupations of the inhabitants. There is a coast-guard and police station at Grange. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. £92, in the patron. of the Bishop of Kilmore. There are three schools, chiefly supported by Lord Palmerston, besides several private schools.

AHAPHOND, or AHAPHONA, a vil. in the bar. of Iraghticonnor, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 8 miles to the S.W. of Ballylongford.

AHARA, Longford. See AGHARRA.

AHARACLE, or ACHARACLE, an ecclesiastical subdivision of the par. of Ardnamurchan, in the cos. of Inverness and Argyll, 7 miles to the S.W. of Arisaig. It is situated near the coast, and comprises the islands of Shonaveg, Portavata, and Shona. The living is in the presb. of Mull, and in the patron. of the crown.

AHARNEY, AGHARNEY, or LISDOWNEY, a par. in the bars. of Galmoy, in the co. of Kilkenny, and Clarmallagh, in Queen's County, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles N.W. of Ballyragget. It is situated on the river Nore. The land is partly arable, and partly pasture, with abundance of limestone, which is used both for building and burning. There are large corn-mills at Ballyconra and at Ballyragget. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val., with the vic. of Athanagh, £289, in the patron. of the crown. Ballyconra, a fine ancient seat on the banks of the Nore, is the residence of the Hon. Col. Butler.

AHASCRAGH, a par. and market-town in the several bars. of Clonmacknowen, Killian, and Kilconnel, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 33 miles to the N.W. of Galway, and 99 miles from Dublin. It is situated in a fertile corn district, on the Ahascragh rivulet, which falls into the river Suck, at Ballinasloe. It contains a large extent of bog, and quarries of good limestone. It has a police station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. £278, the patron. being with the crown and the bishop alternately. An abbey once stood here, which was founded by St. Cuan. The principal seats are—Clonbrock, partly in this parish, the seat of Lord Clonbrock; Castlegar, that of the Mahons; Castle French, of Lord French; &c. Fairs are held here on Easter Monday, Trinity Monday, the 25th August, and the 24th November.

AHINAGH, Cork. See AGHINAGH.

AHOGHILL, a par. in the bars. of Lower Antrim, Kilconway, Upper and Lower Toome, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.W. of Ballymena. Its old name was Maghrahoghill. From the remains of forts, many barrows, and bones, found here, it is believed to have been, in remote times, the scene of many severe conflicts. It is situated on the rivers Bann and Maine, the former of which has a northerly course, from Lough Neagh; and the latter a southerly course, and falls into that lake. Portglenone, formerly a part of this parish, was made a separate parish in 1825. The villages of Carnearny, Cullybrackey, Galgorm, and Gracehill, are still included in it. The parish, which extends over an area of 35,288 acres, has a great variety of soil. Part is hilly, and the valley of the Maine picturesque. There are extensive bogs. The linen manufacture is carried on, and employs most of the workpeople. Bleachfields are established on the Maine. A linen market is held once a month. Cattle fairs take place on the 4th June, the 26th August, the 12th October, and the 5th December. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £968, in the patron. of the crown. Galgorm Castle, built by Dr. Colville, is the seat of the Earl of Mountcashel. There are several other seats in the parish and neighbourhood. Serious outrages were committed here, in 1771, by the "Steel Men," and volunteers were organised to resist them.

AIGAS, or EILEAN-AIGA, a beautiful island in the par. of Kilmorack, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, 5 miles S.W. of the town of Beanly, and about 3 from the celebrated falls of Kilmorack. It is only about a mile and a half in circumference, surrounded by the waters of the Beanly, which here divides into two branches, but is richly covered in wood, and is much frequented by roes, and occasionally by red deer. It was to this island retreat that Lord Lovat retired in 1697 with the dowager Lady Lovat, to escape the fiery indignation which had gone forth against him; and here reside at present, in Lord Lovat's castle, the only descendants of Prince Charles Edward Stuart.

AIGBURTH, ST. ANNE, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Garston, par. of Childwall, and hund. of west Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the S.E. of Liverpool. It is on the river Mersey. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Chester, in the patron. of trustees. Aigburth Hall is the chief residence.

AIGHTON, or OVERHACKING, a hmlt. in the par. of Mitton, hund. of Blackburn, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the S.W. of Clitheroe. It includes the hamlets of Bailey and Chaigley. It is situated on the Mersey, near Longridge Fell. The Roman Catholic College of Stonyhurst is in this hamlet. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton manufacture. There is a free school, and some almshouses.

AIKBAR, or AKEBAR, a tnshp. in the par. of Finghall, wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the E. of Leyburn. The tnshp. contains 750 acres.

AIKE, a tnshp. in the pars. of Lockington and St. John, in the borough of Beverley, wap. of Harthill, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the N.E. of Beverley. It is near the river Hull. The tnshp. contains 630 acres.

AIKTON, West Riding of Yorkshire. See ACTON.

AIKTON, a par. in the ward of Cumberland, in the co. of Cumberland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Wigton, and 9 W. by S. from Carlisle. It is situated near the river Wampool, and includes the several tnshps. of Aikton, Bigland with Ganelsby, Wampool, and Wiggonby. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £546, in the patron. of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew, and is a small ancient structure. The parochial charities amount to £179, the whole of which, with the exception of £3, the endowment of Watson's school, belongs to the grammar school of Wiggonby, which was founded in 1792 by Margaret Hodgson.

AILBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Rigsby, hund. of Calceworth, in the co. of Lincoln, 1 mile to the N.W. of Alford. It is supposed by some that a monastery once existed here.

AILESWORTH, a hmlt. in the par. of Castor and lib. of Peterborough, in the co. of Northampton, 5½ miles to the W. of Peterborough. The river Nen passes near it. The land is principally arable.

AILEY, a vil. in the hund. of Huntingdon, in the co. of Hereford, 5 miles to the W. of Weobley.

AILSA, or AILSA CRAIG, a remarkable rock on the coast of Scotland, also named the Perch of Clyde. It is included in the parish of Duilly, in Ayrshire, and lies at the distance of 8 miles from the coast. Its circumference is 2 miles, and it rises to the height of 1,098 feet above the sea, having an elliptical base of 3,300 feet in the major, and 2,200 in the minor axis. It is a mass of columnar syenitic trap, and assumes the form of a cone, when looked at from the N. Its sides slope rapidly, and on the N.W. strike perpendicularly into the sea. Only at one point has a small beach been formed. In some parts the columnar structure appears, the columns having a thickness of 6 feet, and a height of 100 feet. They are of much larger size than those of Staffa. The island has abundant vegetation, and swarms with sea-fowl, goats, and rabbits. The gannets build on the flat tops of the columns, whose fracture is perpendicular to their length. On the summit of the rock are the remains of an old castle. A little below the summit are two springs, one of which has formed a little marsh-land round it, with plants of most luxuriant growth. The family of Kennedys, of Culzean, to whom the island belongs, take from it the title of marquis and baron. Its name and stern character have passed into the proverbial phrase, "Deaf as Ailsa Craig."

AILSTOW, a vil. in the par. of Atherston-on-Stour, hund. of Kington, in the co. of Warwick, lying 3 miles to the S. of Stratford-on-Avon.

AILWELL, a hmlt. 1 mile N.W. of the vil. of Gedling, in the south hund. of Thurgarton, in the co. of Nottingham, and 4 miles N.E. from Nottingham, pleasantly situated near the vale of the Trent, and a short distance from the Midland railway.

AINSTABLE a par. in Leath ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 10 miles to the N.E. of Penrith. It is divided into two tnshps., called the High and Low Quarters, and includes the hmlt. of Ruckcroft. It is situated on a very pleasant spot on the river Eden, which bounds it on the west, and the Croglin which flows by it on the eastern and southern sides. The scenery, especially in the valley of the Croglin, is beautiful and picturesque, and its natural charm is increased by the construction of cascades and agreeable walks on the banks of the river, adjoining the grounds of the mansion named Nunnery, which stands on the site of the nunnery of Armathwaite, founded by William Rufus, belonging to the Benedictine order. The only remnant of the nunnery is a stone pillar inscribed with a cross, and the words "Sanctuarum, 1088." The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £225, in the patron. of the representatives of Mrs. Aglionby. The church is an ancient building, in the Norman style, and has been repaired since 1815. It is dedicated to St. Michael, and contains the tomb of John de Dentoren. This parish was the birthplace of Dr. Leake, founder of the Lying-in Hospital at Westminster. There is abundance of freestone, and a chalybeate spring. The new vicarage was erected in 1855. The Earl of Carlisle holds his manorial court here annually.

AINSTY, a distinct jurisdiction, contiguous to the city of York, on the western side, and formerly deemed one of the waps. of the West Riding of Yorkshire, which it was again made in 1837. It is bounded on the E. by the East Riding and the city of York; on the N. by the North Riding; on the W. by the Claro wapentakes; on the S. by the wapentake of Barkstone Ash. It contains the pars. of Acaster-Malbis, Acomb, Askham-Bryan and Richard, Bilborough, Bilton, Bishopthorpe, Bolton Percy, Healaugh, Long-Marston, Moor-Monkton, Nether-Poppleton, Rufforth, Thorpe-Arch, Walton, and Wighill, with parts of Holy Trinity in Micklegate, Kirk Hammerton, St. Mary Bishophill Senior and Junior, Stillingfleet, and Tadcaster. AINTREE, a tnshp. in the par. of Sephton, and hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 6 miles to the N.E. of Liverpool. It is situated on the Leeds canal and the river Alt, and is a station on the Southport branch of the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Chester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a racecourse and large stand in the township.

AINTREE, a hmlt. in the par. of Stanton Lacy, in the hund. of Munslow, in the co. of Salop, 3 miles N.W. of Ludlow.

AIR, or AYRE POINT, at the mouth of the river Dee, on its western side, in the co. of Flint, North Wales. It is an important landmark for sailors, having a lighthouse 42 feet in height, with a fixed red light. The lighthouse was erected in 1844, and is supported on piles.

AIRD, a hmlt. in the par. of Inch, in the co. of Wigton, Scotland, 2 miles to the E. of Stranraer. Its name signifies a peninsula or headland. It is not far from Loch Ryan.

AIRD, CASTLE OF, in the island of Arran, in the co. of Kintyre, Scotland. This extensive ruin is supposed to have been the work of the Danes, and is situated on a promontory a little to the north of Caradell Point.

AIRDRIE, a market town and parliamentary burgh in the par. of New Monkland, Middle Ward, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, 10 miles to the E. of Glasgow, and 32 miles S.W. from Edinburgh. It is situated on the great road between those towns, and on the Airdrie railway and the Monkland canal. It is also near the river Calder and the Caledonian railway. It is a place of great antiquity. Its British name was Arderyth, and it was the scene of a battle in 577, between Ryderech, King of Strath Clyde, and Aidan, the perfidious King of Kintyre, in which the latter was defeated, and Givendolan, the patron of Merlin, who was also engaged in the battle, slain. Its recent growth and present importance and prosperity are due to its position on the great coal field of Scotland, and the "black band" ironstone peculiar to this district. About a hundred years ago a farm-house or two stood here alone, and now it is a town of twelve or thirteen thousand inhabitants. It was constituted a borough of barony in 1821, and contains four quoad sacra parishes. By a special act passed in 1849, it acquired all requisite powers for its municipal government, and for all matters of police. It is also a parliamentary borough, united with Falkirk, and is governed by a provost, three bailies, twelve councillors, &c., and its revenue amounted, in 1852, to £1,665 16*s*. 7*d*. The town consists chiefly of one long street, with side streets and lanes. It is regularly built and lighted with gas. A large number of the people are employed in the neighbouring collieries, and the Calder and other iron works. The cotton manufacture and the distillation of spirits also form important parts of the occupation of the place. The canal communicates with the Forth and Clyde canal, and is connected with the collieries and iron-works by railways. There are three churches, East Church, West Church, and High Church, all in the presb. of Hamilton; the livings of East Church and High Church being in the patron. of the heads of families, and that of West Church, val. £105, in the patron. of the male communicants. There are four places of worship for the Free Church, two each for United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics, and one each for Reformed Presbyterians, Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. There is a new town-house, which is a very neat structure, containing a good townhall, a prison, and police office. The principal school, called the Academy, is a neat edifice, built by R. S. C. Alexander, Esq., of Airdrie House. There are several good schools, a mechanics' institution, and three banks, two savings-banks, and offices of ten insurance companies. Airdrie House is situated in beautiful grounds west of the town. There are many pleasant modern residences in the environs. The market is held on Tuesday and Saturday, and fairs take place on the second Tuesday in February, the last Tuesday in May, the fourth Tuesday in August, and the third Tuesday in November. There is a mineral spring at Monkland Well.

AIRDRIE, CASTLE, in the par. of Crail, in the co. of Fife, Scotland, situated on a wooded height 2½ miles from the sea. It comprises an ancient tower, which commands a panoramic view of the rocky shores of the Frith of Forth, and the whole east coast of Scotland from St. Abb's Head to the Bell-Rock Lighthouse. This estate, which belonged in the 15th century to the family of Lumsden, became the property of the late Methven Erskine, Esq., afterwards Earl of Kellie, who died here in 1830.

AIRD'S MOSS, a large tract of elevated moorland, or morass, extending over about 10 square miles, in the district of Kyle, in Ayrshire, Scotland, 3 miles to the N. of Cumnock. A profound interest attaches itself to the spot, for here, in 1680, the covenanter Richard Cameron and a party of his friends were slaughtered by dragoons. "Cameron Stone," as the people call it, a large flat stone, with an inscription to their memory and words of pious cheer, at a little distance from the highway, formerly marked the spot where the fiercest struggle took place; but it has long disappeared, and been replaced by a modern structure. It was one of the simple monuments that aroused the enthusiasm and exercised the patience and skill of "Old Mortality."

AIRD, THE, a hmlt. in the par. of Stornoway, in the island of Lewes and co. of Ross, Scotland. It is situated on a peninsula of the same name, and was formerly called Uig. The old chapel is in ruins, so that the inhabitants now attend the government chapel at Knock.

AIRLIE, or AIRLY, a par. in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Kirriemuir. It is situated partly among the Grampian hills, and in the Valley of Strathmore, and is watered by the rivers Isla and Dean. It was formerly a moss, but is now cultivated and fertile. The Castle of Airlie, the seat of the Ogilvies, Earls of Airlie, stands at the confluence of the Isla and Melgum, on the site of the old castle, the "Bonnie House of Airlie," which was destroyed in 1640. The rocks, with their trees and streams and glens, make a scene of rare and striking beauty. There are some ruins of Balrie Castle, the seat of the last Viscount Fenton. The living is in the presb. of Meigle, val. £219, in the patron. of the Earl of Strathmore.

AIRNTULLY, a vil. in the par. of Kinclaven, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 8 miles to the N. of the city of Perth.

AIRSHOLME, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Linthorpe, par. of Middlesborough and lib. of Langbaurgh, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the E. of Stockton. The river Tees passes within a short distance of the hamlet.

AIRTH, a par. in the co. of Stirling, Scotland, 5 miles to the N. of Falkirk. It stands at the junction of the river Pow with the Frith of Forth, on the south bank of the Forth, and contains the vil. of Dunmore. The par. extends over an area of about 16,400 acres. A large part of it was formerly moss or peat, which has been removed, and the land is now well cultivated and wooded. At Airth Hill and Dunmore, coal and stone are obtained. There are two ferries across the Forth to Alloa and other places in the county of Fife. Some small vessels are engaged in the coasting trade, and there is a prosperous salmon fishery. The living is in the presb. of Stirling, val. £282, in the patron. of Graham of Airth Castle. The parish contains three ancient towers. One is called Wallace's Tower, and is in the grounds of Airth Castle. Wallace is said to have got secretly into this tower, and surprised and slain the garrison of a hundred men with their captain. Dunmore House is the seat of the Earl of Dunmore. In 1745 the shipping in this port was burnt by the rebels.

AIRTHRIE, or AIRTHSAY WELLS, a hmlt. in the vil. of Causeyhead, in the cos. of Stirling and Clackmannan, Scotland, 2 miles to the N.E. of Stirling, situated among the skirts of the Ochill hills. It has a mineral spring which has become celebrated and is much frequented. Airthrie Castle, near the loch, is the seat of Lord Abercromby. Some traces of copper have been found here.

AIRTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirkby-in-Malhamdale, in the wap. of Staincliffe and Ewcross, West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the S.E. of Settle. It is situated on the river Aire. The twist manufacture is carried on here. There is an endowed free school. The tnshp. contains about 2,790 acres.

AISBY, a hmlt. in the par. and wap. of Corringham, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the N.E. of Gainsborough.

AISBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Haydor, in the co. of Lincoln, 5 miles to the N.W. of Folkingham.

AISHOLT, or ASHOLT, a par. in the hund. of Cannington, in the co. of Somerset, 7 miles to the S.W. of Bridgwater. It includes the hmlt. of Lower Aisholt. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £280, in the patron. of the Rev. J. West, the incumbent. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

AISHOLT, LOWER, a hmlt. in the par. of Aisholt, hund. of Cannington, in the co. of Somerset, close to Aisholt.

AISKEW, or ASKEW, a tnshp. in the par. of Bedale, in the wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 1 mile to the N.E. of Bedale. The Bedale and Leyburn branch of the North Eastern railway crosses this tnshp. It contains the hmlt. of Little Leeming, and is situated on Leeming Lane and a branch of the river Swale. There is a small free school. The Roman Catholics have a chapel here, and the Baptists have two.

AISLABY, a tnshp. in the par. of Eaglescliffe, Stockton ward, in the co. palatine of Durham, 5 miles to the S.W. of Stockton. It is on the river Tees, and near the Stockton and Darlington railway. Aislaby House was for a long time the seat of the Pemhertons.

AISLABY, a tnshp. in the par. of Middleton, lythe of Pickering, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N.W. of Pickering, and near the Whitby railway.

AISLABY, a chplry. in the par. of Whitby and lib. of Langbaurgh, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the S.W. of Whitby. The river Esk and the Whitby branch of the North Eastern railway pass through it. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of York, val. 487, in the patron. of Mrs. Boulby. There is a small endowment for the benefit of the poor, amounting to £11 a year. The stone used in the building of Whitby Abbey, the docks at Sheerness, and St. Katherine's Docks, was obtained from Bolton's limestone quarry in this place.

AISMUNDERBY, a tnshp. united with Bondgate, in the par. and lib. of Ripon, in the West Riding of the co. of York, near the city of Ripon.

AISTHORPE, or EAST THORPE, a par. in the wap. of Lawress, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the N.W. of Lincoln. It is situated on the Wolds, near the ancient British road called Ermine Street. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. with the vic. of West Thorpe, which is annexed to it, £289, in the patron. of J. Milnes, Esq., who resides at Aisthorpe Hall. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

AITHSTING, a par. united with Sandsting, in Mainland, the principal of the Shetland Isles, 15 miles to the N.W. of Lerwick. The islands of Little Papa and Vementry are included in this parish. It is hilly and adapted only for pasture land. Fishing and a small coasting trade form the occupations of the inhabitants. The living is in the presb. of Lerwick, val. £168, in the patron. of the Earl of Zetland. The united pars. contain an area of about 15 square miles.

AKEBAR, Yorkshire. See AIKBAR.

AKELD, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirk-Newton, Glendale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 2 miles to the N.W. of Wooler. It is near the river Glen, and has traces of an ancient graveyard.

AKELEY, a par. in the hund. of Buckingham, in the co. of Buckingham, 2½ miles to the N.E. of Buckingham. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £255, in the patron. of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. James the Apostle. There is a Methodist chapel and Sunday-school.

AKENHAM, a par. in the hund. of Bosmere and Claydon, in the co. of Suffolk, 2½ miles to the N.W. of Ipswich, and 2 miles S.E. from Claydon railway station. It is on a branch of the small river Gipping. The living is a rect. united with that of Claydon, in the dioc. of Norwich. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small old building, and was repaired in 1854. Rise Hall is the principal residence.

ALAN, or CAMEL RIVER, a small stream which rises at Davidstow, in the co. of Cornwall, and after a course of about 27 miles, passing the towns of Camelford, Bodmin, and Wadebridge, falls into the Bristol Channel near Padstow. A special interest attaches to it from its connection with the legends of King Arthur. The battle of Camblan, fatal both to the "flower of kings," and his foe, the wicked Modred, was fought near this river.

ALAXTON, a tythg. in the par. of Lydney, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the N.W. of Berkley. It is near the Severn.

ALBAN'S, St., a municipal borough, and market town, locally in the hund. of Cashio, but having a separate jurisdiction, in the co. of Hertford, 12 miles to the S.W. of Hertford, and 24 miles N.W. of London, by the North Western railway, with which it is connected by a branch line of 7 miles to Watford. It was also till 1852 a parliamentary borough, returning two members, but was disfranchised in that year for bribery and corrupt practices in elections. The town stands on the top and northern slope of a hill, on the small river Ver, or Colne, which flows at the foot of it. It is the seat of a Poor-law Union, containing eight parishes.—The Ver separates St. Alban's from the ancient Roman town of Verulamium, which, from its position on the famous highway called Watling Street, received from the Saxons the name of Watling-ceaster during their occupation of it in the 5th century. To the highway itself they gave also the name Werlacm Street, because of its passage by the walls of Verulam. This town had a British origin, and rivals London in antiquity. Julius Cæsar speaks of it as the principal station of Cassivelaunus, and well defended by marshes and woods. British coins are extant bearing the name of this town. Afterwards it became a municipium, or free town, the inhabitants enjoying some privileges of Roman citizens. On occasion of the great rising of the Britons, headed by Queen Boadicea, against their foreign rulers in the reign of the Emperor Nero, Verulam was suddenly taken, and most of its inhabitants, both Roman and British, were slaughtered. It recovered from the injuries it had suffered, and was one of the most important stations of the Romans while they remained in the island. About the year 300 a citizen of distinction, Albanus by name, afterwards St. Alban, suffered as a martyr for his steadfast adherence to the Christian faith. He was beheaded on Holmshurst Hill, and was the first of English martyrs. Five hundred years after his death, a monastery was founded on the spot consecrated to his memory by King Offa, of Mercia. It was for a hundred monks of the Benedictine order, and flourished till the Dissolution, having had a succession of forty abbots. The ancient seal of the abbey, cut in ivory, is preserved in the British Museum.—The origin of the modern town of St. Alban's dates from the middle of the 10th century, when Ulsig, or Ulsinus, sixth abbot of the monastery, founded three churches, one on each of the chief roads, planned a market-place, and gave money and materials to promote the building of houses. William the Conqueror, having found an energetic foe in Frederic, the thirteenth abbot, was only prevented from destroying the monastery by the influence of Archbishop Lanfranc. It was besieged by the followers of Wat Tyler, aided by the inhabitants of the town, who often quarrelled with the monks. Soon after, the king came with a large body of troops, when trial was had of the insurgents, and many were executed. During the wars of the Roses, two battles were fought near St. Alban's; one in May, 1455, when the Yorkists took Henry VI. prisoner, winning a great victory; the other in February, 1461, when the Earl of Warwick was defeated by the queen, Margaret of Anjou. A printing-press was established in the abbey as early as 1480. The elective franchise was first given to the town in the reign of Edward I., and was, after a long suspension, restored to it by Edward VI., who also, in 1553, conferred the charter of incorporation. It is, however, called a borough in Domesday Book, and had at that time forty-six burgesses. Under the Reform Bill, the borough is governed by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the style of the "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of St. Alban's." The mayor was the returning officer. The revenue of the borough is £760. It extends over an area of 425 acres, comprising 1,500 inhabited houses, with a population of 7,675, according to the census of 1861, showing an increase of 675 inhabitants in the decennial period (1851—1861). A county court is established here, and quarter and petty sessions for the liberty are held.—The abbey church, the glory of the town, stands on the hill near the point of meeting of the three principal streets. Its great size and elevated situation give it a very imposing aspect, seen from the surrounding country. It is built in the form of a cross, and measures about 550 feet in length, and nearly 190 feet in breadth, through the transepts. It includes a nave, aisles, choir, Virgin chapel, presbytery, and transepts. At the intersection of the transepts is a noble square tower, resting on four arches, and crowned with battlements rising to the height of 144 feet. Between the nave and the choir is St. Cuthbert's screen. There is a fine carved screen over the altar, of the reign of Edward IV. The ceiling is partly groined, and partly painted. There are several monuments of great interest; among them the tombs of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, the "good Duke," and of the Abbots Ramayge, and Whethamsted; also eight monumental brasses, the earliest dating from 1360; and the grave of the historian, Matthew Paris, who was one of the monks. The architecture is not uniform, and the materials employed in the building are very various. It contains examples of every style, from Norman or Saxon down to the late perpendicular of the reign of Henry VIII. The central parts are the oldest. Roman tiles from Verulam formed the materials for the tower, transepts, and part of the choir, rebuilt by the abbot Paul about the year 1077. For the rest of the structure, flints, bricks, &c., were used. The abbot was mitred, and sat as a peer in parliament, having also a palatine jurisdiction, and many privileges. Adrian IV. (the Englishman, Nicholas Breakspeare) conferred on him a grant of precedence over all English abbots, and exemption from Peter's pence. At the Dissolution the revenue of the abbey amounted to £2,510. It was given by Henry VIII. to Sir Richard Lee. The church was sold by Edward VI. to the town for £400, and a small fee farm rent, afterwards redeemed. It received much damage during the civil war from the parliamentary troops, and the prisoners confined in it. Since 1832, when part of the south-west wall fell, the building has been restored, under the direction of Mr. Cottingham. — The town includes four parishes, St. Alban's, or Abbey par., St. Michael's, St. Stephen's, and St. Peter's. The living of the first parish is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £200, in the patron. of the Rev. Dr. Nicholson. The living of St. Michael's is a vic.,* val. £300, in the patron. of the Earl of Verulam. The church is one of those erected by the abbot Ulsig. It is the burial-place of Francis Bacon, and contains a fine sitting figure of him in alabaster, which was placed there by Sir. T. Meautys. The living of St. Peter's is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £303, in the patron. of the Crown. The church has been rebuilt on the site of the old one erected by Ulsig. It has the tomb of Dr. Cotton. There is also a new church, named Christchurch, built in the Byzantine style of architecture, and two other churches, one at Colney Heath, and another at Leverstock Green. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists and Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Old Presbyterians.—A free grammar school was founded here by Edward VI., to which Queen Elizabeth granted additional endowments. Under a statute passed in 1844, the plan of education has been altered and fitted to the times, and the school, which had very much declined, is now flourishing. It is no longer free, but boys living in the town are educated at a charge one-third less than others. The beautiful Lady Chapel of the abbey is used as the school-room. The blue-coat school, for educating boys in the principles of the Church of England, is supported partly by endowment and partly by subscription. There are national schools for the several parishes, British and infant schools, and a girls' school supported by the Verulams.—There are numerous almshouses, and various charitable institutions: Marlborough Buildings, which were erected and endowed by Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, are the principal. They stand on the site of an old manor-house, the seat of the Robothams, and form three sides of a quadrangle. They have apartments for eighteen men and eighteen women. A dispensary has been established. The townhall, built in 1830, stands on the site of the charnel-house of the monastery, which had served as the townhall previously, and contains, besides the corporation rooms, an assembly room, and a court room for the liberty. Part of the abbey gatehouse is converted into a gaol. There is a house of correction, and a union poorhouse. The manufacture of straw plait gives employment to several thousand hands. Several hundred young people are engaged in the silk mill, which stands on the site of the abbey mill. Berlin wool canvas and cotton wicks for candles are made here. There are iron foundries and rope-walks, breweries, and many corn mills. The market is on Saturdays, and two fairs are held annually, one on the 25th and 26th March, for cattle, &c., the other on the 10th October, and two following days.—Among the distinguished men connected by birth with St. Alban's are, besides the martyr himself, John de St. Alban's, who lived in the 12th century; the physician Giles, in the 13th; Alexander Neckam, abbot of Cirencester, poet and divine, who died in 1227; Sir John Mandeville, the great traveller, who was born in 1300; Sir Francis Pemberton, chief justice of England, born in 1625; Sir John King, an eminent lawyer, born in 1639; and Humphrey, the Nonconformist, born in 1622; and last, not least, Nicholas Breakspeare, who rose to the chair of St. Peter, as Pope Adrian IV., was born in a farm-house near the town, now called Breakspeare's Farmhouse.—Remains of the walls, ditches, &c., of Verulam, still exist to the west of the town, and many valuable relics have been found. The camp of Ostorius has left traces on a spot near the town, and in the name vulgarly given to it, "Oyster" hills. South-east of the town was Sopwell nunnery, founded in 1140, built chiefly of Roman tiles and bricks; fine ruins of it remain. St. Alban's gives the title of duke to the Beauclercs; and the Grimstons, of Gorhambury, once the seat of Lord Bacon, take the title of earl from Verulam. Lord Bacon had the titles of Baron Verulam, and Viscount St. Alban's.

ALBANY, ALBAIN, or ALBYN, the ancient Gaelic name for Scotland, still in local use as a designation of the Highlands, especially of the districts of Appin, Athole, Breadalbane, Glenorchy, and Lochaber. It is formed, according to some authorities, from the root albin, which signifies "high;" according to others, from the root alb, "white," and thus is akin to Albion. It still appears in the names Breadalbane, a part of Perthshire probably so called as the highest district of Scotland, and Glen Mhor nan Albyn, the "great glen of Scotland," the name of the strath along which the Caledonian canal runs. The modern name Scotland was imported by the tribe of Scots from Ireland in the sixth century, in the same way as England was fixed by the settlement of the Angles in the south part of the island. Albany, though no longer a recognised name of any place, remains a ducal title. The king's second son bears the title of Duke of Albany, in addition to that of Duke of York. The first Duke of Albany was a son of Robert II. The Pretender, Prince Charles, took as his incognito, the title of Count d'Albany.

ALBERBURY, a par. in the hund. of Ford, in Shropshire, and the hunds. of Cawse and Deythur, in the co. of Montgomery, North Wales, 9 miles to the N.W. of Shrewsbury railway station. It is situated on the river Severn, which forms part of its boundary, and on the Roman road called Watling Street, which runs through it. It contains the chplries. of Great Wollaston and Criggion, and the tnshps. of Bauseley Alberbury, Benthal with Shrawardine, Eyton, Rowton with Amaston, and several others. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £187, in the patron. of the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and is an old stone building, with nave, chancel, and tower. There is an ancient stained-glass window in the aisle, and seven memorial windows in the chancel. In addition to the parish church, there are two chapels of ease, one at Criggion, built in 1788. It is a perpet. cur., val. £108, in the patron. of V. Vickers, Esq. The other, at the hamlet of Wollaston, also a perpet. cur., val. £95, in the patron. of the vicar. This district was closely settled by the Romans, and on Bausley Hill is a Roman encampment. There are also several barrows. In the reign of Henry II. a castle was built here by Fulk Fitzwarren, who also founded White Abbey as a cell to Grandmonte, in France. There are remains of both. The site of the abbey was given by Henry VI. to All Souls' College, when alien priories were dissolved.

ALBION, the most ancient name of Great Britain, and that by which it was known to the Greeks and Romans. It is used by Pliny, and is probably derived from the root alb, signifying "white," in allusion to the white cliffs on that part of the coast which was first seen by settlers from Gaul.

ALBLESTHORPE, Nottinghamshire. See APPLESTHORPE.

ALBOURNE, a par. in the hund. of Tipnoak, and rape of Bramber, in the co. of Sussex, 6 miles to the S.W. of Cuckfield. It is near the Brighton railway. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £225, in the patron of J. Goring, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. At Albourne Place Bishop Juxon once resided, and afterwards Sir R. Fagge.

ALBRIGHTLEE, a tnshp. in the par. of St. Alkmond, Shrewsbury, in Shropshire, 3 miles to the N.E. of Shrewsbury. It is at a short distance from Sundorne Castle.

ALBRIGHTON, a chplry. in the par. of St. Mary, Shrewsbury, and in the hund. of Pimhill, in Shropshire, 3 miles to the N. of Shrewsbury. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val., £52, in the patron. of W. Spurrier, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

ALBRIGHTON, a par. in the hund. of Brimstree, in the co. of Salop, 5 miles to the S.E. of Shiffnal, and 8 miles N.W. of Wolverhampton. It is a station on the Birmingham and Shrewsbury railway. It was once a market town, and formed part of the possessions of Dore Abbey. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £651. The patron. is with the Master and Wardens of the Haberdashers' Company, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital, London, who present by turns. The church is in the early English style, and is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. It has been lately restored, and has a tower with six beautiful bells. The charities amount to £65, including poor's land, and a free school for six children. A parochial school was built for boys and girls in 1856. Albrighton Hall is a neat stucco building, the property of G. J. Barker, Esq. Cattle fairs are held on the second Monday in January, first Monday in March, 23rd of May, and third Monday in October.

ALBURGH, a par. in the hund. of Earsham, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the N.E. of Harleston, and 5 miles E. of Tivetshall railway station. It lies in several manors, and is near the river Waveney. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £395, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church, which has a tower and an old Norman porch, is dedicated to All Saints. The parish charities amount to £223, of which sum the town estate produces £181. The register dates from 1640.

ALBURY, a par. in the hund. of Edwinstree, in the co. of Hertford, lying 4 miles to the N.W. of Bishop-Stortford. It is situated in a pleasant spot on the river Ash. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £300, in the patron. of the Treasurer of St. Paul's. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains a brass of Sir R. Verney, and a tomb of De la Lee, a former owner of Albury Hall. A fair is held on the 17th July.

ALBURY, a par. in the hund. of Bullingdon, in the co. of Oxford, 4 miles to the S.W. of Thame, and 9 miles from Oxford. It contains the hmlt. of Tiddington, and is near the river Thame. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £276, in the patron. of the Earl of Abingdon. The church, which has been rebuilt by the earl, is dedicated to St. Helen. There is a free school for twelve boys, endowed by Lady Mary Bertie in 1737.

ALBURY, a par. in the second div. of the hund. of Blackheath, in the co. of Surrey, 4 miles to the S.E. of Guildford. It is situated on a branch of the river Wey, at the foot of the great chalk ridge called Hog's Back Down, not far from the South Western railway. The prospect from Albury Hill is very fine, with the sea visible in the distance. The living is a rect.,* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £429, and was lately in the patron. of H. Drummond, Esq., M.P., of Albury Park. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. It contains tombs of the Duncombes and Finches, former owners of the hall, and two remarkable pillars, eight-sided, on circular marble bases, taken from a Roman temple formerly existing here. Near the site of this temple are a ditch and rampart of an old intrenchment. There are chalk-pits, and a quarry of the Sussex marble in the parish. Some of the inhabitants are employed in Magnay's paper-mills. The rectory was once held by Bishop Horsley, and some of the Arundelian marbles were collected here.

ALBY, a par. in the southern div. of the hund. of Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, 5 miles to the N.E. of Aylsham, and 7 miles S. of Cromer. It is near the river Bure. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £140, in the patron. of the Earl of Orford. The church is dedicated to St. Ethelbert, and is a small old building, with square tower. The rectory was rebuilt in 1843. The register dates from 1558.

ALCANCOTES, Lancashire. See ALKINCOATES.

ALCASTON, or ALCISTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Acton Scott, in the hund. of Munslow, and co. of Salop. It is situated about 1 mile from the parish church, and 1¼ mile from Marsh Brook station, on the Shrewsbury and Hereford line of railway. It was formerly a Roman settlement. Loxdale Warren, Esq., is lord of the manor.

ALCESTER, or AULSTER, a par. in the Alcester div. of the hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 8 miles N.W. of Stratford-on-Avon, 13 miles to the S.W. of Warwick, and 103 miles from London. Its name, position, and the Roman remains found near it, point it out as the ancient Alaunes, one of the stations on the Roman road named Ikneild, or Rykneild Street, and vulgarly, Ickle Street. It was a large and important town in the time of the Saxons, and became a seat of their kings. A synod is said to have been held here in the 8th century. It was constituted a free borough by Henry I. About the middle of the 12th century, Ralph de Boteler founded a monastery of the Benedictine order here, which in the 15th century was so poor that it was made a cell to the abbey of Evesham. Enclosed by the river Arrow and a moat, it received the name of the Church of our Lady of the Isle. Its revenue at the Dissolution was £102, and it was granted by Henry VIII. to the Grevilles. Roman urns, coins, and pavements have been dug up in and near the town, and in one spot some ancient foundations have been traced. The town is situated in a pleasant valley on the river Alne, near the junction of the Arrow with it, each of these rivers being crossed by a stone or brick bridge. The surrounding hills are well-wooded. The town has one principal street, with a market-place from which smaller streets branch out. It has several ancient houses. It is lighted with gas, and well supplied with spring water. There is a handsome town-house and market, supported on arches, in Priory Place, in which the courts of the manor are held. A corn exchange has been erected in High-street, in 1857, at the cost of £2,000. The manufacture of needles, which was formerly carried on here, is now removed to Redditch; but there are still extensive implement works and brickfields. The chief occupation of the inhabitants is agricultural. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £259, in the patron. of the Marquis of Hertford, who is also lord of the manor. The church was rebuilt in 1732, and is dedicated to St. Nicholas. It was previously dedicated to St. Andrew. The ancient tower, with battlements and pinnacles, still remains. The roof of the church rests on Grecian columns of the Doric order. Here are the tombs and effigies in alabaster of Fulke Greville and his lady, and tombs of the Beauchamps, who had a seat in the neighbourhood; also a marble figure of the Marquis of Hertford, by Chantrey. The Quakers, Wesleyans, Unitarians, and Baptists have chapels here. The parochial charities amount to £270. Of these the principal are the free grammar school, founded in 1592 by Walter Newport, the school for twenty-four boys and girls endowed by Bridges in 1780, and an almshouse for eight poor men. The Marquis of Hertford gave the ground for the national school which was established in 1844. There is a savings-bank, and two other banks. A county court and petty sessions are held in the town. Tuesday is the market day. Fairs are held on the Tuesdays before the 29th January and the 25th March, the third Tuesday in April and May, the last Tuesday in July, the third Tuesday in September, the Tuesday after the 16th October, and the first Tuesday in December, for the sale principally of cattle and cheese. On a hill a short way from the town, there are remains of the walls and terraces of Oversley Castle, the seat of the Butlers, one of whom was executed by Edward IV. for a treasonable saying on the king having shot his favourite buck.

ALCISTON, a par. in the hund. of the same name, Pevensey rape, in the co. of Sussex, 6 miles to the S.E. of Lewes. It lies near the South Coast railway, and the small river Cuckmere, in a hilly district. The living is a vic. united with Selmeston. In the church there are specimens both of Norman and early English architecture. Portions of coffins of different kinds have been found.

ALCISTON HUNDRED, one of the 19 hunds. of the rape of Pevensey, in the co. of Sussex. It contains the pars. of Alciston, Alfriston, and Lullington, and is 1,620 acres in extent.

ALCISTON, in Salop. See ALCASTER.

ALCOMBE, a hmlt. in the par. of Dunster, hund. of Carkampton, in the co. of Somerset, lying 1 mile to the N.W. of Dunster. It is not far from the coast of the Bristol Channel. Alcombe House is the principal residence.

ALCONBURY, a par. in the hund of Leightonstone, in the co. of Huntingdon, 4 miles N.W. of Huntingdon. It is situated near the British way called Ermine Street and the Eastern Counties railway, and at the foot of Alconbury Hill. Alconbury Brook runs through the parish. It has a course of about 13 miles, rising near Lullington and joining the Ouse at Huntingdon. There is on the hill an ancient chapel dedicated to St. Anne, which commands an extensive prospect. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. with Weston, £162, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. A fair is held on the 21st June. Alconbury Lodge is the principal residence.

ALCONBURY WESTON, a vil. in the hund. of Leightonstone, in the co. of Huntingdon, 1 mile N.W. of Alconbury. The living is a vic. united with that of Alconbury.

ALCUMLOW, Cheshire. See MORETON-CUM-ALCUMLOW.

ALDBOROUGH, in Suffolk. See ALDEBURGH.

ALDBOROUGH, a par. in the wap. of Upper and Lower Claro, in the West Riding, and of Hallekeld in the North Riding, of the co. of York, 15 miles to the N.W. of York. It comprises the chplries of Boroughbridge, Dunsforth, and Rocliffe, with the tnshps. of Humberton, Minskip, and Ellenthorpe, and is situated on the south bank of the Ure, and on the Roman road Watling Street. It is a very ancient town, having been a station of great importance in the time of the Romans, and probably a chief place among the Brigantes at an earlier period. Its Roman name was Isurium. Its present name was given by the Saxons, and indicates its great age in their time, Ald-burgh signifying Old Town. The old city appears to have occupied a square space, each side of which extended about the third of a mile. This is shown by the remains still traceable of the foundations of the ancient walls. In 1783, a mound called Borough Hill, which stood near the middle of the square, was removed, and from the pavements and other Roman remains then brought to light, it is supposed that a temple stood on the spot. The coins were of various dates, from the reign of Trajan to that of Constantine. In recent years, on several occasions, other pavements have been found, one of a very large size, measuring 14 feet in length and 13 feet in breadth, with pieces of urns, signets, &c. Near the south wall is an outwork 200 feet long, in the form of a half circle, forming a terrace with a slope of 30 feet. Some of the walls and pavements in Aldborough and Boroughbridge have been formed out of the materials of the old Isurium. Near Boroughbridge are three obelisks roughly shapen of ragstone, about whose origin and character antiquarians are not agreed. They are locally named the Devil's Arrows or Bolts, and by different authorities have been assigned to a British, a Roman, and a Celtic origin. Aldborough was made a borough in 1558, receiving the elective franchise from Philip and Mary, and returning two members to parliament from that time till 1832, when it was disfranchised under the Reform Act. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £380, and in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of York. The church, which is old, is dedicated to St. Andrew, and contains a Saxon gravestone and a brass of the 14th century. There are three chapels of ease—one at Boroughbridge, a perpet. cur.,* val. £115; one at Dunsforth; and the other at Roccliffe; and a parish school with a small endowment at Boroughbridge. Petty sessions are held in the town. Its trade is inconsiderable, and the houses poorly built. A fair is held on the 4th September.

ALDBOROUGH, or ALBOROUGH, a par. in the northern div. of the hund. of Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, 4 miles N. of Aylsham, and 7 miles S. of Cromer. It is on the river Bure. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £173, in the patron. of Lord Suffield, whose seat is Gunton Park. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains a brass. The church, with the exception of the tower, was restored in 1849. The register dates from 1558.

ALDBOROUGH HATCH, a chplry. belonging to Great Ilford, in the hund. of Becontree, in the co. of Essex, 5 miles W.S.W. of Romford, and 7 from London, being a station on the Eastern Counties railway. It is situated near Epping Forest, close to the river Roding. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of London, val. £20, in the patron. of the Woods and Forests.

ALDBOURN, a par. in the hund. of Selkey, in the co. of Wilts, 7 miles to the N.W. of Hungerford. It contains the tythgs. of Upham and Preston, and is situated in a pleasant valley near the Great Western railway. It was at one time a market town, but has ceased to be such for nearly 150 years. Seymour, Duke of Somerset, had a royal chase here, which was granted him by Henry VIII., and which, after being long a rabbit warren, is now enclosed and brought under cultivation. A skirmish took place in this parish during the civil war in the reign of Charles I. John of Gaunt had a hunting seat here, of which a part is thought still to remain in one portion of the present vicarage house. An ancient British camp has left some traces near Pierce's Lodge, a farm-house here. The land in the district is fertile. The population has been decreasing, and the fustian manufacture, once important, has greatly declined. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £367, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, ancient and partly Norman, is dedicated to St. Michael. It contains a monumental brass of 1508. The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

ALDBROUGH, or ALDBURGH, a tnshp. in the par. of Skirlaugh, in the wap. of Middle and North Holderness, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles to the N.E. of Hedon. It is situated on the coast, and is united with the tnshps. of East and West Newton, and Little Cowden, or Colden Parva, besides four hmlts. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £476, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is a large and ancient one, dedicated to St. Bartholomew. It was erected by one Ulf, who was at an early period lord of the place, and had a stronghold there. This fact is recorded and preserved on a curious circular stone in the church, supposed to be of Danish origin. No trace of the fort itself now exists. There are some almshouses and a school endowed by Mr. Towry, which with other charities amount to £200. There is a Wesleyan chapel. A fair is held on the 4th September, for the sale of cattle and pedlery.

ALDBROUGH, a tnshp. in the par. of Stanwick St. John, wap. of West Gilling, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles to the N.E. of Richmond. A free school, founded by Mr. Barrett, is supported by subscription. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. Aldbrough House is the prinicpal residence.

ALDBURY, a par. in the hund. of Dacorum, in the co. of Herts, 3 miles to the N.E. of Berkhampstead. It lies pleasantly below the range of the Chiltern hills, whose summits are wooded, and at a little distance from the London and North Western railway and the Grand Junction canal. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £448, in the patron. of Earl Brownlow. The church is old, and in the early English style, and is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. It contains two altar tombs of the Verneys and Andersons, richly sculptured: one with the figure of a knight recumbent and his lady, the other with fine brasses of a knight and lady and their twelve children. There are also tombs of the Hydes, who owned the manor, which now belongs to the Duke of Leeds. There are three poor's cottages in the village, for five widowers and widows, endowed by some person unknown.

ALD CAMUS, a par. in the co. of Berwick, Scotland, now united with Cockburnspath. It had a chapel dedicated to St. Helen, of which there are some remains.

ALD CATHIE, a par. in the co. of Linlithgow, Scotland, now united with Dalmeay.

ALDCLIFFE, a tnshp. in the par. of Lancaster, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 1 mile to the S.W. of Lancaster. It is on the Preston canal and the river Lune. Aldcliffe Hall is the principal seat.

ALDEBURGH, or ALDBOROUGH, a par. in the hund. of Plomesgate, in the co. of Suffolk, 24 miles to the N.E. of Ipswich, and 94 from London. It is a seaport and municipal borough, with a separate jurisdiction. It was formerly a market town. It was also a parliamentary borough, returning two members, from the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who conferred on it the elective franchise, till the passing of the Reform Act, by which it was disfranchised. It is very pleasantly situated on the river Alde, in the vale of Slaughden, with a fine sea view to the east, a good beach at low water, and high ground behind it, and has become a favourite resort for sea-bathing. There is a beautiful walk along the beach, of nearly two miles, and many pretty summer villas facing the sea, besides a spacious hotel. It lies near the East Suffolk line of railway. Its charter of incorporation was conferred by Charles I., under which it is governed by two bailiffs and thirty-four burgesses, twelve of whom are capital, and the rest inferior. The townhall is ancient and built of timber. Most of the inhabitants are seafaring people, and many of them pilots, who go far out in their cutters to meet incoming vessels. The herring and lobster fisheries constitute the chief occupation of the other part of the population. The port has about forty small vessels belonging to it, which are employed in the coasting trade. Orford is a subport. The harbour is good, and there is a custom-house near the quay, also a coast-guard station, brewery, and some boatbuilding. A subscription library, a theatre, billiard tables, and assemblies offer amusement to the summer visitors. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £383, in the patron. of F. J. V. Wentworth, Esq., of Slaughden House, who is lord of the manor. He is a descendant of the Earl of Strafford, who had the title of Viscount Aldborough. The church stands on a hill west of the town, and has lately undergone entire reparation. It is built of flint, and, with its tower, which is embattled, and surmounted by a turret, forms an important landmark. It is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, and contains a handsome stained window, representing the four Evangelists and the Adoration, besides many fine monuments; the most notable is one to the memory of the poet Crabbe. In the middle of the 16th century, it stood ten times farther from the shore than it does at present, the sea having encroached on the town, and destroyed the market-place and one whole street. There are three chapels, belonging to the Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans. Great Casino is the residence of the Hon. A. Thellusson. Adair Cottage, of Sir R. S. Adair, Bart. Aldborough was the birthplace of the poet Crabbe. Markets were formerly held on Wednesday and Saturday, but are now discontinued, and fairs, chiefly for toys, on the 1st March and the 3rd May.

ALDEBY, a par. in the hund. of Clavering, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the N.E. of Beccles, and 16 miles S.E. of Norwich. It is situated on the river Waveney, and is a station on the East Suffolk railway. A small priory, founded by Agnes de Kia, in the reign of Henry I., formerly existed here, which was a cell to the Benedictine abbey at Norwich, and was granted at the Dissolution to the cathedral of that city. The living is a cur.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £120, in the patron. of the dean and chapter, who are impropriators, the tithes having been commuted for £735 per annum. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a fine Norman doorway at the west end, and an early font. The register dates from 1541.

ALDENHAM, a par. in the hund. of Cashio, in the co. of Hertford, 3 miles to the N.E. of Watford. It is near the London and North Western railway, and the river Colne, and contains the hamlet of Theobald Street. It formed part of the possessions of St. Alban's Abbey, and at the Conquest was conferred on Westminster. The parochial charities are large, amounting to £1,165 per annum. Of this sum, £1,141 goes to the support of the six almshouses and the free grammar school, founded in 1599, by Richard Platt. The school was established for 60 children, to be elected from the Aldenham poor, and from the families of the Brewers' Company, London. It is governed by the master and wardens of that company, who, in 1825, rebuilt the school, and constituted an upper and lower school. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £425, in the patron. of the trustees of P. Thellusson, Esq. The church is built of flint, in the early English style, and is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. It contains some interesting antiquities, several monumental brasses, the earliest of 1520, a pillared font, and some effigies in the chapel. The chief residences are Aldenham Abbey and Aldenham Lodge.

ALDERBURY, a par. in the hund. of the same name, in the co. of Wilts, 3 miles to the S.E. of Salisbury. It contains the chplries. of Farley and Pitton, and is situated near a branch of the South Western railway, and the river Avon. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val., with the two curacies, £162, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel and a small endowed school. Alderbury House and Ivy Church, which occupies the site of a monastery, are the principal seats. Alderbury is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and of a County Court district.

ALDERBURY HUNDRED, one of the 28 hunds. of the co. of Wilts, situated in the south parliamentary div. of the co., and bounded on the N. by Amesbury and Medwitch hundred; on the E., by Hampshire; on the S., by Downton hundred; on the W., by Cawden and Cadworth hundred. It contains the pars. of Alderbury, West Dean, West Grimstead, Idminston, Laverstock, Melchet Park, Plaitford, Winterbourne-Dantsey, Winterbourne-Earls and Winterbourne-Gunner, Winterston and Clarendon Park liberty.

ALDERFORD, a par. in the hund. of Eynsford, in the co. of Norfolk, 10 miles to the N.W. of Norwich. Reepham is the nearest post town. It is on the river Wensum. It was formerly included among the possessions of the cathedral of Norwich. The living is a rect.* united with the vic. of Attlebridge, in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £219, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and is a small old building with a square tower. The register dates from 1813.

ALDERHOLT, a tythg. in the par. and hund. of Cranborne, in the co. of Dorset, 4 miles to the E. of Cranborne. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £105, in the patron. of the vicar. The church is new, having been erected in 1849, by the Marquis of Salisbury. Alderholt Park is the principal residence.

ALDERLEY, a par. in the hund. of Macclesfield, in the co. palatine of Chester, 5 miles to the W. of Macclesfield, and 14 miles S. of Manchester. It is distant 1½ mile from Alderley and Chorley station, on the Manchester and Birmingham railway, and a branch of the small river Bollin flows through the parish. It comprises the tnshps. of Over and Nether Alderley, with the chplries. of Great Warford and Birtles. The land is fertile and highly cultivated, and the surface pleasantly undulating. Rocks of the New Red sandstone appear at various points, and form a bold ridge, at Alderley Edge, rising steeply from the level pasture lands, on the north side, to the height of 360 feet. The view from the Edge is extensive and very picturesque, the fine ranges of hills on the border of Derbyshire, bounding it to the east. Rich woods cover a great part of this high ground, and slope down the hollows on its sides. Many handsome residences have been built, during the last few years, on the Edge, which are occupied by wealthy Manchester men, and the place has become a favourite and frequent resort of holiday and pleasure-seeking people. Cheap excursion trains run from Manchester, weekly, through the summer. Alderley Park is the seat of Lord Stanley of Alderley. It is an extensive, rich, and well-wooded demesne, containing a fine sheet of water called Radnor Mere, and woods with some of the noblest beech-trees in England. Lead, copper, and cobalt have been found, but in too small quantities to repay the cost of working the mines, which have, at different times, been opened. The copper mines, however, have been recently re-opened, and are now paying well. They were visited in September, 1861, by the members of the British Association, on occasion of their meeting at Manchester. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £750, in the patron. of Lord Stanley of Alderley, who is also lord of the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a stone building in the township of Nether Alderley, and the chancel was rebuilt in 1855. There are several stained glass windows; one in the chancel was inserted by the parishioners in 1855, in memory of John, Baron Stanley of Alderley. There is also a handsome monument of Caen stone, by Westmacott, in memory of the first Baron Stanley of Alderley, and another to Dr. Stanley, who was for 32 years rector of this parish, and 12 years bishop of Norwich. A new church has been recently erected in the township of Chorley (which is in Wilmslow parish) near the railway station, for the accommodation of the residents on the Edge. There is a free school, founded in 1628, by the Rev. Hugh Shaw, and subsequently endowed; and another small endowed school in Lower Alderley. The Baptists have a chapel at Great Warford.

ALDERLEY, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Grumbald's Ash, in the co. of Gloucester, 6 miles to the N.E. of Chipping Sodbury. Wotton-under-Edge is the post town. The village stands among the Cotswold hills, between two small streams, which meet and join the Avon. It is not far from Kingswood forest. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £200, in the patron. of R. H. B. Hale, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Kenelm. The weaving of fine cloth is carried on here by some of the inhabitants. This was the birthplace of the great lawyer and judge, Sir Matthew Hale, who was born in November, 1609, and died in 1676. His remains lie in the church. Alderley House is the seat of his descendant, R. H. B. Hale, Esq.

ALDERMAN HAW, a vil. in the chplry. of Woodhouse, par. of Barrow-on-Soar, hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 2 miles to the W. of Mount Sorrel. A cell to the abbey of Bermondsey formerly existed here.

ALDERMASTON, or ADMISTON, a par. in the hund. of Theale, in the co. of Berks, 10 miles to the S.W. of Reading, and 9 S.E. of Newbury. It is situated in a pleasant district, in the valley of the Kennet, near the junction of the Emborne with that river, and is a station on the Hungerford branch of the Great Western railway. The Kennet is navigable, and there is a wharf, which has a good traffic in coal and timber. There is also an extensive brewery and malting establishment. This place was formerly a market town. The liv. is a vic. in the dioc. of Oxford. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, stands in the park. It is a large and ancient structure, in the decorated style, with a Norman doorway, and contains some brasses and tombs of the Orchards and Delameres. There is a handsome marble tomb of George Foster and his lady, which is a fine specimen of ancient workmanship, and a monument in memory of Ralph Congreve. Near the village is Aldermaston Court, a fine new mansion in the Tudor-Elizabethan style of architecture. Aldermaston Park was the seat of Mr. Congreve, a member of the family of the dramatist of the 18th century. The mansion is the old manor house, a fine hall, with stained windows. At Aldermaston Soak are some remains of a camp. There are some almshouses, endowed by Dixon, and a national school. Horse and cattle fairs are held on the 6th May and the 7th July, and a fair for horses, &c., on the 13th October.

ALDERMINSTER, a par. in the upper div. of the hunds. of Pershore and Oswaldslow, in the co. of Worcester, locally within the limits of the co. of Warwick, 4 miles to the S.E. of Stratford-on-Avon. It is situated on the river Stour, and a tram railway, from Stratford to Moreton in the Marsh, passes through it. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £170, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the form of a cross, the nave being in the Norman style. It has a low tower.

ALDERNEY, one of the Channel Islands, named by the French, Aurigny. It is the most northerly of the group, and the nearest to the coast of France, lying about 7 miles W. of Cape La Hogue, in Normandy, in north latitude 49° 44′ and west longitude 2° 25′. It is separated from the main-land of France by a strait, called the Race of Alderney, in which the flood-tide runs rapidly, and from opposing currents it becomes a dangerous passage in rough weather. The island lies about 15 miles N.E. of Guernsey, and about 55 miles S.S.E. of Portland Bill. It extends in length, from N.E. to S.W., about 4 miles, and has a circumference of about 12 miles, comprising an area of rather more than 4 square miles, being the third in size and population of the Channel Islands. It consists mostly of elevated ground, but not without valleys and meadow land. The cliffs, on the south-east side, rise to the height of 200 feet, and at some points to nearly 300 feet. On the north-east the land is shelving, and intersected by deep valleys and small bays. The numerous rocks, islands, and shoals surrounding it, and the variety of currents, make it difficult and dangerous to approach at times. There is only one harbour in the island, and that capable only of admitting vessels of small size. Eastward lies the Blanchard cluster of rocks; southward, the Coquelhou and Noire Putes, with the Chole bank, which is 6 miles in length, and has, in one part, only 10 feet of water over it; on the south-west, the Susurouais bank; on the north-west, the Burhou reef, the Ortach and Pierre-aubrach rocks, and beyond these the cluster called the Caskets. It was off these that Prince Henry, Duke of Normandy, son of Henry I., together with many of his nobility in the Blanche nef, perished in 1119. There are three lighthouses on this cluster, bearing the names of St. Peter, St. Thomas, and Donjon, arranged as the points of a triangle. It was through the Race of Alderney that the French fleet, under Tourville, escaped, in 1692, after its defeat, by the English and Dutch, under Admiral Russell. The soil of Alderney in the interior is good, about one-third of its surface consisting of pasture land. Good corn and potatoes are produced in the valleys. The climate is mild, and there is abundance of good water. The Alderney cow is in high repute; she is of very small size, straight in the back, and gives excellent milk. These cattle, however, are said now to come mostly from Jersey. Fish is abundant. Seaweed is used for manuring the land.

St. Anne's, usually spoken of as "the town," stands in a pleasant valley, in the middle of the island. It is small, and irregularly built, but has been considerably increased of late years, by reason of the Government works going on in the island. The old church is in ruins, and a new one has been erected. It is in the form of a cross, and in the early English style of architecture, with a tower 104 feet high at the intersection of the transepts. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £120, in the patron. of the Governor of Guernsey. There are chapels belonging to the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists. Education is general. About half the natives speak French, the other half English, but English is understood by all. There are roads leading from the town to the small bays of Braye to the west, and Longy to the east. At Braye, which is considered the port, many of the gentry reside, and through the neighbouring harbour of Crabby a small traffic is carried on with Guernsey. At Longy are ruins of an ancient fort, now called Essex Castle, but formerly the castle of Longinus, in allusion to a curious discovery of a giant's tomb, and a legend of St. Longinus, who pierced our Saviour's side with a spear, became a convert afterwards, and sailed from Jerusalem in a stone coffin! The "Monk's chair" and the "Lover's seat," are two stones having the form of rude chairs, one on the north-west, the other on the south-west side of the island. Alderney is a dependency of Guernsey, which, with Jersey, were part of the duchy of Normandy. They are subject to the crown, but not to the laws, of Great Britain, unless they are mentioned by name. Alderney is governed, the same as Guernsey, by a deputy-governor, by a judge, nominee of the crown, six jurats, chosen for life by the people, and twelve douzainiers, these last named having no vote in the assembly. The criminal jurisdiction is in the court of Guernsey. A new court-house and gaol have recently been erected in New-street. There is a local militia. It is doubtful whether Alderney be, as has been asserted, the Riduna of the Romans. The island was known to them, and Roman remains have been found in it. In a MS. of the Itinerary of Antoninus, it is named Arinia, which is easily connected with its present names, French and English, by several intervening forms of different periods. In 1847 the government undertook the construction of a harbour of refuge and breakwater on the north side of the island, and established works for that purpose. After that time, the population of the island, which had long been decreasing, rapidly increased, so that within the first three years, following the commencement of the works, it had more than tripled itself. Strong fortifications are also erected on the island.

ALDERSEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Coddington, in the hund. of Broxton, in the co. palatine of Chester, 9 miles to the S.E. of Chester. It is watered by a branch of the river Dee. In the 16th century some salt-works were in operation here. Aldersey Hall is the seat of S. Aldersey, Esq., to whom the township belongs.

ALDERSHOTT, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Crondall, in Hampshire, 3 miles to the N. of Farnham, 4 S.W. from Farnborough railway station, and 37 from London. It is situated on the river Blackwater, near the Basingstoke canal, and gives name, with Ash, to a station on the Reading branch of the South Eastern railway. It was formerly one of the possessions of the priory of Merton, and the Tichborne family had a seat here. The living is a cur.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £64, in the patron. of the chief proprietors. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Aldershott Heath is the site of an extensive military camp, with handsome stone barracks for cavalry, infantry, and artillery, erected in 1856. There are also a pavilion for the Queen, several club-houses, a hospital, riding-school, and a police station. A new chapel for Wealeyans was built in 1857, which was given by the Wealeyan Conference for the use of the soldiers. The par. comprises an area of 4,144 acres, chiefly common and heath.

ALDERSTONE, a tythg. in the par. of Whiteparish, hund. of Trustfield, in the co. of Wilts, 7 miles to the S.E. of Salisbury.

ALDERTON, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Tewkesbury, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the N.W. of Winchcomb. It contains the hmlt. of Dixton, and is near the Cotswold hills. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £450, in the patron. of the Rev. C. Covey, the rector. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. A Saxon camp has left some remains here.

The living is a rect.* united with that of Grafton Regis, in the dioc. of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret, and was rebuilt in 1848, except the tower. It is in the perpendicular style of architecture, and has a fine painted window at the east end. Among the parochial charities are five poor's cottages. The Duke of Grafton is lord of the manor.

ALDERTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Great Ness, hund. of Pimhill, in Shropshire, 1¼ mile S.W. of the parish church, and 7 miles to the N.W. of Shrewsbury, not far from the river Severn. Earl Powis is lord of the manor, and sole landowner.

ALDERTON, a tnshp. in the chplry. of Hadnall, par. of Middle, and hund. of Pimhill, in Shropshire, 7 miles to the N. of Shrewsbury.

ALDERTON, a par. in the hund. of Wilford, in the co. of Suffolk, 7 miles to the S.E. of Woodbridge. It is situated near Hollesley Bay and the small river Deben. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £270, in the patron. of T. Archer, Esq., and the Bishop of Norwich every fourth turn, who present by turns. The old church of St. Andrew is in ruins, and serves as a landmark on the coast. The modern church of St. Bartholomew is a brick building. Giles Fletcher, the poet, once held the rectory of this parish, and died here in 1623.

ALDERTON, a par. in the hund. of Chippenham, in the co. of Wilts, 6 miles to the S.W. of Malmesbury. The British road called Akeman Street, which led from Bath to Cirencester, passes near it, and at a short distance is Badminton Park, the seat of the Duke of Beaufort. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, in the patron. of Sir J. Neeld, Bart., of Red Lodge. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. This parish was the birthplace of Gore the antiquary, who resided at Alderton House, and whose tomb is in the church. He was born in 1631, and died 1681.

ALDERWASLEY, a chplry. in the par. of Wirksworth, hund. of Appletree, in the co. of Derby, 2 miles to the E. of Wirksworth. It is situated near the river Derwent and the Cromford canal. The population is chiefly employed in the colliery, and the iron and lead works. The living is a don. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £120, in the gift of F. Hurst, Esq., who resides at Alderwasley Hall.

ALDFIELD, a tnshp. in the par. of Ripon, and wap. of Claro, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the S.W. of Ripon. It is situated on a branch of the river Ure, in the midst of beautiful scenery. There is a mineral spring in the village impregnated with sulphur, and much resorted to. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. with that of Studley, £72, in the patron. of Earl de Grey, of Studley Park.

ALDFORD, a par. partly in the upper, partly in the lower div. of the hund. of Broxton, in the co. palatine of Chester, 5 miles to the S. of Chester. It is situated on the river Dee, which forms its western boundary, and is now crossed by a good bridge, in place of the "old ford" alluded to in the name of the parish. It is near the Shrewsbury railway. It includes the chplry. of Churton Heath and the tnshps. of Great Boughton and Edgerley, and was formerly a market town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £330, in the patron. of the Marquis of Westminster. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The courts, leet and baron, for the manor are held here. There is a free grammar school with a good endowment, and a school supported by subscription, the school-room being built by Earl Grosvenor. There are also six almshouses for poor widows. Near the church are some earthworks of a castle built in the reign of Henry II., by Robert de Aldford. During the siege of Chester, in the civil war, this castle was garrisoned by Sir W. Brereton. There are some traces of a Roman road.

ALDHAM, a par. in the hund. of Lexden, in the co. of Essex, 4 miles to the N.E. of Coggeshall. It lies near the Eastern Counties railway and the river Roman. The manor once belonged to the De Veres. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. 327, in the patron. of the bishop. Morant, the local antiquary and historian of the county, and of Colchester, once held this rectory. The charities of the parish amount to £52. This place is a meet for the East Essex hounds.

ALDHAM, an old par., in the co. of Haddington, Scotland, now united with Whitkirk. It contains the ruins of a chapel near Tantallon Castle.

ALDHAM, a par. in the hund. of Cosford, in the co. of Suffolk, 2 miles to the N.E. of Hadleigh railway station, and 71 from London. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £290, in the patron. of T. B. Lennard, Esq. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is very old, with a Norman round tower, and a porch of wood. The register dates from 1666. A priory cell formerly existed in this parish. Near it is Aldham Common, which, in 1555, was the scene of the martyrdom of Rowland Taylor.

ALDHOUSE, a small vil. in the par. of East Kilbride, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland.

ALDIE, a hmlt. in the par. of Fossaway, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 2 miles S.E. of the Crook of Devon. Aldie Castle, once the family seat of the Mercers of Meiklour, is now in ruins. The barony originally belonged to the Earls of Tullibardine, and is now the property of Baroness Keith of Aldie.

ALDINGBOURN, a par. in the hund. of Box and Stockbridge, rape of Chichester, in the co. of Sussex, 3 miles to the E. of Chichester. It includes the hmlts. of Lidsey and Westergate, and is near the South Coast railway. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £220, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has a font of black marble. Aldingbourn House is the seat of Lady H. Howard.

ALDINGHAM, a par. in the hund. of North Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the S.E. of Dalton-in-Furness. It includes, besides the tnshps. of Upper and Lower Aldingham, those of Gleaston and Leece, and the chplry. of Dendron. It is situated on the coast of Morecombe Bay. The sea has encroached and washed away a considerable part of the parish, so that the church is within reach of a high tide, although formerly it stood in the centre of the parish. On a spot now covered by the sea, once stood Aldingham Hall, an ancient seat of the family of the Flemings. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £1,093, in the patron. of the crown. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. In addition to the parish there is a district church at Dendron, which is a perpet. cur., val. £80, in the patron. of the rector. There is an endowed school founded by Dickenson. There are ruins of a castle in Gleaston township. Traces of two encampments, one circular, the other square, are found.

ALDINGTON, a par. in the franchise and bar. of Bircholt, and lib. of Romney Marsh, lathe of Shepway, in the co. of Kent, 6 miles to the S.E. of Ashford. Hythe is the post town. It lies near the South Eastern railway, and the military canal. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £1,014, with the cur. of Smeethe, which is annexed to it, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is dedicated to St. Martin, and is mostly in the early English style, with a fine stained window. Erasmus was once rector of this place.

ALDINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Badsey, hund. of Blackenhurst, in the co. of Worcester, lying 2 miles to the E. of Evesham.

ALDRETH, or ALDERWITH, a hmlt. in the par. of Haddenham, in the hund. of South Witchford, Isle of Ely, in the co. of Cambridge, 1 mile from Haddenham and 7 S.W. of Ely, situated in the remote part of the fen land, which is well cultivated, and yields crops of wheat, barley, oats, and turnips.

ALDRIDGE, a par. in the southern div. of the hund. of Offlow, in the co. of Stafford, 3 miles to the N.E. of Walsall. It contains the chplry. of Great Barr, and the lib. of Bentley, and is situated on the Wyrley and Essington canal, and near the South Staffordshire railway. Good clay is obtained here, of which the finest pottery and tiles are manufactured. The population are employed in the potteries, the collieries, and a large distillery. The canal is an important auxiliary to the trade of the place. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £375, in the patron. of the Rev. J. F. Smith. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In addition to the parish church there is a district chapel of ease at the village of Great Barr, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £405, in the patron. of Sir E. D. Scott, Bart. The charities of the parish amount to £182, the larger part of which constitutes the endowment for the support of two free schools, one for boys, the other for eight poor girls, which were founded in 1718 by the Rev. John Jordan. There is also a curious provision of "sixpence" custom money, for every housekeeper in the parish who will ask the rector for it. Remains of a Roman camp exist.

ALDRINGHAM, a par. in the hund. of Blything, in the co. of Suffolk, 3 miles to the N.W. of Aldborough. It lies near the coast, and contains the hmlt. of Thorpe. It was formerly a market town. The living is a perpet. cur., in the dioc. of Norwich, val., with Thorpe, £59, in the patron. of the Rev. E. Hollond. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is built in the Saxon style, and was formerly thatched. It had a tower, which was taken down at the time of its undergoing a thorough repair. The roof is now slated, and it has a new ceiling. There are two fairs, one a statute fair for hiring servants, October 11, and the other, December 11, a pleasure fair held on Coldfair Green, about 2 miles W. of the village of Aldring, which is a small straggling place, containing, with the hamlets of Thorpe and Potter's Street, scarcely 350 inhabitants, principally fishermen. The Baptists have a chapel here.

ALDRINGTON, or ATHERINGTON, once a separate par., now joined to Portslade, in the hund. of Fishergate, rape of Lewes, in the co. of Sussex, 3 miles to the N.W. of Brighton. The sea has made advances, and carried off the church and a great part of the village. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £294, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge.

ALDSTONE, Cumberland. See ALSTON.

ALDSWORTH, a par. in the hund. of Brightwell's Barrow, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the S.E of Northleach. It lies near the small river Leach, and was once a possession of the abbey of Gloucester. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £66, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, stands on high ground, commanding a fine prospect.

ALDSWORTH, a tythg. in the par. of Westbourne, hund. of Westbourne, rape of Chichester, in the co. of Sussex, 6 miles to the N.W. of Chichester. It is near Stanstead Park, and is a meet for Colonel Wyndham's hounds.

ALDWARK, a tnshp. in the par. of Bradborne, hund. of Wirksworth, in the co. of Derby, 3 miles to the S.W. of Winster. It is in the neighbourhood of Mouldridge Hill, and the High Peak railway.

ALDWARK, a tnshp. in the par. of Alne, wap. of Bulmer, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 11 miles to the N.W. of York. It is situated on the river Ouse, which is here crossed by Aldwark Bridge. The living is a cur. united with Almy.

ALDWARK, a vil. in the tnshp. of Ecclesfield, wap. of Strafforth, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N.E. of Rotherham. It is situated on the river Don and the North Midland railway. Aldwark Hall is the principal residence.

ALDWICK, a tythg. in the par. of Pagham, hund. of Aldwick, in the co. of Sussex. It lies near the coast, 3 miles to the W. of Bognor.

ALDWICK HUNDRED, one of the seven hunds. in the rape of Chichester and co. of Sussex, situated in the west parliamentary div. of the co., contains the pars. of Bersted, East Lavant, Pagham, Slindon, and Tangmere.

ALDWINKLE ALL SAINTS, a par. in the hund. of Huxloe, in the co of Northampton, 2 miles to the N.E. of Thrapston. It is watered by the river Nen, and the Northampton and Peterborough railway passes through the parish. It is an ancient place, and its Saxon name was Aldewingle. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £311, in the patron. of the Rev. R. Roberts, D.D., the rector. The church is in the later English style, and has a fine tower, decorated windows, and a beautiful chapel adjoining the chancel. It contains a brass of an Aldwinkle of the year 1463. The father of the poet Dryden held this rectory, and the parsonage-house was the birthplace of the poet (1631). There is a free school for the benefit of this and the adjoining parish of St. Peter, founded and endowed in 1671 by Richard Thorpe.

ALDWINKLE ST. PETER'S, a par. in the hund. of Huxloe, in the co. of Northampton, 4 miles N.E. of Thrapston. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £230, in the patron. of Lord Lilford, of Lilford Hall. This parish has a share in the charities of Aldwinkle All Saints. The river Nen, on which the village is situated, communicates with the Northampton canal, and is navigable to the ocean. Thomas Fuller, author of the "Church History," and "History of the Worthies of England," was born here in 1608, his father, the Rev. T. Fuller, at that time holding the rectory. Aldwinkle House is the seat of the Hon. and Rev. F. Powys. Here are ruins of a structure called Liveden, built by the Treshams, which is in the form of a cross, and has some interesting sculpture.

ALDWORTH, or ALLDER, a par. in the hund. of Compton, in the co. of Berks, 4 miles S.E. of East Ilsey, and 12 from Reading, its post town. It is an ancient place, and is situated near the Roman Icknield Street. It is thought by some to have been a Roman settlement. At Beach Farm there was formerly a castle, which was the seat of the family of the De la Bêches, who were lords of the manor. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £449, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is very old, and in the early English style. It contains nine tombs, with finely sculptured monuments of the De la Bêches. Six are effigies of armed knights, one of a person in the common dress of the time, and two of women. They are all richly canopied, and are probably the work of the 14th century. In the churchyard is a fine yew-tree, measuring twenty-seven feet in circumference.

ALE, a small river of Scotland, flowing through the cos. of Selkirk and Roxburgh. It takes its rise in the western heights of the parish of Roberton, and flowing through Alemoor Loch, falls into the Teviot, after a course of 20 miles, a little below the town of Ancram. There is a stream of the same name in Berwickshire.

ALEMOUTH, Northumberland. See ALNMOUTH.

ALETHORPE, an ext. par. place in the hund. of Gallow, in the co. of Norfolk, 2 miles to the N.E. of Fakenham.

ALEXANDRIA, a vil. and quoad sacra par., in the par. of Bonhill, in the co. of Dumbarton, Scotland, 3½ miles N. of Dumbarton. It is situated on Leven Water, and is a station on the Dumbartonshire railway. An iron suspension bridge connects this thriving and growing place with Bonhill on the opposite side of the Leven. Bleaching and print works furnish the principal employment for the inhabitants of the village. The living is in the presb. of Dumbarton, and in the gift of the male communicants. Besides the par. church, there are places of worship belonging to the Free Church, United Presbyterians, Independents, and Roman Catholics. Near the village is Tullichewin Castle, a fine seat, with good views of the river and the scenery on its banks. A fair is held on the first Thursday in February.

ALEXTON, or ALLEXTON, a par. in the eastern div. of the hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 6 miles to the N.W. of Rockingham. It lies on the border of the co. of Rutland, and on the river Eye. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £140, in the patron. of Lord Berners, who is lord of the manor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Alexton Hall, a mansion in the Elizabethan style, is the seat of Lord Berners.

ALFOLD, a par. in the first div. of the hund. of Blackheath, in the co. of Surrey, 8 miles to the S.E. of Godalming. Part of the par. is within the co. of Sussex. The Arun and Wey Junction canal passes through it. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £205, in the patron. of the Rev. L. W. Elliott. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

ALFORD, a par. in the district of Alford, in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 28 miles to the N.W. of Aberdeen. It is situated on the river Don, in a district partly flat, and partly hilly and moorland, with good soil near the river. Peat is used for fuel, coal having to be brought from Aberdeen, 30 miles distant. The village is the seat of a presbytery. The living, in that presb., val. £207, is in the patron. of the crown. The church is ancient. In July, 1645, a battle was fought here in which the covenanters, under General Baillie, were defeated by the Marquis of Montrose. A stone is still pointed out as marking the spot where Lord Gordon fell during the pursuit. On the top of a hill named Carnaveran, or "Cairn of Sorrow," is a very large cairn, in the form of a truncated cone, in which have been found an earthen urn, with ashes, bones, and charcoal. The cairn measures 120 feet in diameter, and about twenty-five feet in height. There is a circle of stones called "Auld Kirk," and traces, now nearly obliterated, of two extensive entrenchments, the hill on which one of them is seen being called Da-mill. The manse in this parish was the birthplace of Patrick Forbes, Bishop of Aberdeen from 1652 to 1680, whose father held the living. Cattle fairs are held monthly. The par. extends over an area of 10,000 acres, being 7 miles in its greatest length from east to west, and 3 miles broad. The road from Aberdeen to Corgarff, a military station on the sources of the Don, is here crossed by the great north road, from Fettercairn to Huntly, which has a bridge of three arches over the Don, built in 1811.

ALFORD, a par. and market town in the Wold div. of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 30 miles to the E. of Lincoln, and 130 miles by rail from London. It is a station on the East Lincolnshire section of the Great Northern railway. Its name indicates its position on an old ford over a stream that runs through the town. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. with the perpet. cur. of Rigsby, £180, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is of stone, with a thatched chancel, and is dedicated to St. Wilfrid. It has several ancient monuments, among which is a fine one to Sir Robert Christopher, Knt., and his lady. The Reformed and Primitive Wesleyan Methodists, and the Baptists have chapels here. A court of requests was established here in the reign of George III., which is held once a month. Petty sessions are held, and polling for the north div. of the county takes place here. Spanning's free grammar school was founded in 1565. Its revenue, at first small, has been raised by several endowments to £350. In 1576, a charter was granted by Queen Elizabeth, by which it was made a royal foundation, and the governors a corporation with a common seal. It has in connection with it two fellowships at Magdalen College, Oxford, and one at Jesus College, Cambridge. There is a national school for 130 children, boys and girls, partly supported by endowment. Its income is now £60. In 1668, Sir Robert Christopher built and endowed some almshouses for six poor persons, which were further endowed in 1716 by Lord Harborough. There are various other charities. In 1854 a handsome building was erected for the Mechanics' Institute, which includes a library and lecture hall. There are some tumuli in the parish, and a mineral spring. The market is held on Thursday, and fairs on Whit-Tuesday, and the 8th November. Alford gives the title of viscount to Earl Brownlow, of Belton.

ALFORD, a par. in the hund. of Catsash, in the co. of Somerset, 2 miles to the W. of Castle Cary. It is situated on the small river Brue, and has a mineral spring at a farm, called Alford Well, which was formerly much frequented for the cure of scurvy and jaundice. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val., with that of Hornblotton, £788, in the patron. of the Rev. J. G. Thring, rector.

ALFORD DISTRICT, in the central portion of Aberdeenshire, Scotland. It is surrounded on every side by hills and mountains, and the river Don traverses it. It contains the pars. of Alford, Auchindoir, Clatt, Glenbucket, Keig, Kildrummie, Kinnethmont, and Christ's Kirk, Lochell-cushnie, Rhynie and Essie, Strathdon, Tough, Towie, Tullynessle, with Forbes and part of Cabrach. There are Free kirks at Auchindoir, Keig, Kinnethmont, and Rhynie; and a railway, to deflect from the Great North of Scotland at Kintore, was projected in 1846.

ALFRETON, a par. and market town in the hund. of Scarsdale, in the co. of Derby, 13 miles to the N.N.E. of Derby, and 3½ N.W. from Pye Bridge railway station, on the Erewash Valley railway. A branch of the Midland railway, now constructing, will pass through the parish. The town is situated on a hill, and has two streets, with a market-place, where they cross each other. It is well paved, and lighted with gas. Its ancient name was Alfredingtune, which occurs in a charter granted to Burton Abbey by King Ethelred. From this name some infer that it was founded by Alfred, the traditional site of whose palace is still pointed out. It belonged at one time to Beauchief Abbey. It contains the chplry. of Riddings, with the hmlts. of Greenhill-lane, Summercotes, Swanwick, Birchwood, Codnor Park, and some others. The population has largely increased of late years, and find employment in the collieries and iron-works, the stone-quarries, and the manufactures of brown pottery and stockings. Some of the houses are ancient, and most of them are irregularly built. It is a polling place for the county. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £150, in the patron. of W. P. Morewood, Esq. The church, which is dedicated to St. Martin, has an embattled tower with pinnacles. It is partly in the early English, and partly in the decorated and later perpindicular style, and one portion of it was probably built before the reign of Henry II. Besides the parish church, there are three district churches; that at Riddings is a perpet. cur.,* val. with the cur. of Somercotes, £150, in the patron. of the vicar of Alfreton; that at Ironville is also a perpet. cur., val. £150, in the patron. of F. Weight, Esq.; the other is at Swanwick. There are chapels belonging to the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists; and a handsome new chapel built by the Independents in 1850. A savings-bank and two other banks have been established here. There is a free school for 140 boys and girls of Swanwick and Greenhill-lane, founded in 1740 by Mrs. Eliza Turner, and endowed with 40 acres of land. A county court and petty sessions are held in the town. A small prison has been recently erected. The market is held on Friday and Saturday, and fairs on the 26th January, Easter Tuesday, Whit Tuesday, 31st July, which is very large, 6th October, and the 24th November. Alfreton Hall is the seat of W. P. Morewood, Esq., lord of the manor, which has descended to him through the houses of the De Alfretons, Chaworths, Babingtons, and Zouches. Some Roman remains have been discovered in the parish.

ALFRICK, a chplry. in the par. of Suckley, in the hund. of Doddingtree, in the co. of Worcester, 7 miles to the S.W. of Worcester. It is near the river Teme. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the rect. of Suckley, in the dioc. of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a free school endowed by Lloyd, with a present revenue of £8.

ALFRISTON, a par. in the hund. of Alciston, rape of Pevensey, in the co. of Sussex, 5 miles to the S.E. of Lewes. Seaford is the post town. It is on the river Cuckmere, near the South Coast railway, and was formerly a possession of the priory of Michelham. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £135, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. It is partly in the decorated, partly in the perpendicular style of architecture, and contains stone stalls, a piscina, a Norman arch, the tomb of the founder, and an ancient cross. On the neighbouring downs, called Wendover hills, there are several barrows, which have been opened, and urns, spear-heads, and other relics have been discovered. Roman coins have been dug up, and interesting specimens of sculpture are preserved at the inn. The prospect from the downs is extensive and beautiful. Alfriston is celebrated for its apple; in the collection of the Horticultural Society, there is preserved a white rennet grown in this parish, which measures 15 inches in circumference, and weighs nearly twelve pounds. Fairs are held on the 12th May and the 30th November.

ALGARKIRK, a par. in the wap. of Kirton, parts of Holland, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the S.W. of Boston. Spalding is the post town. It is situated near Fossdyke Wash, and is a station on the Great Northern railway. It is said to be named after the Saxon Algar, Earl of Mercia, who defeated the Danes here in the year 870, and who was himself defeated and killed the day after that victory, at Thockingham. The district is fenny. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. with the perpet. cur. of Fossdyke, £1,310, in the patron. of the Rev. B. Berridge, rector and lord of the manor. The church is in the early English style, with specimens of Norman in some parts of it, and is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. It has a brass of 1498, and some monuments of the Berridges. In the burial-ground is a statue of stone, said to be a monument of Earl Algar. Algarkirk House is the seat of the Rev. B. Berridge.

ALHAMPTON, a tythg. in the par. of Ditcheat, hund. of Whitstone, in the co. of Somerset, 2 miles to the N.W. of Castle Cary. It is near the river Brue, and had formerly a chapel.

ALKBOROUGH, or AUKBOROUGH, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 10 miles to the N.W. of Brigg. It is situated very near the confluence of the river Trent with the Humber, and contains the hamlet of Walcot. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. with the rect. of Whitton, to which it is annexed, £209, in the patron. of the bishop and the Rev. C. Constable. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is an endowed free school, an almshouse for the poor, and a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Remains of a large Roman encampment exist in this parish; they comprise an area 300 feet square, and are in the neighbourhood of Julian's Bower.

ALKERTON, a tythg. in the par. of Eastington, in the hund. of Whitstone, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the W. of Stroud. Alkerton House is the principal residence.

ALKERTON, a par. in the hund. of Bloxham, in the co. of Oxford, 6 miles to the N.W. of Banbury. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £153, in the patron. of the Rev. R. Hughes, rector. The church, which is dedicated to St. Michael, is in the early English style of architecture, and stands upon an eminence. The manor belonged to the family of the Lydiats. This village was the birthplace of Thomas Lydiat, the mathematician and chronologist, who also held the rectory. He was born in 1572, and died in 1646.

ALKHAM, a par. in the hund. of Folkestone, latho of Shepway, in the co. of Kent, 4 miles to the N.W. of Dover. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. with the perpet. cur. of Chapel-le-Ferne, £152, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church, which is partly in the Norman, partly in the early English style, is dedicated to St. Anthony. Alkham House is the residence of R. Halford, Esq. It is believed that a church existed here as early as the reign of Edward the Confessor.

ALKINGTON, a tythg. in the par. of Berkeley and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Gloucester, 1 mile from Berkeley. It is not far from the Gloucester and Bristol railway.

ALKRINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Prestwich-cum-Oldham, hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 1 mile to the S. of Middleton. The small river Irk flows through the township. The cotton manufacture affords the principal employment of the inhabitants. Alkrington Hall was once the seat of Sir Aston Lever, whose well-known museum was formed here.

ALLALEIGH, a hmlt. in the par. of Cornworthy, hund. of Coleridge, in the co. of Devon, 4 miles from Totness.

ALLAN, BRIDGE OF, a vil. in the pars. of Lecropt and Logie, in Perthshire, Scotland, 3 miles to the N.W. of Stirling, and 2 miles S. of Dunblane, having a station on the Scottish Central railway. It is situated in a picturesque spot, at the junction of the river Allan with the Forth, and possesses, in a high degree, all the characteristics of a village as poets love to imagine it: thatched cottages irregularly set among fine trees, a river, bridge, and mill, old inns, old women knitting out of doors, and young ones carrying milkpails. There are also some neat modern houses occupied in the summer by persons who visit the mineral wells of Airthrie. There is a Free church and a United Presbyterian church, and in the vicinity are a paper manufactory and a spinning mill.

ALLANTON, a vil. in the par. of Edrom, in the co. of Berwick, Scotland, 4 miles to the E. of Dunse. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Whittadder and Blackadder, over the former of which a new bridge was erected a few years ago. There is a Free church in the village, the receipts of which amounted to £195 16*s.* 2*d.* in 1853. There are paper-mills at Allanbank which afford employment to many of the population, and a mineral well in the vicinity.

ALLAN WATER, a small river which rises at Glen-eagles, near Blackford, among the Ochil hills, in the co. of Perth, Scotland. It takes a south-westerly course through the beautiful valley called after the stream Strathallan, receiving several streamlets, and joining the Forth after a course of 14 miles at the Bridge of Allan, and 2 miles above Stirling. It flows past the ancient city of Dumblane. Its name is Celtic, and signifies river. It abounds in good trout.

ALLARD'S, Buckinghamshire. See BURNHAM, E.

A fair is held on the downs on the 6th August, for the sale of cattle and horses.

ALLDER, Berkshire. See ALDWORTH.

ALLEN, BOG OF, a vast swamp or series of swamps, in the middle of Ireland, extending from Kildare in the east, through King's County and Queen's County, to Westmeath, where it is bounded by the Shannon. Its length is about 50 miles, and its breadth about 25, and it comprises an area of nearly 240,000 English acres. It lies about 250 feet above the level of the sea, and is divided at intervals by ridges of more elevated and dry ground. The peat bed has an average thickness of 25 feet, and varies from a moss at the top, to a dark peat in the middle, and a hard black bed at the bottom. Underneath it is clay and a limestone gravel. The Royal and Grand canals traverse this morass, and the rivers Barrow, Boyne, and Brosna take their rise in it. The Isle of Allen is a small cultivated tract in the midst of bog, in Kildare county. The Hill of Allen is near the Isle, and rises to the height of 676 feet, having the village of Allen at its foot. This bog is visible from the Hill of Croghen near Philipstown. Some attempts have been made to reclaim parts of it, but hitherto without much success. It still remains almost entirely waste.

ALLENDALE, a par. and market town in the southern div. of Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 10 miles to the S.W. of Hexham, and 286 miles N.N.W. of London. It takes its name from the river Allen, on the eastern bank of which the town is situated; it is irregularly built on the slope of a hill rising from the river side. The scenery is remarkably fine. The river is crossed by a bridge erected in 1825, and is a tributary of the South Tyne, into which it falls near Ridley Hall. The par. comprises the market town of Allendale, and the tnshps. of East and West Allen, Broadside, Catton, Low Forest, High Forest, Keenley, and Park. It is a polling place for the county. The surrounding district is principally moorland, and contains some large and valuable lead mines, the produce of which is about one-fourth of the entire quantity raised in England. There are several smelting-houses, with flues extending under ground three miles in length, and a large quantity of silver is separated from the ore during the process of smelting. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £170, in the patron. of W. B. Beaumont, Esq., lord of the manor. The church was rebuilt in 1807. Besides the church there are four chapels of ease—St. Peter's, one at Nine Banks, a third at Carr Shields, or West Allen, and the fourth at Allenheads. The cur. of Allenheads chapel, val. £50, is in the patron. of Mr. Beaumont; the others in the patron. of the vicar. There are also places of worship belonging to the Quakers, the Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. The free grammar school, the income of which is £62, was founded in 1693, by Christopher Wilkinson and others. A new school-house has been recently erected. There are several other schools, libraries, and a savings-bank. The market day is Friday. Cattle fairs are held on the last Friday in April, and the first Friday after the 29th October, and a cattle and sheep fair on the 22nd August. There are remains of a square entrenchment at Old Town, about 2½ miles N.W. of Allendale. It is supposed to have been a Roman station, having a portway, 7 yards broad, paved with stone. Coalcleugh, in the greaveship of West Allen, is the highest inhabited village in England, and the chief centre of the lead-mining population: here, and at Allenheads, which is 3 miles W., are several levels, extending near a mile in length, excavated to communicate with the mines under the hills.

ALLENFORD FARM, an ext. par. place in the par. of Martin, hund. of Damerham, in the co. of Wilts, 8 miles to the S.W. of Salisbury.

ALLENHEADS, or ALLONHEAD, a vil. in the greaveship of High Forest, once a separate par. in the par. of Allendale, southern div. of Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 7 miles to the S.W. of Allendale. It is here that the east branch of the river Allen has its source. Coal and rock crystal are found here, and there are valuable lead mines, which have been worked for centuries, and give employment to nearly the whole of the inhabitants. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £50, in the patron. of W. B. Beaumont, Esq. The chapel was rebuilt in 1826, by Colonel Beaumont, on the site of an older one. There is also a private chapel erected by W. B. Beaumont, Esq., for the use of the labouring classes.

ALLENSMOOR, or ALLENSMORE, a par. in the hund. of Webtree, in the co. of Hereford, 4 miles to the S.W. of Hereford, and 1½ mile N.W. from Tram Inn railway station. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Hereford, and in the patron. of the bishop. Allensmore Court is the principal residence. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels here.

ALLEN, ST., a par. in the western div. of the hund. of Powder, in the co. of Cornwall, 4 miles to the N. of Truro. Allen river flows through it, and joins the river Fal at Truro. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £174, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Alleyn. There is an old encampment with a triple fosse, called Gwarnike, in this parish. A farm near it was formerly the seat of the Bevills. It is the custom to hold a parish feast on Rogation Sunday. The par. contains 3,501 acres.

ALLENSTOWN, a vil. in the bar. of Lower Navan, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles S. of Kells. Allenstown Hill, near the village, is the principal seat.

ALLENTON, or ALWINTON, a par. in the western div. of Coquetdale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 9 miles to the N.W. of Rothbury, and 313 miles N. of London. Alnwick is the post town. It is situated on the river Allen or Alwin, at its confluence with the river Coquet, which flows in a winding course through the parish. It contains the tnshps. of Allenton, or Alwinton, Biddleston, Burrowdon, Clennell, Fairhaigh, Farnham, Linbriggs, Netherton north and south sides, Peals and Sharperton. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. with the cur. of Hallystone, £200, in the patron. of the Duke of Northumberland. The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and is a handsome stone building, erected in the 12th century, and restored in 1853, in the early English style. The register dates from 1719. There is a free school for 26 children, endowed by John Dixon and others. Barrow Peel and Ridlee Cairn Hill, on the south bank of the Coquet, are remains, probably, of ancient British burial-places.

ALLEN, WEST, HIGH, and LOW, grieveships in the par. of Allendale, Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland. They are situated on the West Allen river, which joins the East Allen near Whitfield. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £157, in the patron. of the vicar.

ALLITHWAITE, UPPER and LOWER, tnshps. in the par. of Cartmel, hund. of Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles to the N.E. of Cartmel. Allithwaite Lodge is the principal seat.

ALLOA, a par., burgh of barony, seaport, and market town, in the co. of Clackmannan, Scotland, 2 miles to the N.W. of Clackmannan, 7 from Stirling, and 32 miles from Edinburgh. It contains the vils. of Cambus, Collyland, Holton Square, and Tullibody, and is situated on the northern bank of the Frith of Forth, where the river Devon falls into it. It is a station on a branch of the Stirling and Dunfermline railway. It became the property of the Erskines in 1365, when David II. conferred it on Lord Erskine, in exchange for Strathgartney, in Perthshire. The par. of Alloa extends about 4 miles in length, but its extent of bank along the winding Forth is about 5½ miles, and 2 miles in breadth, consisting for the most part of braes, "bonnie links o' Forth," which slope up from the water's edge. The burn of Alloa intersects it, and the land is good and fertile. There are extensive coal-fields, yielding coal of good quality, which is one of the principal articles of export, the annual average yield being from 76,000 to 80,000 tons. The town, part of which is very ancient, stands on level ground by the Forth, and is backed by pleasant hills. The old streets are narrow and irregular, but clean, and the town has been greatly improved. Many pleasant residences have been erected on the hill behind the town to the west. It is a bonding port, and has a ferry at the head of the Frith of Forth, which is here 500 yards in breadth. There is a good quay, and the harbour has a depth of water of twelve to twenty-two feet, enabling vessels of large size to lie close up to the quay at any state of the tide, which cannot be done at any other port on the Frith. There is a dry dock, in which vessels of 400 tons burden can be repaired. A wet dock is now being formed. The trade of Alloa has increased very much during late years, but not in proportion to its natural advantages. There were five steam vessels belonging to the port in 1851, besides sailing vessels, the aggregate tonnage of which were above 20,000 tons. These vessels are chiefly engaged in the coasting trade, which is considerable; others visit the colonies and foreign ports, especially Holland and the Baltic. The harbour is under the charge of trustees. The chief articles of export are coal, glass, ale, and woollens; the chief articles of import, flax, linseed, corn, wool, timber, and iron. There are eight ale breweries, large glassworks established in 1825, woollen manufactories, spinning mills, brick and tile works, and two ship-building establishments. There are also a pottery, brass and copper works, and a steam engine and machine manufactory. Assembly rooms, a custom-house, gas and water works, and a court-house, are the principal public institutions. The town is a burgh of barony, and a sheriff's court is held. The affairs of the town are now managed by a board of nine Commissioners. The market is held on Wednesday and Saturday. Cattle fairs take place on the second Wednesday in the months of February, May, August, and November.—The living is within the presb. of Stirling, val. £299, in the patron. of the crown. The church, built in 1819, is an elegant Gothic edifice, with a handsome spire 200 feet in height, and stands on the hills. There are two Free churches in the town, and one at Tullibody, two chapels belonging to the United Presbyterians, and others to the Episcopalians, Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Swedenborgians. There are parish and free schools, ragged, and industrial, and infant schools, and various charitable societies. Two weekly newspapers are published, called the Alloa Advertiser, and Alloa Journal. One of the most interesting objects in the district is Alloa House, the ancient seat of the Erskines, Earls of Mar. Of the old building there remains only a tower of the 13th century, ninety feet high, with walls eleven feet in thickness, the rest having been destroyed by fire in 1800. It stands secluded in a beautiful park. It is believed that Mary, Queen of Scots, spent part of her early life in Alloa House, as one of her guardians was Lord Erskine. Her son, James VI., also was here in his boyhood, in charge of the Earl of Mar, as was afterwards his son, the Prince Henry. A stoutly made cradle and chair used to be shown as those of the "infant Solomon." Alloa was the birthplace, in 1748, of David Allan, the historical painter. Tullibody, now united with Alloa, was the birthplace of Generals Sir Ralph and Sir Robert Abercrombie. The par. extends over an area of about eight square miles.

ALLONBY, a chplry. in the par. of Bromfield, ward of Allerdale-below-Derwent, in the co. of Cumberland, 22 miles to the S.W. of Carlisle. Maryport is the post town. It is situated on the Solway Frith, on that part of the coast which forms the bay of Allonby, and is near the railway from Carlisle to Maryport and Whitehaven. It has a good beach of firm sand, and is a favourite bathing-place. The herring fishery which was once carried on has declined, the herrings not now haunting that part of the sea. Allonby is a subport to Carlisle. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £94, in the patron. of the vicar of Bromfield. There is a free school for ten children, endowed by Mrs. Thomlinson, and there are six poor's cottages erected by Thomas Richardson. This village was the birthplace (1741) of Captain Joseph Huddart, the hydrographer and naval engineer.

ALLOSTOCK, a tnshp. in the par. of Great Budworth, in the hund. of Northwick, in the co. palatine of Chester, 4 miles to the N.E. of Middlewich. It is situated on a branch of the river Weaver. The Unitarians have a chapel here.

ALLOWAY, once a separate par., now united to Ayr, in the co. of Ayr, Scotland, 2 miles S. of Ayr. It is situated on the right bank of Doon, a little below the point where the road from Ayr to Maybole is carried across that river by the new bridge, for the "Auld Brig o' Doon" is no longer used, and a quarter of a mile from the cottage on Doon-side, in which the peasant bard was born on the 25th of January, 1759. The poet's father was interred here at his own request, and the village derives its chief interest now from its association with Burns and his poetry. The walls of the "haunted kirk," the scene of the "Tam o' Shanter," still stand, but ruined and roofless, with the kirk bell at one end. An attempt to remove this bell by the magistrates was resisted by the peasantry, and the relic is preserved. The beautiful monument, in the form of a Greek temple, of white stone, recently erected to his memory, stands on a hill between the kirk and the bridge. Snuff-boxes and other portable treasures have been made of the woodwork of the kirk of Alloway.

ALLOWENSHAY, a hmlt. in the par. of Kingston, hund. of Tintinhull, in the co. of Somerset, 2 miles to the N.W. of Ilchester.

ALLSAINTS, a par. in the bar. of Raphoe, in the co. of Donegal, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles N. of St. Johnstown. It is situated between the river Foyle and Lough Swilly. The soil is fertile, and stone is quarried in the parish. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, val. £89, in the patron. of the incumbent of Taughboyne.

ALLSCOT, a tnshp. in the par. of Worfield, hund. of Brimstree, in the co. of Salop, 2 miles to the N.E. of Bridgnorth, and 1½ N.W. from Worfield. It is not far from the river Severn.

ALLSCOTE, a tnshp. in the par. of Wrockwardine, hund. of South Bradford, in the co. of Salop, 3 miles to the N.W. of Wellington. It is a station on the Shropshire Union railway, and is close to the parish church of Wrockwardine. The river Tern runs through it.

ALLSTONEFIELD, a par. in the northern div. of the hund. of Totmonslow, in the co. of Stafford, 11 miles to the N.E. of Cheadle. Ashborne is the nearest post town. It contains the chplries. of Upper Elkstone, Longnor, Quarnford, and Warslow, and the tnshps. of Lower Elkstone, Fairfield Head, Heathy Lee, and Hollinsclough, and is situated on the river Dove, which here forms part of the boundary of the parish and the county, separating them from the counties of Chester and Derby. It belongs to the duchy of Lancaster. Coal, copper, and lead mines are worked here, and there is a silk-mill, and two button manufactories at Fairfield Head and Heathy-Lee, in which most of the population find employment. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £300, in the patron. of Sir John Crewe, Bart., who resides at Caulke Abbey. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is large, and in the early English style, with an embattled tower and pinnacles. In addition to the parish church there are four chapels of ease. The charities amount to £54, and include a small free school, founded in 1726 by German Pole. The poet Cotton had a fishing-house at Allstonefield, and used to enjoy rambling here with his friend Izaac Walton. The pulpit in the church and some of the church furniture were the gift of Cotton.

ALL-STRETTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Church Stretton, in the hund. of Munslow, in the co. of Salop, 1¼ mile N. of the town of Church Stretton, and 13 S. of Shrewsbury. Many of the population are Welsh. The famous British fortress, Caer Caradoc, one of the last strongholds held by Caractacus, is in the vicinity.

ALLT, a tnshp. in the par. of Berriew, in the co. of Montgomery, North Wales, 3 miles to the N.W. of Montgomery. The name signifies "a hill."

ALLTGREIG, a hmlt. in the par. of Llanguick, hund. of Llangafelash, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 5 miles to the N.W. of Neath.

ALLTGYMBYD, a tnshp. in the par. of Llanarmon, hund. of Yale, in the co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 9 miles to the N.W. of Wrexham.

ALLTMAWR, a par. in the hund. of Builth, in the co. of Brecon, South Wales, 3 miles to the S.E. of Builth. It is situated on the river Wye. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £48, in the patron. of the vicar of Llanavan-Vawr.

ALLTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Wirksworth and hund. of Appletree, in the co. of Derby, 2 miles to the S. of Wirksworth. It is now united with Idridgehay.

ALLTYGAR, a hmlt. in the par. of Llangathen, hund. of Cathinog, in the co. of Carmarthen, South Wales, 3 miles to the W. of Llandilofawr.

ALLWESTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Folke, and hund. of Sherborne, in the co. of Dorset, 2 miles to the S.E. of Sherborne.

ALMELEY, a par. in the hunds. of Stretford and Wolphy, in the co. of Hereford, 4 miles to the W. of Weobley. It comprises the tnshps. of Hopley's Green and Logaston, and the Kington tram-road runs through it. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £254, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, which had once a chantry, is dedicated to St. Mary, and is a fine old Gothic building, with a handsome oak ceiling, restored in 1843. Near it are two barrows and a Roman camp.

ALMER, a par. in the hund. of Loosebarrow, in the co. of Dorset, 5 miles to the S.E. of Blandford. It contains the hmlt. of Mapperton, and lies on a branch of the river Stour. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £284, in the patron. of T. S. Drax, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The church, which is small, and was rebuilt by General Erle, is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALMER COOMBE, a tythg. in the par. of Sturminster Marshall, hund. of Loosebarrow, in the co. of Dorset, near Almer.

ALMHOLME, a hmlt. in the par. of Bentley, wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N.E. of Doncaster. It is not far from the river Don.

ALMINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Drayton-in-Hales, north div. of the hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 1 mile to the E. of Market Drayton. It is situated on the river Tern, and was formerly a lordship of the Butlers. Almington Hall is the principal residence.

ALMINGTON, or AMINGTON, a tnshp. joined to Stony-Delph, in the par. of Tamworth, Tamworth div. of the hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick, 3 miles to the N.E. of Tamworth. It lies on the river Anker, near the Midland railway, and the Coventry canal. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, united with Tamworth. Almington Hall was once the seat of the Clintons.

ALMODINGTON, once a par., now a tythg. in the pars. of Earnley and Siddleham, in the hund. of Manhood, rape of Chichester, in the co. of Sussex, 4 miles to the S.W. of Chichester. The living was a rect., and was consolidated in 1524 with that of Earnley. The church is in ruins.

ALMOND. There are two streams in Scotland bearing this name: (1) one has its rise in the co. of Lanark, not far from Shottskirk, and, after a course of about 20 miles, falls into the Frith of Forth at Cramond. The scenery through which the river flows is very picturesque, and near the Cant hills there are several falls. Briech Water, which rises on the Pentland hills, joins it near Livingston. Through the greater part of its course, the Almond forms the boundary line between the counties of Edinburgh and Linlithgow. It passes near the towns of Whitburn, Blackburn, Livingston, Mid-Calder, and Kirkliston. The Glasgow railway and the Union canal are carried across this river,—the former by one of the most magnificent works on any line of railway, consisting of an immense viaduct of 43 arches of 50 feet span each, and varying in height from 60 to 85 feet. Trout abound in it. (2) Another stream, called also Almon river, in the co. of Perth, which rises in a glen among the Grampian hills between Loch Tay and Loch Earn, passes through the parishes of Monzie and Foulis, and falls into the Tay about two miles above Perth. It is a very rapid river, with many waterfalls and several tributary streams. Its whole length is about eighteen miles. The upper part of its course lies through a glen named after it, Glenalmond, abounding in exceedingly fine scenery, the rocks in several parts approaching each other very closely, and rising to the height of 1000 to 1200 feet. This is the traditional burial-place of Ossian, and has furnished the theme of a graceful poem by Wordsworth. On one of the highest hills are ruins of a Celtic fort, and on the opposite hill is a cairn. The river abounds in fine white trout. It flows past Lynedoch House, the seat of Lord Lynedoch, and past the woods of Methven Castle. It is crossed by three bridges. One, the old bridge of Almond, a single arch, erected in 1619; another, a little below that, of three arches, erected in 1827; and a third, a little above the old bridge, a semicircular arch of eighty feet span, erected at the cost of Lord Lynedoch. The foundation was laid in 1832. This bridge is at Dalcruive, on the Dunkeld road.

ALMOND BANK, a vil. in the par. of Methven, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 4 miles to the N.W. of Perth. It is situated on the river Almond, and is a station on the Perth and Methven branch railway.

ALMONDBURY, a par. in the upper div. of the wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the S.E. of Huddersfield. It lies near the Manchester and Leeds section of the London and North Western railway, near the canal and the river Colne. It comprises the chplries. of South Crossland, Farnley-Tyas, Honley, Linthwaite, Lockwood, Meltham, Netherthong, Upperthong, Holme Bridge, Meltham Mills, Milns Bridge, Armitage Bridge, Helme, and part of that of Marsden, with the tnshps. of Almondbury, Austonley, and Lingarths, besides several hmlts. This place was probably the Campodunum mentioned in the Itinerary of Antoninus. The Saxon kings had a palace here, and on a neighbouring hill remains of an ancient fort are still in existence. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £571, in the patron. of Sir J. W. Ramsden, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints, and is in the perpendicular style. Fourteen new district churches have been erected in the parish. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The parochial charities are considerable, amounting to £423, of which sum £75 is the revenue of the free grammar school founded in 1609 by letters patent of James I., and subsequently endowed by Robert Nettleton and others. The revenue of the charity established by Israel Wormall in 1724 for teaching and apprenticing children amounts to £168; and that of Nettleton, for maintenance of bridges and giving of marriage-portions, to £138. There are many woollen manufactories and some cotton and silk mills, which, with the collieries, furnish employment to many of the inhabitants.

ALMONDSBURY, a par. in the lower divs. of the hunds. of Langley and Swinehead, Thornbury and Berkeley, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the S.W. of Thornbury. It contains the tythgs. of Hempton with Patchway, Over Tockington, Lower Tockington, Almondsbury, and three other tythgs., and is situated at the foot of the Cotswold hills, near the Bristol and Birmingham railway. The small stream, Boyd, which falls into the Avon, runs near the village. From the summit of the rocks under which the village stands, there is a fine prospect over the Severn to the Welsh coast. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £915, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is a handsome edifice in the form of a cross, and in the early English style. It has a tower and spire at the centre, and a beautiful western door. It is dedicated to St. Mary, and was formerly a cell to the priory of St. Augustine, at Bristol. There are church lands, of which the yearly income amounts to £236, a poor's house, and a small free school. It is said that here was the burial-place of Alemond father of King Egbert. Knole House is the principal seat.

ALMORITIA, Westmeath. See BALLYMORIN.

ALMSFORD, or ANSFORD, a par. in the hund. of Catsash, in the co. of Somerset, within 1 mile of Castle Cary, and near the river Brue. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £297, in the patron. of F. Woodforde, Esq., of Almsford Park. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ALNE, a par. in the wap. of Bulmer, in the North Riding, and partly in the lib. of St. Peter of York, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the S.W. of Easingwold, and 11 miles N.E. of York. It is a station on the York and Berwick railway. The par. contains the tnshps. of Aldwark, Alne, Flawith, Tholthorp, Tollerton, and Youlton. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. with the cur. of Aldwark, £415, in the patron. of Sir C. Codrington. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. There are charities amounting to £47. Alne House is the principal seat.

ALNE, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 2 miles to the N.E. of Alcester. It is situated on the river Alne, which, after a course of twelve miles from its source near Umberslade Park, joins the river Arrow at Alcester. The living is a cur. united with the rect. of Kinwarton, in the dioc. of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. There are charities amounting to £28.

ALNE, LITTLE, a hmlt. in the par. of Aston Cantilow, hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 2 miles to the N.E. of Great Alne.

ALNESBOURNE PRIORY, an ext. par. place in the par. of Nacton, hund. of Colneis, in the co. of Suffolk, 4 miles to the S.E. of Ipswich. The river Orwell flows near it.

ALNESS, a par. in the co. of Ross, Scotland, 9 miles to the W. of Cromarty. Its name signifies "brook of the headland," and alludes to the promontory named Alness Point. It extends from the frith of Cromarty, along the south bank of Alness Water, formerly called the river Averon, to the mountains in which the river takes its rise. In the higher part of the parish there are fine straths and glens, and two lakes, Loch Glass and Loch Moir. Iron ore is obtained in the district, and small quantities of silver have been found. Part of the land is under tillage, and part is used for sheep-walks. Trout abounds in the river. The living is in the presb. of Dingwall, val. £231, in the patron. of the Marchioness of Stafford. The parish church was built in 1780, has been repeatedly repaired, and contains about 800 sittings. There is a Free church, two society's schools, an assembly's school, and a private school. The par. extends over an area of about fifty square miles.

ALNESS-BRIDGE, a vil. with a post-office, in the pars. of Alness and Rosskeen, in the co. of Ross, Scotland, 12 miles N.E. of Dingwall. It stands on the bank of Alness-Water. Fairs are held chiefly for the sale of cattle once a month, from January to September.

ALNHAM, a par. in the northern div. of the ward of Coquetdale, in the co. of Northumberland, 7 miles to the N.W. of Rothbury. Alnwick is the post town. It comprises the tnshps. of Alnham, Prendwick, Screnwood, and Unthank. The river Alne, which flows by Alnwick and falls into the North Sea at Alnmouth, rises near this village. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £200, in the patron. of the Duke of Northumberland. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was built in 1310. The old vicarage is also an interesting structure, having been built in the reign of Edward III. It fell into ruins in 1643, but was restored by the Duke of Northumberland in 1844. The upper part of the old fabric, called the Peel Tower, is strongly supported with square embattled stonework. In 1850, during some excavations, an ancient road, six feet wide, was discovered two feet below the surface. Near the village, on the moors to the west, are remains of an encampment in the form of a semicircle, with a double rampart and trench, enclosing a space measuring 100 yards in diameter.

ALNMOUTH, or ALEMOUTH, a small seaport and tnshp. in the par. of Lesbury, southern division of Lambrough ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Alnwick. It is situated on Alnm uth Bay, at the mouth of the river Alne, and is resorted to as a bathing-place. The port is subordinate to that of Berwick. The York and Berwick railway passes near the village. A few small vessels belong to the port, which are engaged in the coasting trade, carrying goods to and from London, and the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £100, in the patron. of the Duke of Northumberland. The old chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, which formerly existed here, was blown down in 1806, and the site of it has since become an island at the mouth of the river, but a new church has lately been erected, and was opened in 1860. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. The discovery of some large bones led to a belief that giants had lived here. The bones proved to be not human, but remains of horses.

ALNWICK, a par. and market town in the eastern div. of the ward of Coquetdale, in Northumberland, of which it is the county town, 30 miles S.S.E. from Berwick-upon-Tweed, 34 miles N. by W. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 306 miles from London by road, and 314 miles by the Great Northern and York, Newcastle, and Berwick railways. It comprises the several tnshps. of Alnwick, Alnwick South Side, Abbey Lands, Canongate, Denwick, and Hulme Park, with seven hmlts. Its name is derived from its situation on the river Alne, the town being built on the sides of the hills rising from the river on the south, amidst beautiful and romantic scenery. It is a place of great antiquity, but the precise date of its origin is not known. It is believed that a fort existed here in the time of the Romans, and that the castle was erected on its site by the Saxons, who named the place Ealnwic. Just before the Conquest Gilbert Tyson owned the castle and barony; and on his death at the battle of Hastings, the Norman lords de Vesci became the possessors. The possession remained with them till about 1297, at which time the castle and barony were bequeathed by the licence of Edward I. to the Bishop of Durham. They were shortly afterwards purchased by Lord Henry de Percy, from whom they have been regularly transmitted to the present noble owner, the Duke of Northumberland. Opposite the railway station, at the entrance of the town, is a noble column, erected by the Percy tenantry, 100 feet high, surmounted by the Percy crest, and inscribed, "To Hugh, Duke of Northumberland, K.G., this column is erected, dedicated, and inscribed by a grateful and united tenantry. A.D. 1816." Alnwick, situated so near to the northern limit of England, was the scene of numerous forays and conflicts in the fierce border warfare of the middle ages. It was besieged in 1093 by Malcolm III., King of Scotland, surnamed Ceau-mohr, or "Greathead," and was defended by Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland. Malcolm and his son, Prince Edward, both fell during the siege. King David gained possession of the town in 1135. William the Lion, who took part with young Richard, afterwards Cœur de Lion, against his father, Henry II., entered Northumberland in 1174, with a host of eighty thousand men, and laid siege to Alnwick. William was taken prisoner by a troop of English horse under Ralph de Glanville. He was only liberated on pledging himself as Henry's liegeman, and binding himself to do homage for Scotland. Subsequently, on payment of 10,000 marks, this humiliating treaty was annulled by Richard. The place was nearly burned to the ground in 1215 by King John, but appears to have been soon rebuilt. The Scots, under Robert Bruce, made an attempt on it in 1328, but failed. A wall was built round the town in 1411, and at the same time battlements were erected on the castle. The town was again burnt in 1448 by the Scots, after Dumfries was burnt by the English.—Alnwick is a borough by prescription. The ancient style of the corporation was the "burgesses of Alnwick;" the present style, the "chamberlains, common council, and freemen of the borough of Alnwick." It is now governed by a bailiff nominated by the Duke of Northumberland, four chamberlains, and twenty-four common-councilmen. The chamberlains are elected from the council, and the councillors from the body of freemen. The freemen become such either by inheritance or by servitude. There was a curious and absurd custom, not many years discontinued, in connection with admission to the freedom, which tradition traces back to a decree of King John; and this tradition looks less improbable than it did, since the publication of an itinerary, which shows that King John was at Alnwick on the 24th April, 1209. St. Mark's day, 25th April, is the day of admission for freemen, and after admission they had to ride the bounds of an extensive common. In the course of their ride they came to a muddy pond, named the "Freeman's Well," where the bailiff bids them dismount and make their way through it from end to end. This they did, in a cotton dress, and usually before a crowd of delighted and applauding spectators. So, it is said, decreed King John, because the townsmen of his day left their roads in so bad a condition that he himself was well-nigh lost in the bogs. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight by the county magistrates, and quarter sessions are held here in turn with Newcastle, Hexham, and Morpeth. Polling and the election for the north div. of the county take place here. A county court is held once a month in the townhall. The town is regularly built, the streets are broad, well paved, and the houses mostly modern and built of stone. It is lighted with gas, and has a good supply of water. There were formerly four square towers with gateways in the town wall, of which only one, that named Bondgate, remains. It was built by Hotspur, and was formerly used as a prison. The market-place is a large square in the centre of the town, on the north side of which is the townhall, a handsome stone building with a square tower, erected in 1731; and on the western side, the market-house, containing reading and assembly rooms, with shambles and stalls for fish and poultry beneath. It was erected by the Duke of Northumberland in 1827, and is in the early English style of architecture. The house of correction was built in 1807, and the poor-law union house in 1842. There is an infirmary, a theatre, a subscription library, founded in 1783, a scientific and mechanics' institute, founded in 1824, a tradesmen's and mechanics' newsrooms, and a savings-bank. A new and spacious courthouse for the holding of petty sessions, and a corn exchange are now being erected. The town is well drained, under the provisions of the Public Health Act. Fire-plugs are fixed in the streets about fifty yards apart. A stone bridge of three arches crosses the Aln at the northern end of the town.—The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £175, in the patron. of the Duke. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Michael, is a large structure in the perpendicular and decorated styles of architecture, with groined chancel, carved stalls, and a niche in the south aisle with three effigies recumbent. A new district church, dedicated to St. Paul, was erected in 1846 by the late Duke. The living is a cur., val. £200, in the patron. of the Duke. There are places of worship belonging to the Roman Catholics, Unitarians, Independents, Wesleyan and New Connection Methodists, English Presbyterians, and United Presbyterians. The last-named body have two chapels here. There is a corporation school, in which, besides English, classics and mathematics are taught, an infant school, a national school founded in 1810, and supported by the Duke, and several Sunday schools.—The trade and manufactures of the town are small and unimportant. There are two extensive tobacco and snuff manufactories, besides several breweries, a tannery, and flour-mills. Coal is found in the parish, and there are quarries of limestone, freestone, and marble. Bricks and tiles are made. The market is held on Saturday. Fairs are held on the eve of Palm Sunday, the 12th May, the last Monday in July, the first Tuesday in October, for sheep, cattle, and horses. A wool fair is held on the first Saturday after the 5th July; and statute fairs, for hiring servants, the first Saturday in March, the 12th May, and the first Saturday in November. A cattle market is held every alternate Monday.—Alnwick Castle, the noble seat of the Duke of Northumberland, stands on the site of a Roman camp, to the north-west of the town. About a hundred years ago considerable transformations were effected, which destroyed, in great measure, its characteristics as a Border castle. But in 1858 his grace, the present Duke, caused it to be repaired at a very large cost, and as closely as possible according to the ancient design. It is now one of the finest examples of a feudal fortress in the kingdom. The walls enclose an area of five acres, and the grounds, which are watered by the Aln, extend five miles in length. The family residence is in the centre of the inner court. The interior decorations are of extraordinary splendour and magnificence. The ceiling of the chapel is constructed after that of King's College Chapel, Cambridge; and the paintings on the walls are copied from those in Milan cathedral. The walls of the castle are flanked by sixteen towers. Very extensive and important works have long been, and are still, going on at the castle. The park abounds in scenery of rare and various beauty, and contains ruins of two abbeys; one that of the Premonstratensian Canons, founded in 1147, by Eustace Fitz-John; the other, Hulne Abbey, founded by a crusader, in 1240. Malcolm's Cross, a memorial of the fall of King Malcolm and his son during the siege of Alnwick in 1093, was rebuilt in 1774, on the spot where he fell, by the Duchess of Northumberland, a lineal descendant of the king. Alnwick was the birthplace of Friar Martin of Alnwick, and of Bishop William of Alnwick, the latter of whom lived in the first half of the 15th century. Alnwick gives the title of baron to the Earl of Beverley.

ALOESBRIDGE HUNDRED, one of the twelve subdivisions of the lathe of Shepway in the co. of Kent, bounded on the N.E. and S.E. by Langport, St. Martin's hundred, and on the S.W. and N.W. by Oxney hundred. It contains the par. of Brookland, Fairfield, Snargate, Snave, and part of Brenzett, and extends over an area of 7,240 acres.

ALPERTON, a hmlt. of the par. of Harrow-on-the-

Hill, hund. of Gore, in the co. of Middlesex, lying 8 miles to the N.W. of the city of London. It is not far from the river Brent. The London and North Western railway and the Paddington canal pass near it.

ALPHAMSTONE, a par. in the hund. of Hinckford, in the co. of Essex, 4 miles to the S. of Sudbury. The river Stour runs near it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £257, in the gift of the lord chancellor. The parochial charities amount to £13 a year.

ALPHETON, a par. in the hund. of Babergh, in the co. of Suffolk, 8 miles to the N. of Sudbury. A feeder of the river Stour runs through it. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £275, in the patron. of the Rev. W. J. Aislabie, the rector.

ALPHINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Wonford, in the co. of Devon, 2 miles to the S. of Exeter. The Alphin, a branch of the river Exe, runs through the parish, as does also the Exeter canal, in a parallel course with the river. The South Devonshire railway passes near it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £987, in the patron. of the Rev. F. A. Savile. There are some almshouses here, and an ancient cross stands in the chief street. The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and contains a font in the Norman style, with pillars and intersecting arches. The tower was repaired in 1853. Cattle fairs are held here on the first Wednesday after June 20th, and on Michaelmas day. Alphington House is the principal residence.

ALPHINGTON, or ALPINGTON, a vil. in the par. and hund. of Ottery St. Mary, in the co. of Devon, 1½ mile N. of the town of Ottery St. Mary, and 10 E. from Cullompton railway station. The living is annexed to the vic. of Ottery St. Mary. The church, which is dedicated to St. James and St. Anne, is a new brick building in the early English style, erected in 1849 at the sole expense of the Hon. Justice Coleridge, who also made a present to the village of a parsonage-house and schoolroom. The church contains a painted window at the east end, and a font of Devonshire marble, with a sacrarium.

ALPINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Loddon, in the co. of Norfolk, 6 miles to the S.E. of Norwich. The living is a rect. united with Yelverton, in the dioc. of Norwich. The tithes of the united pars. have been commuted for £408 per annum. No vestige of the church now exists. A new school-house was built in 1854. Alpington Hall is the principal residence.

ALPORT, a hmlt. in the tnshps. of Rowsley and Youlgreave, in the co. of Derby, 5 miles to the N.W. of Castleton. Alport Brook runs through the hamlet. It takes its rise in the Peak and joins the Ashop at Gillop Hey, not far from the lofty Alport rocks, which rise to a height of nearly a thousand feet. The calcareous deposit from streams which run through a limestone district, called Tufa, is obtained here, and is employed in the construction of ornamental rockwork.

ALPRAHAM, a tnshp. in the par. of Bunbury, first div. of the hund. of Eddisbury, in the co. palatine of Chester, 6 miles to the N.W. of Nantwich. The Chester and Crewe railway and the Birmingham canal pass near it. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

ALRESFORD, a par. in the hund. of Tendring, in the co. of Essex, 5 miles to the S.E. of Colchester. It is situated on a branch of the river Colne. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £378, in the patron. of Hulme's trustees. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The par. has an area of 1,583 acres.

ALRESFORD (commonly called ALSFORD) NEW, a par. and market town in the Alton div. of the co. of Hants, 7 miles to the N.E. of Winchester railway station, and 57 miles from London by road, or 75 miles by the South Western railway. It is a neat and well-built union and market town, situated near the head of the river Itchen. Its name imports that there was a ford, overshadowed by alder trees, on the spot; but, by a mistake, the river here is often called the Alre. Conwalch, King of Wessex, after his baptism, gave the manor to the Bishop of Winchester. The market, which in the early part of the 13th century had been discontinued, was restored about the year 1220, by Godfrey de Lucy, Bishop of Winchester. The town was incorporated at an early period. It returned one member to parliament in the twenty-third and thirty-fifth years of the reign of Edward I., which privilege has long since been lost. The town has suffered on several occasions from fire. In 1690 and 1710 it was nearly destroyed, and it was subject to a like calamity in 1736. The church of St. John the Baptist is a neat building, and has a low embattled tower, with a peal of eight bells. The living was formerly a chplry. of Old Alresford, but now is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £240, in the patron. of the bishop, who is also lord of the manor. The Independents have a chapel here. There is a grammar school, founded and endowed in 1698 by H. Perrin, Esq., for 19 boys, sons of tradesmen in the town and in the villages of Old Alresford, Sutton, and Tichbourne, which, besides a house for the master, has fifty-two acres of land, yielding at present an income of £149 per annum. Petty sessions are held fortnightly by the county magistrates for the Winchester division. At Michaelmas, a court leet is held by the Bishop of Winchester. Alresford used to be within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court, at Winchester. There is a national school and a savings-bank in the town. The former remarkable prosperity of this place is said to have been owing to the fact of the river Itchen having been made navigable up to the town, for which purpose in the reign of King John an embankment was constructed by Bishop Godfrey de Lucy; and the small lake, now called Alresford Pond, which covers an area of about 40 acres, was formed, but the navigation does not extend now beyond Winchester. The bishop and his successors received, as compensation for his great work, the royalty of the river from the pond to the sea. The market, which is chiefly for corn, is held on Thursday; where sheep are also sold in the three months before Christmas. Fairs are held on the last Thursday in July, the first Thursday in September, the first Thursday after October the 16th, and the last Thursday in November, for the sale of cattle. There are several mansions in the neighbourhood: Tichbourne House, the seat of the Tichbourne family, and the Grange, the seat of Lord Ashburton. The latter is built in imitation of the Parthenon at Athens.

ALRESFORD, OLD, a par. in the hund. of Fawley, in the Alton div. of the co. of Hants, close to New Alresford. It lies on the other side of the river Itchen. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £556, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, which was rebuilt in 1753, has a fine tower, and is dedicated to St. Mary. Admiral Lord Rodney formerly resided in Old Alresford House, now belonging to his descendant Lord Rodney. This village is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court of Winchester. A very neat free school has been erected, at the sole expense of Miss Onslow.

ALREWAS, a par. in the northern div. of the hund. of Offlow, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles to the N.E. of Lichfield. It comprises the hmlts. of Fradley, Orgreave, and Overley. It is a station on the South Staffordshire railway. The par. is bounded on the N. by the river Trent, and on the E. by the river Tame, and is intersected by the Grand Trunk canal, which joins the Trent here. The Coventry canal also passes through the parish. Early in the 9th century, Alrewas became the possession of the cathedral of Lichfield. The living is a discharged vic. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £328, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. A worsted-mill furnishes employment to some of the population. There are charities amounting to £26 per annum.

ALREWAS HAYES, an ext. par. lib., in the northern div. of the hund. of Offlow, in the co. of Stafford, close to Alrewas.

ALSAGER, a chplry. in the par. of Barthomley, hund. of Nantwich, in the co. palatine of Chester, 4 miles to the S.E. of Sandbach. It is situated near the Trunk canal and the river Wenlock, and is a station on the North Staffordshire railway. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Chester, val. £100, in the patron. of the landowners. The chapel was erected and endowed by Mary, Judith, and Margaret Alsager. There is a free school for boys and girls, which was also founded and endowed by them. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists.

ALSOP-LE-DALE, a chplry. in the par. of Ashbourne, hund. of Wirksworth, in the co. of Derby, 6 miles to the N.W. of Ashbourne. The river Dove runs near it. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £49, in the patron. of the inhabitants and freeholders. The chapel, originally in the Norman style, but considerably altered, is dedicated to St. Michael. Alsop lies within the Duchy of Lancaster and the jurisdiction of a court held at Tutbury once a fortnight for the recovery of small debts.

ALSTOE HUNDRED, one of the 5 hunds. in the co. of Rutland, bounded on the N. by Leicestershire and Lincolnshire, on the E. by East hundred, on the S. and W. by Martinsley hundred and Oakham Soke hundred; it contains the pars. of Ashwell, Burley, Cottesmore, Exton, Greetham, Horn, Market Overton, Stretton, Teigh, Thistleton, Whissendine, and Whitwell. The hund. extends over an area of about 27,900 acres.

ALSTON, or ALSTON MOOR, a par. and market town in Leath ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 29 miles to the S.E. of Carlisle, or 35 miles by rail; and 281 miles from London, or 290 by the Great Northern and York, Newcastle and Berwick railways. It contains the curacies of Garrigill and Nenthead, and the hmlts. of Clarghyll, Nentsbury, Leadgate, and Nenthall. The town stands on the slope of a hill, on the right bank of the south Tyne, near the confluence of the Nent with that river. Each of these rivers is crossed by a stone bridge, that over the Tyne being a handsome new one. In the western part of the parish are some traces of the Roman road called Maiden Way, and at Hall Hill, a little below Tyne bridge, are the foundations of an ancient fortress surrounded by a moat. The surrounding district is chiefly moorland, shut in on all sides by lofty hills. On the west are the mountains Cross-fell and Hartside. Large flocks of black-faced sheep are pastured on the moors. There are magnificent views, at several points on the new road from Hexham to Penrith, over the lake of Ullswater, the mountains of Cumberland and Westmoreland, the Solway Frith, and the coast of Scotland. The sterility of the surface in this district is compensated by the wealth of its mines. The parish of Alston contains about forty large and productive lead mines, yielding usually about nine thousand tons per annum. A small proportion of silver is contained in the ore, not exceeding on the average, ten ounces per ton. In the ore, from one of the mines, a much larger proportion has been found, nearly a hundred ounces per ton. Copper is also obtained. There are some magnificent caverns in the mountain limestone, splendid with variously coloured crystals of fluor-spar, the yellow copper-ore, and pyrites One of the caverns, called Tutman's Hole, extends for a mile from its entrance. There are large smelting furnaces, and machines for breaking and cleansing the ore. Thread and flannel are manufactured on a large scale. There is a grand subterranean aqueduct, called "Nent Force," 5 miles in length, from the town to the Nenthead shaft. This was constructed by the trustees of Greenwich Hospital, the owners of the estates, which were forfeited in 1715, by James, Earl of Derwentwater, and were conferred on them by act of parliament. The town is irregularly built, the houses mostly of stone and roofed with slate. A very handsome building has just been erected in the centre of the town, consisting of news-rooms, mechanics' institution, and reading-room, with board-room and townhall above; costing upwards of £2,000, which has been raised by voluntary contributions. The market cross was erected by Sir William Stephenson, Bart., who was lord mayor of London, in 1764. The living is a discharged vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, val., with the cur. of Garrigill, £139, in the patron of the governors of Greenwich Hospital. The church, which was rebuilt in 1770, is dedicated to St. Augustine. There is a chapel of ease at Garrigill, 4 miles to the S.E. of the town, and a handsome new district church at Nenthead, the living of which is a perpet. cur.,* val. £140, in the patron. of the vicar. There are also places of worship belonging to the Independents, the Society of Friends, and the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists. The grammar school, which was rebuilt in 1828, has an endowment of £22 per ann. The subscription library was established in 1821. The national school, at Nenthead, was founded in 1820, by the London Lead Company, who still support it in conjunction with the governors of Greenwich Hospital. Petty sessions are held in the town, once a month, by the county magistrates; the county court is also held once in two months, and the board of guardians meet every fortnight. Saturday is the market day. Fairs take place on the third Saturday in March, the last Thursday in May, the Saturday on or before the 27th September, and the first Thursday in November; a tup fair, and also a cattle show, in October.

ALSTON, a tnshp. united with Hothersall, in the par. of Ribchester, hund. of Amounderness, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 7 miles to the N.E. of Preston, and not far from Long Ridge fell. Alston Lodge is the principal residence.

ALSTONE, a tythg. in the par. of Cheltenham, hund. of Cheltenham, in the co. of Gloucester, less than 1 mile from Cheltenham. The Gloucester and Birmingham railway passes through it. There is here a chalybeate spring. The chief residence is Alstone Villa.

ALSTONE, a hmlt. in the par. of Gnosall, hund. of West Cuttlestone, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles to the S.W. of Stafford.

ALSTONE, a chplry. in the par. of Overbury, hund. of Oswaldslow, in the co. of Worcester, 4 miles to the N.W. of Winchcomb, and at a short distance from the Cotswold hills. Tewkesbury is the post town. The living is a cur. united with the vic. of Overbury, in the dioc. of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

ALSTONEFIELD, Staffordshire. See ALLSTONEFIELD.

ALT, a hmlt. in the district of Knott Lanes, in the par. of Ashton-under-Lyne, hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster.

ALTARNUN, or ALTERNON, a par. in the hund. of Lesnewth, in the co. of Cornwall, 7 miles to the S.W. of Launceston. It is the largest parish in Cornwall, and comprises the curacy of Bolventer and the hmlts. of Trewint, Tredawl, Trelyn, Treveage, and four others. It is pleasantly situated on the river Inny, not far from the fine granite peak and seamark named Brown Willey, which rises to the height of 1,360 feet, and on which most of the streams in the district take their rise. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £320, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Nunn, or Noneth, whose burial-place it was, and who was the mother of St. David of Wales. The tower of this church is loftier than any other in Cornwall, except that of Probus. The Wesleyan Methodists and Bible Christians have chapels here. There is also a district church at the village of Bolventer, and a chapel for Bible Christians. Tregune Consols is a copper and tin mine. In this parish is Trehawney, the ancient seat of the family of that name. A little to the north of Altarnun is a pool, or lake, called Dosmery Pool, the only lake in the county, and concerning which some "strange conceits" were held of old. It is in the midst of the moors, and is about a mile in circumference, having no visible spring, nor any outlet. Cattle fairs are held at Five Lanes, one of the hamlets in this parish, on the second Monday after the 7th of July, and the last Thursday in October.

ALTAVIG, or ALTIVAIG, the southernmost of a group of flat islets, to which it usually gives name, on the N.E. coast of Skye, Scotland. There was formerly a little old chapel on it, dedicated to St. Turos.

ALTBOUGH, a tnshp. in the par. of Hentland, in the lower div. of Wormelow hund., in the co. of Hereford,

4 miles to the N.W. of Ross railway station. The soil is red loam.

ALTCAR, a par. in the hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 6 miles to the S.W. of Ormskirk. It is a station on the Liverpool and Southport branch of the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway. The river Alt passes through it. The hamlet of Little Altcar is included in this parish. The living is a cur.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £150, in the patron. of the Earl of Sefton. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a school, with a small endowment.

ALTCONLACHAN, or ALTACHOGLACHAN, a small river in the pars. of Mortlach and Inveraven, in the co. of Banff, Scotland. On its banks a famous battle, commonly named from Glenlivet, was fought in 1594.

ALTHAM, a chplry. in the par. of Whalley, and in the higher div. of the hund. of Blackburn, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the W. of Burnley. It is on the river Henburn, and not far from the Leeds and Liverpool canal. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £150, in the patron. of R. T. R. Walton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. There are some coal mines in the neighbourhood.

ALTHORNE, a par. in the hund. of Dengie, or Denzie, in the co. of Essex, 6 miles to the S.E. of Maldon. It is situated in the marshes, at the estuary of the river Crouch, and is protected from inundation by strong dykes, 9 feet high, constructed by workmen from Holland, whose descendants still reside here. The living is a vic. united, since 1811, with the rectory of Cricksea, in the dioc. of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ALTHORPE, a par. in the western div. of the wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 5 miles to the N.E. of Epworth. Bawtry is the post town. It is situated on the Trent, at the junction of the Keadby canal, and the rivers New Idle and New Thorne, with that river. It contains the chplry. of Amcotts, the tnshp. of Keadby, and the hmlt. of Derrythorpe. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £400, in the patron. of the crown. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. In addition to the parish church, there is a new district church at Amcotts, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £260, in the patron. of the crown. There are parochial charities of small amount, and a poor's house.

ALTHORPE, or ALTHORPE PARK, an ext. par. district, in the hund. of Nobottle Grove, in the co. of Northampton, 7 miles N.W. of Northampton. It now contains only the noble mansion of Earl Spencer, situated on the road to Ruby.

ALTIMARLACH, a burn in the par. of Wick, in the co. of Caithness, Scotland. Its banks were the scene of a famous encounter on the 13th of July, 1680, in which Campbell of Glenorchy, afterwards Earl of Breadalbane, defeated 400 of the Sinclairs, and slew so many that the victors passed the river dry-shod on their bodies. It was in commemoration of this feud that the names were given to the well-known airs, "The Campbells are coming," and "The Braes of Glenorchy."

ALTOFTS, a tnshp. in the par. of Normanton, and lower div. of the wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N.E. of Wakefield. It lies on the river Calder and the North Midland railway, which is here carried across that river, and across the Aire and Calder canal.

ALTON, a par. and market town in the hund., div., and union of the same name, in the co. of Hants, 17 miles to the N.E. of Winchester, and 47 miles from London, or 49 miles by the London and South Western railway. It is a place of great antiquity, as its name, signifying Old Town, indicates. A Roman cemetery probably existed here, as urns and other funeral relics have been lately dug up in the town. It was called by the Saxons Aweltuna, and was a royal demesne in the reign of Alfred. It is supposed by some to be the Æthelingadene, where a battle with the Danes was fought, in the year 1001. It returned a representative to one parliament of Edward I. and to one of Edward II. It was in the wood, a few miles from Alton, that Edward I., when prince, vanquished and made prisoner the outlaw, Adam de Gurdon. In December, 1643, the town was taken by Sir William Waller, who defeated the royalist forces, under Colonel Bowles. Alton, which consists of three principal streets, is pleasantly situated on the river Wey, in the neighbourhood of extensive hop plantations, in a hilly and wooded country. The market-house has lately been enlarged, and additional facilities given to the farmers and dealers frequenting the market. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val., with the curacies of Holybourne and Thedden attached to it, £728, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church, which is dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a large structure, in the perpendicular style, and has a square embattled tower, with a spire. It contains a fresco painting of Henry VI., and two bishops, and two interesting brasses. The Society of Friends, the Independents, Presbyterians, and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. There is a free grammar school, which was founded in 1642, by John Eggar, for the education of twenty-five boys. Its present revenue is £81. Part of the townhall, which stands in the market-place, was used as a national school-house, in which about 200 children were taught. There is now a national school, partly endowed, and a British school-house for both sexes. There is also a mechanics' institute, with a library of 1,000 volumes, an extensive lunatic asylum, an almshouse, a savings-bank, and a literary society. Petty sessions are held here by the county magistrates for the Alton division; a county court is also established; and polling for the county takes place here. The paper and silk mills, and the serge, drugget, and woollen manufactures, give employment to many hands. The bombazine manufacture, once carried on to a large extent, has declined. There are some large breweries in the town, for the ale for which it is famed. Alton was the birthplace of William of Alton, a Dominican friar, who lived in the reign of Edward II.; of John Pitts, the biographer, author of the book "De Illustribus Angliæ Scriptoribus," who was born in 1660; of William Curtis, the botanist, born in 1746; and J. Curtis, the physician. Thedden Grange is the principal seat near Alton. The market is held on Tuesday for corn, and every alternate Tuesday for cattle and sheep; and fairs on the last Saturday of April, the 5th July, and the 29th September.

ALTON, a vil. in the par. of Loudoun, in the co. of Ayr, Scotland.

ALTON, or ALVETON, a par. in the southern div. of the hund. of Totmonslow, in the co. of Stafford, 4 miles to the E. of Cheadle. It is a station on the Churnet Valley branch of the North Staffordshire railway, 4 miles to the E. of Cheadle, and 24 miles from Macclesfield. The town is situated on the river Churnet, in the midst of fine scenery, the course of the river here lying in a beautiful valley. The Caldon or Uttoxeter canal, after running in a parallel course with the river for a few miles, is here carried across it on an aqueduct. The parish contains the chplry. of Cotton, and the tnshps. of Denston and Farley. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £151, in the gift of the Earl of Shrewsbury, who is lord of the manor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter, and is a stone building, partly rebuilt in 1830. The original church, dedicated to St. James, was a Norman building, erected in the 12th century by Bertram de Verdun, lord of Alton, and given by him to the abbey of Croxden; some ruins of it are still remaining. There is also a chapel of ease in the township of Cotton, built in 1795 by T. Gilbert, Esq. The Roman Catholics, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. There is a free school, which was established and endowed in 1721, by Anthony Wall, now open to all children of the parish; its present revenue being £11. National schools were erected in 1845. There are also Roman Catholic schools, instituted by the late Earl of Shrewsbury. Alveton Castle, the seat of the De Verdons, in the reign of Henry II., stood on a rock, by the river, above 300 feet in height. The ruins of it still exist. There are also within this parish remains of a large camp, with a double ditch on three sides, and protected on the fourth by a steep incline. It is supposed to have been formed about the year 715, by one of the kings of Mercia. In 1840, the Earl of Shrewsbury erected, near the old castle, a hospital for aged people, dedicated to St. John. On the northern slope of the Churnet Valley, opposite to the village, stands Alton Towers, the noble seat of the Earl of Shrewsbury. Fifty years ago, the site of this mansion and its park and gardens was a rabbit warren. It is now a scene of such extraordinary magnificence and beauty, as to be named by the great landscape gardener and botanist, Mr. Loudon, the Enchanted Valley. The mansion, which stands on a hill formerly called Bunbury, in the township of Farley, was begun by Charles, the sixteenth Earl, in the year 1814. After his death, in 1827, many additions and improvements were made by his successor. The architecture is of various styles, principally Gothic. A fine sheet of water spreads out in front of the hall, which is flanked with terraces, and adorned with a lofty tower, and many turrets and pinnacles. It contains a lofty entrance hall, armoury, picture gallery, octagon, conservatory, long gallery, dining and drawing rooms, libraries, chapel, and other apartments, to name and describe which would take a volume. From the entrance hall, which opens into the armoury, there is a splendid view down the galleries, extending nearly 160 yards. The armoury, which is about 120 feet in length, has, in the centre, a statue of John Talbot, the great Earl of Shrewsbury, and round the sides are twenty-four figures in complete armour. Specimens of guns, weapons, &c., are arranged on tables. This apartment communicates with the picture gallery by a screen formed of spears and halberts. In the picture gallery, which is 150 feet in length, is a large and valuable collection of works of art. A large number of the paintings are from the collection of Madame Bonaparte. Among them are the kneeling Madonna of Raphael, a Madonna by Da Vinci, the Prodigal Son of Bonifaccio, Magdalens by Paul Veronese and by Guido, and works by Spagnoletto, Giorgione, Cano, Murillo, Valasquez, &c. There are numerous busts, vases, antiques, &c., in the octagon, which is, like a chapter-house, supported by one central column. The conservatory contains many statues. The fittings up of the chapel are very costly and splendid, gold crosses on the altarpiece, paintings on the walls, a fine screen by Pugin, and stained windows by Willement. The gardens reach to the river side, the terraces being connected by flights of steps, and they abound in temples, grottoes, fountains, falls, statues, and greenhouses. An elegant structure, on the model of the ancient Choragic Temple of Lysicrates, at Athens, stands near the entrance to the gardens. Views over the whole magical scene are obtained at the Harper's Cottage and the Gothic Temple. A celebrated lawsuit respecting this magnificent estate and mansion, has recently terminated in favour of Earl Talbot, of Ingestree Hall, who in June, 1858, was declared, by a Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords, to have established his claim to the earldom of Shrewsbury; and in February, 1860, was adjudged by the Exchequer Court to be the owner of the estates.

ALTON, a constablewick in the par. of Rock, and lower div. of the hund. of Doddingtree, in the co. of Worcester, 4 miles to the W. of Bewdley, at a short distance from the Forest of Wyre.

ALTON-BARNES, or BERNERS, a par. in the hund. of Swanborough, in the co. of Wilts, 6 miles to the E. of Devizes. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through it. This place was formerly a possession of the nunnery of Amesbury. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £234, in the patron. of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALTON HUNDRED, in the Alton div. of the co. of Hants, is bounded on the N. by Crondale hundred, on the E. by the county of Surrey and part of the hundred of Bishop's Sutton, on the S. by the county of Sussex and part of Odiham hundred, Selborne and Barton Stacey hundreds, and on the W. by Bishop's Sutton, Fawley, and Odiham hundreds. It contains the pars. of Binstead, Chawton, Dockenfield, Headley, Froyle, Hartley-Maudit, Holybourne, Kingsley, Neatham, Shalcham, East Worldham, and West Worldham.

ALTON-PANCRAS, a lib. and par. in the Cerne div. of the co. of Dorset, 8 miles to the N. of Dorchester. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £120, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Alton Downs, near this village, is a meet for the Blackmoor harriers.

ALTON-PRIORS, a chplry. in the par. of Overton, in the hund. of Elstub and Everley, in the co. of Wilts, 7 miles to the E. of Devizes. It contains the tything of West Stowell, which was one of the possessions of the priory of Winchester. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the vic. of Overton, in the dioc. of Salisbury. The church, which is dedicated to All Saints, contains a brass of the year 1528.

ALTRINCHAM, or ALTRINGHAM, a market town and chplry. in the par. of Bowdon, and hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 28 miles to the N.E. of Chester, 8 miles S.W. of Manchester, with which it is now connected by a railway, and 197 miles by rail from London. Its pleasant and healthful situation near Bowdon Downs has long made it attractive to invalids from Manchester, and since the construction of the railway, many of the business men of Manchester have gone to reside at Altrincham, for whose convenience trains are run frequently through the day. The town, which is neat and clean, lies near the river Mersey, and the Bridgwater canal from Manchester to Runcorn passes through it. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £210, in the patron. of the vicar. The church, which is dedicated to St. George, was built by subscription in 1799. There are chapels belonging to the Unitarians, Roman Catholics, and Independents, and two to the Methodists, besides a floating chapel, in connection with the Church of England, on the canal. The jubilee school for eighty girls was established in 1810, and is supported by voluntary contributions. The principal occupations of the place now are the weaving of linen thread, and turning of bobbins for the cotton and worsted spinners. Vegetables and fruit are grown in the neighbourhood for the Manchester market. The Earl of Stamford has lately erected a townhall here. The market is on Tuesday, and fairs are held on the 22nd April, the 5th August, and the 22nd November, for the sale of cattle and sheep. A county court is held here. By a charter granted in the reign of Edward I. by Hamon de Massy, lord of Dunham Massy, Altrincham was made a free burgh, and the burgesses had power to choose a guild merchant and a bailiff. A mayor is still elected in the autumn, but his office is nominal, the only duty in connection with it being that of opening the fairs. The charities of the place amount to £57.

ALTYRE, a par. now united with Rafford, in the co. of Moray, Scotland, 2 miles to the S.E. of Forres. There is an ancient church, which contains monuments of the Earls of Badenoch, whose representative, Sir W. Cumming, Bart., resides at the mansion house of Altyre, a seat in the modern Italian style of architecture.

ALUM BAY, a remarkable bay near the most westerly extremity of the Isle of Wight, in Hampshire; having at its northern limit the lofty Headon Hill, separating it from Totland's Bay; and at its southern limit, the singular detached rocks called the Needles. The bay is enclosed by cliffs rising to the height of 300 or 400 feet. At the western end they are of chalk, of a delicate pearl colour, with thin layers of wood coal; but on the eastern side they consist of vertical strata singularly varying in character,—red and yellow ochres, fullers' earth, black flints, and grey and white sands. The white sand, which is very pure, is exported largely for the manufacture of glass and porcelain. Of the coloured sands, chimney ornaments are made, by arranging them after various patterns in glass phials. Alum and copperas stones are found and exported. The water in the bay is very clear, and the sea-bed is rocky.

ALUM GREEN, an ext. par. place in the par. of Lyndhurst, New Forest hund., in the co. of Southampton, 8 miles to the N.W. of Lymington. It is situated in the New Forest, on the Lymington river.

ALVA, a par. in the co. of Stirling, but detached from it, and lying locally in the co. of Clackmannan, to which it is attached, by the Reform Act, for political purposes, Scotland, 3 miles to the N. of Alloa. It is situated on the river Devon, lying partly in the charming valley of that river, and partly among the Ochil hills. It was at one time a possession of the abbey of Cambuskenneth. Great part of the surface consists of hill pastures, other parts are under tillage or wooded. Coal is found, and valuable ores of various kinds; iron, lead, copper, silver, &c. The woollen manufacture is carried on in the village. The living is within the presb. of Stirling, val. £157, in the patron. of the Johnstones of Alva, who are also the sole heritors. The parish church was rebuilt in 1815. There is also a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church, which was opened in 1843. The Ochils rise at Bencleuch to the height of 2,420 feet. Craig Leith is a lofty perpendicular rock on Bencleuch, and was at one time celebrated for its breed of falcons, which were usually appropriated to the service of royalty. Snow lies occasionally till late in the summer in a hollow near Craig Leith, and it is named in the poetical language of the peasantry, "Lady Alva's Web." Alva House, the seat of the Johnstones, stands on a hill projecting from the base of Wood-hill, which rises 1,400 feet above it, making the whole height 1,620 feet. The view from the summit of Woodhill, over the Frith of Forth and the coast of Fife, is very fine. The par. has an area of about 10 square miles.

ALVAH, a par. in the co. of Banff, Scotland, 2 miles to the S. of Banff. It is pleasantly situated in the fertile valley of the river Deveron, not far from the bridge at Alvah Craigs. The course of the river is very winding and picturesque, and there are some fine woods. Alvah Hill, which is about 578 feet in height, stands apart, and is a well known sea-mark. There are eight or nine rural mills within the parish, and a large distillery at Montblairie. The living is in the presb. of Turriff, val. £179, in the patron. of Sir R. Abercromby. The church, erected in 1792, is the only place of worship in the parish. A castle once stood near Montblairie, but all traces of it are now obliterated. There are several small cairns and tumuli in the parish, and a well, once famed for its sovereign charms, but now fallen into disrepute.

ALVANLEY, a chplry. in the par. of Frodsham, second div. of the hund. of Eddisbury, in the co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the S.W. of Frodsham. It lies not far from Delamere forest. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £47, in the patron. of the Hon. Miss Arden. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Alvanley gives the title of baron to the Arden family, who have long held it. The ancient manor-house formerly stood on the site of the present Alvanley Hall farm.

ALVASTON, a chplry. in the par. of St. Michael, in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, in the co. of Derby, 3 miles to the S.E. of Derby. It is situated on the river Derwent, near the Midland railway, and the Derby canal goes through the parish. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £116, in the gift of the parishioners. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. The principal residence is Alvaston House.

ALVASTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Nantwich, hund. of Nantwich, in the co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the N.E. of Nantwich. Races are held here once a year.

ALVECHURCH, a par. belonging to the middle div. of the hund. of Oswaldslow, but detached from it and lying locally in the upper. div. of the hund. of Halfshire, in the co. of Worcester, 4 miles to the N.E. of Bromsgrove. It is a station on the Redditch branch of the Birmingham, Gloucester, and Bristol section of the Midland railway. It is situated on the Birmingham and Worcester canal. The Roman way called Icknield, or Ryknield Street, passes through the parish. Alvechurch was a borough at a very early period, and the bishops of Worcester had a palace here from the reign of Henry II. till the period of the civil war. In the year 1648, the manor was sold by the parliament, and the episcopal palace fell into decay and disappeared. The living is a rect.* val. £1,200, in the dioc. of Worcester, in the patron. of the Bishop of Worcester. The church is chiefly in the early English style, with some Norman pillars and a modern tower. It is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a free school established and endowed in 1742 by Dr. Worth, which has an income of £36. Lewkner's Hospital, which was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, is for nine persons, and has a revenue of £33. The rect. of Alvechurch was held by Moore, the Nonconformist, and by Dr. Hickes, the learned author of the "Thesaurus Septentrionalium Linguarum."

ALVELEY, a par. in the hund. of Stottesden, in the co. of Salop, 6 miles to the S.E. of Bridgnorth. It is situated on the eastern bank of the river Severn, and comprises the lib. of Romsley, which is within the lib. of the borough of Bridgnorth, and the tnshp. of King's Nordley. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £103, in the patron. of Mrs. Wakeman. The church, which had formerly a chantry, is dedicated to St. Mary. A free school was founded here in 1616, by John Grove, for poor children of the parish. Its present income is £26. He also founded some almshouses for decayed labourers.

ALVERDISCOTT, or ALSCOTT, a par. in the hund. of Fremington, in the co. of Devon, 4 miles to the S.E. of Bideford, and 5½ miles S.W. from Barnstaple railway station. The village is situated on the old coach road between Barnstaple and Torrington. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £168, in the patron. of W. Lee, Esq. The church, which is dedicated to All Saints, has a fine porch, and contains some interesting monuments. There is a Wesleyan chapel and village schools.

ALVERSTOKE and GOSPORT LIBERTIES, situated in the Fareham div. of the co. of Southampton, comprise the par. of Alverstoke, in which is the town of Gosport.

ALVERSTOKE, a par. co-extensive with the libs. of Alverstoke and Gosport, in the Fareham div. of the co. of Southampton, on the western side of Portsmouth harbour. It comprises the town and port of Gosport, a suburb of Portsmouth, and the chplries. and hmlts. of Gosport, Forton, Anglesey, Hardway, and Elson. It is situated on the coast of Stoke Bay, 2 miles from the Gosport terminus of the South Western railway. Part of the new works for the defence of the harbour of Portsmouth are in this parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val., with the cur. of Anglesey, £1,087, in the patron. of the Bishop of Winchester. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is very ancient, having been founded by Bishop Henry de Blois in the year 1130, on occasion of his deliverance from shipwreck. In this church is the tomb of "gallant Kempenfelt," who perished with his "twice four hundred men," on the sinking of the Royal George, in August, 1782. A new chapel, dedicated to St. Matthew, at Gosport, has been erected by the commissioners under the act of parliament for such purposes, the living of which is a cur., val. £200, in the patron. of the bishop and the rector, alternately. There are also three chapels of ease—Trinity, at Gosport; St. John's, Forton; and St. Thomas, Elson. They are all perpet. curs.* in the patron. of the rector. There is a school-house which was built by the present Bishop of Oxford, and a national school, of large dimensions, erected in 1842. Haslar hospital is in this parish. It is a spacious brick building near the entrance to Portsmouth harbour, extending in front about 570 feet, and having two wings about 550 feet in length. It is capable of receiving 2,000 patients. It contains besides apartments for the governor, officers, and nurses, a chapel and a museum. The grounds belonging to it extend nearly a mile. It was erected on the suggestion of Earl Sandwich, about the middle of the 18th century. Soldiers form a large class of the population of Alverstoke. The town was within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court at Winchester. See GOSPORT.

ALVERSTONE, a vil. in the par. of Brading, lib. of East Medina, in the Isle of Wight, in Hampshire, not far from Brading, and 2 miles E. of Newchurch. It was formerly a chapelry.

ALVERTHORPE, a tnshp. united with Thornes, in the par. of Wakefield, wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 1 mile to the N.W. of Wakefield. It is situated near the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway, and includes the hmlt. of Fanshaw and three others. It lies partly within the limits of the borough of Wakefield. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £150, in the patron. of the vicar. The church is large, and in the perpendicular style. It was built in 1825, and contains above 1,500 sittings, more than half of them being free. There are three almshouses. This tnshp. is an ancient seat of the Maude family.

ALVERTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Kilvington, in the southern div. of the wap. of Newark, in the co. of Nottingham, 7 miles to the S. of Newark. It was the estate of the Hewit family.

ALVES, a par. in the co. of Elgin, Scotland, 5 miles to the W. of Elgin. It lies in a pleasant district, on the coast of the Moray Frith, and comprises the hmlts. of Coltfield and Crook. There are quarries of freestone and millstone. The only relic of feudal times is the Castle of Asleisk, on the demesne of the Earl of Fife. The Knock of Alves is a small wooded hill at the east end of the parish, with which a tradition has been connected of Macbeth and the witches. The soil is generally fertile. The living is in the presb. of Elgin, val. £215, in the patron. of the Earl of Moray. The parish church was built in 1769, and has 590 sittings. There is also a Free church, three private schools, and a small parochial library. The par. contains about 25 square miles.

ALVESCOTT, a par. in the hund. of Bampton, in the co. of Oxford, 3 miles to the W. of Bampton. Faringdon is the post town. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £371, in the patron. of the Rev. T. Neate, who is lord of the manor. The church, which is ancient, is in the form of a cross, and has a tower in the plain Norman style. There is a school endowed by Goddard Carter, in 1723, with £5 a year, being half a rentcharge of £10, of which the other half was bequeathed for the purpose of apprenticing poor children. Alvescott was at one time a possession of Tewkesbury Abbey.

ALVESDISTON, a par. in the hund. of Chalk, in the co. of Wilts, 9 miles to the S.W. of Wilton. Cranbourne Chase is within a few miles of it on the S.E. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £271, in the patron. of the Vicar of Broadchalke. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ALVESTON, a par. in the upper and lower divs. of the hund. of Langley and Swinehead, in the co. of Gloucester, 3 miles to the S. of Thornbury. It is situated within a short distance of the Cotswold hills. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £250, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church, which stands apart from the village, has a low tower, and contains some monumental brasses. Alveston House is the principal residence.

ALVESTON, or AULSTON, a par. in the Snitterfield div. of the hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 2 miles to the N.E. of Stratford. It lies in a pleasant country on the river Avon, at the foot of the Welcombe hills. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £220, in the patron. of the rector of Hampton-Lucy. The church, which is dedicated to St. James, contains monuments of the Lucys. The parish charities amount to £46. Alveston House is the principal residence.

ALVETON, Staffordshire. See ALTON.

ALVIE, a par. in the district of Badenoch, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, 11 miles to the N.E. of Pitman. It is situated at the foot of the Monadlia mountains, which bound it on the N.W., and it extends southward to the Grampians. It is intersected by the river Spey, which rises in the Braes of Badenoch, 30 miles from Alvie. Alvie contains the quoad sacra par. of Insh, and the vil. of Lynchat. Most of the surface is barren and mountainous, rising at the southern end of the parish to a height of 4,500 feet. There is one small lake, Loch Alvie, about a mile long and half a mile broad. Perch are caught in it. Granite and limestone are obtained in the mountains. The living is in the presb. of Abernethy, val. £158, in the patron. of the Duke of Richmond. The parish church was built in 1798, and repaired in 1833. There is a government church at Inch, within 4 miles of the parish church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. Kinrara, in a romantic glen 2 miles from the village, was the favourite summer seat of the late Duchess of Gordon, whose remains were, by her own desire, interred there. Belleville was the seat of James Macpherson, the author of Ossian's poems. It has since been the residence of Sir David Brewster.

ALVINGHAM, a par. in the Marsh div. of the hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 3 miles to the N.E. of Louth. The Louth canal passes through this parish. In the reign of Henry II., a priory of Gilbertine nuns and canons was founded here by Walter de Bec, and was dedicated to the Virgin and St. Athelwold. Its revenue at the Dissolution was £142; it was conferred on the Clintons. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. with that of Cockerington, which is annexed to it, £130. It is in the patron. of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Athelwold. There are charities amounting to £8 a year, and some poor's cottages.

ALVINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Bledisloe, in the co. of Gloucester, 6 miles to the N.E. of Chepstow. Blakeney is the post town. It is situated on the river Severn. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the rect. of Wollastone, in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol. Alvington was formerly a cell to the abbey of Llantony. Clanna House is the seat of the Hon. W. Noel, lord of the manor.

ALVINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Brimpton, in the hund. of Stone, in the co. of Somerset, 2 miles to the W. of Yeovil.

ALVINGTON, EAST, Devonshire. See ALLINGTON.

ALVINGTON, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Stanborough, in the co. of Devon, 1 mile to the S.W. of Kingsbridge. It was formerly a market town. It comprises the chdry. of Salcombe, situated on Salcombe Creek, a small portion of Marlborough, and several hmlts. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £888, with the perpet. curs. of South Huish, Marlborough, and South Milton, which are annexed to it. It is in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient building with embattled tower, surmounted by four ornamental pinnacles. It contains some monuments of the Bastards, who formerly owned the manor. There is also a district church at Salcombe, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £200, in the patron. of the vicar; and a small chapel adjoining the parish of Kingsbridge, now used by the Calvinists. There is a small endowed free school. Alvington is celebrated for its cider, which is of very fine quality. This place is a meet for the Marlborough harriers. Bouring's Leigh is a very ancient mansion, in the Tudor style, now occupied as a farm-house. The modern mansion is Combe Royal, which has extensive pleasure grounds.

ALWALTON, a par. in the hund. of Normancross, in the co. of Huntingdon, 4 miles to the S.W. of Peterborough, and 3 from the Wansford railway station. The river Nen passes through it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £200, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Norman and early English styles are found singularly combined in the body of the church. It has a decorated chancel, and a fine porch. Alwalton once belonged to the monks of Peterborough. The parochial charities amount to £5. Alwalton Castle is the chief residence.

ALWINGTON, a par. in the hund. of North Shebbear, in the co. of Devon, 4 miles to the S.W. of Bideford railway station. It lies on the river Yeo, which here flows through a valley, and not far from the coast of Barnstaple Bay. It includes the hmlts. of Fairy Cross, Ford, and Woodtown. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £243, in the patron. of the Rev. J. T. P. Coffin, Esq. The charities of the parish, including the almshouses, amount to £16. The manor of Alwington has been held by the Coffin family from the Conquest. A chapel formerly stood in Yeo Vale, of which there are still remains.

ALWINTON, Northumberland. See ALLENTON.

ALWOODLEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Harewood, in the upper div. of the wap. of Skyrack, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N. of Leeds. It was once the estate of Sir Gervase Clifton.

ALYTH, a par. partly in the co. of Forfar, but chiefly in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 4 miles from Meigle, and 18 miles to the N.E. of Perth, at a short distance from the Dundee and Newtyle railway. The town stands in a pleasant situation at the foot of Alyth Hill, on the river Isla, which forms the southern boundary of the parish. Under a charter granted by King James III., Alyth is a burgh of barony, and belongs to the Earl of Airly, who takes hence the title of Baron of Alyth. The district is hilly, having an elevation of 1,179 feet at the Hill of King's-seat, but the soil along the valley of the Islar is extremely fertile. There is a good supply of game in Alyth forest, among the mosses of which the burn of Alyth rises, which joins the Isla at Mount Blair, the highest ground in the parish. The principal occupation of the inhabitants is the weaving of coarse linens for the Dundee trade. The living is in the presb. of Meigle, val. £230, in the patron. of the crown. The church is an elegant structure, in the Norman style of architecture, built in 1839, and contains 1,290 sittings. There is also a Free church containing 806 sittings, and chapels belonging to the Episcopalians and United Presbyterians. There are extensive and well-preserved remains of an ancient entrenchment, believed to be Pictish, on Barry Hill. It is the subject of many legends, the predominant tradition being that it formed the prison of the renowned Guinevre, wife of the hero Prince Arthur. Her local name is Queen Wander, and she is represented as a wicked giantess. On the south side of the same hill are some rude pillars, which evidently belong to a very remote antiquity. A market is held at Alyth on Tuesday, and there are several fairs in the course of the year. The par. has an area of about 30 square miles.

AMASTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Alberbury, in the hund. of Ford, in Shropshire, 7 miles to the W. of Shrewsbury.

AMBERLEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Minchinhampton, in the hund. of Longtree, in the co. of Gloucester, not far from Minchinhampton. It comprises the hmlts. of Littleworth, Theescombe, and St. Cloe, which were granted to the parish in the reign of Henry VIII. The living is a rect. consolidated with Minchinhampton. An object of great interest in this hamlet, is the great dyke called Woeful Dane Bottom. It is 8 feet in height, and extends in length 3 miles.

AMBERLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Marden, in the hund. of Broxash, in the co. of Hereford. It is distant about 2 miles E. from the village church of Marden, which is a very ancient and noble structure in the early English style; it formerly had a small chapel of its own, called Amberley chapel, but at present it is in ruins. It maintains its own poor.

AMBERLEY, or AMERLEY, a par. in the hund. of West Easwrith, rape of Arundel, in the co. of Sussex, 3 miles to the N.E. of Arundel. It is situated on the banks of the river Arun, at the foot of Amberley Downs, and includes the hmlt. of Rackham. The river here contains fine trout, for which Amberley is noted. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. with that of Houghton, £166, in the patron. of the Bishop of Chichester. The church exhibits a mixture of styles, the nave being Norman, the chancel in the early English style. There is a richly sculptured Norman arch between the nave and the chancel. The church contains a monumental brass of the year 1424. There are national schools for forty boys and girls. On the river side are extensive remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to the Bishops of Chichester. It was in the form of a quadrangle, and extended in length about 260 feet, in breadth about 160. It was erected in the latter half of the 14th century, by William Rede, then Bishop of Chichester, who was a distinguished architect. The work occupied him for a period of ten years. The gate-house, part of the original structure, still remains. Bishop Sherborne, who died in 1536, was the last bishop who resided there. The buildings are now converted into a farm-house.

AMBERSHAM, NORTH, a tythg. formerly included in the par. of Steep, Alton div. of the co. of Southampton, but now, under the act called the "County Boundaries Act," 7 & 8 Vict., c. 61, attached to the par. of Farnhurst, in the hund. of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, in the co. of Sussex, 4 miles to the S. of Haslemere.

AMBERSHAM, SOUTH, a tythg. formerly included in the par. of Steep, Alton div. of the co. of Southampton, but now, under the act called the "County Boundaries Act," 7 & 8 Vict., c. 61, attached to the par. of Easebourne, in the hund. of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, in the co. of Sussex, 2 miles to the E. of Midhurst. The river Rother flows through it.

AMBLE, a tnshp. in the par. of Warkworth in the eastern div. of Morpeth ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 7 miles to the S.E. of Alnwick. From the remains of antiquity which have been discovered here, it is concluded that Amble was a place of some importance at an early period. Foundations of a circular form, some unhewn stones, Roman coins, and a causeway have been brought to light. The village stands on a hill at the mouth of the river Coquet, and has a fine sea-view. The coal-mines, which are extensive, afford employment to many of the inhabitants. Amble was formerly a cell to the priory of Tynemouth. Amble House is the principal residence.

AMBLECOTE, a hmlt. in the par. of Old Swinford, in the southern div. of the hund. of Seisdon, in the co. of Stafford, less than 1 mile from Stourbridge. The inhabitants are employed in the glass-houses—of which there are several—the collieries, iron-works, and potteries. A fine blue clay, of which crucibles are made, is obtained here. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £100, in the patron. of the Earl of Stamford.

AMBLESIDE, or AMBLESIDE-ABOVE-AND-BELOW-STOCK, a chplry. and market town, chiefly in the par. of Grasmere, but partly also in the par. of Windermere, Kendal ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, 25 miles to the S.W. of Appleby, and 276 miles from London, or 266 by the Kendal railway, which terminates at Windermere, about 4 miles from Ambleside. The town is situated on the slope of a steep hill, not far from the head of Windermere Lake, amidst lofty mountains, and commands a fine view of the beautiful vale of Rothay. The surrounding country abounds in scenery of extraordinary grandeur and beauty. Among the places and objects of attraction for tourists, may be mentioned Langdale Pikes, Shap Fells, Grasmere, Coniston Water, Rydal, which lie within 7 or 8 miles of Ambleside. Helvellyn and Ulleswater lie a little further off. Stockgill Force, a fine fall of 150 feet, Fairfield, Wans Fell Pike, and Loughrigg, are in the immediate neighbourhood. The town consists chiefly of one street, the houses being mostly detached and well-built. There are numerous lodging-houses for the accommodation of visitors, and the hotels are of a very superior description. The manufacture of bobbins is carried on here. Some of the inhabitants are employed in the quarries, from which slate is procured. There is a market-house which was built in 1796 on the site of an ancient one, also a mechanics' institute, and a small library. A new town-hall was erected in 1858. Near the upper part of the town is a waterfall called Stockdale Force. Under a charter granted by Charles II., a mayor is chosen annually at Christmas; but his office is merely nominal, as the town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight, and the county court once in six weeks or two months. Polling for the county election takes place here. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £80, in the patron. of A. F. Huddlestone, Esq. The old church, which was made parochial in 1675, was rebuilt in 1812, but it is now disused, a new church having been built in 1854. It is a handsome stone building in the early English style, with a lofty spire and 4 bells. There are chapels belonging to the Independents and Methodists. In 1721, John Kelsick established and endowed a free grammar school here, the annual income of which is about £130. The market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on Whit-Wednesday, and the 13th and 29th October. Ambleside Hall was the seat of the Braithwaites; remains of it still exist. There are many handsome modern mansions in the vicinity. Ambleside is supposed to be the Roman Galacum, and the earthworks and various remains of an extensive Roman station are found near the town.

AMBLESTON, a par. in the hund. of Dungleddy, in the co. of Pembroke, South Wales, 7 miles to the N.E. of Haverfordwest. It is watered by a branch of the river Cleddy. It is chiefly interesting as the site of an ancient camp, called by the people Castle Flemish, which is supposed to be the remains of a Roman station. The popular name arose from the circumstance that the camp was at one time occupied by Flemings, who settled in Pembrokeshire. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £183, in the patron. of the Prince of Wales. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a chapel belonging to the Calvinistic Methodists.

AMBRESBURY, Wiltshire. See AMESBURY.

AMBROSDEN, a par. in the hund. of Bullingdon, in the co. of Oxford, 3 miles to the S.E. of Bicester, and 12 N.E. of Oxford. It includes the chplries. of Arncott and Blackthorn. It is watered by the river Ray, and the ancient Roman way from Dorchester, in the same county, passes through the parish. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £228, in the patron. of the trustees of the late Sir G. Page Turner, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, is in the early English style. It stands on the site of a more ancient one, and was erected in the reign of Edward I. The rectory of this village was once held by the learned antiquary, Bishop Kennet, author of the "Parochial Antiquities" of Ambrosden, Bicester, and other places. He derives the name from the famous, but legendary, British chief Ambrosius Aurelius, who had (he says) a camp here, while the Saxons besieged Alchester. There are charities, including the church lands, amounting to £40 per annum.

AMBROSETOWN, a par. in the bar. of Bargy, in the co. of Wexford, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Taghmon. It includes the vil. of Tullycanna, and the townlands of Ballingeal and Rochestown. The living is a rect. forming part of the union of Duncormuck in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin.

AMCOTTS, a tnshp. in the par. of Althorpe, western div. of the wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 5 miles to the E. of Crowle. The township is situated on the river Trent. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £260, in the patron. of the crown. The old chapel, which was dedicated to St. Thomas-à-Becket, fell down about 1850, but has lately been rebuilt. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

AMERSHAM, or AGMONDESHAM, a par., market-town, and municipal borough, in the hund. of Burnham, in the co. of Buckingham, and partly also in the hund. of Dacorum, in the co. of Hertford, 30 miles to the S.E. of Buckingham, and 26 miles from London, or 30 by the London and North Western railway. The town stands in a very pleasant valley, watered by the small river Mesbourn, a branch of the Colne, and surrounded by picturesque and well wooded hills. The hamlet of Coleshill is included in the parish. Its Saxon name was Agmundesham. It was a borough by prescription, and returned two representatives to parliament from the 28th year of the reign of Edward I. to the 2nd of Edward II. Its right was not exercised again till the latter part of the reign of James I. Petition for its restoration was made and granted in 1623, and it continued thenceforth to return two members until it was disfranchised under the Reform Act in 1852. Edmund Waller, the poet, and Algernon Sydney, have been among the representatives of this borough. The town consists chiefly of one long street, on the road from Uxbridge to Wendover, crossed by another street, forming part of the road from Chesham to High Wycombe. Near the centre of the town is the townhall, a handsome structure of brick, supported on pillars, and surmounted by a lantern and clock. The lower part is used as a market-house. It was erected about the year 1680, by Sir William Drake, Bart. The town is well paved and has a good supply of water. The manufacture of cotton, silk, crape, and black lace, formerly carried on here, is discontinued; wooden chairs are made in great numbers for exportation, from the wood of the beech tree, which abounds in the neighbourhood. There are three flour mills, and an extensive brewery, and many women are employed in the manufacture of straw plait. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £1,331, in the gift of Thomas Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq., lord of the manor. The church, which is a spacious brick edifice of the 14th century, and was extensively repaired in 1778, stands near the intersection of the two streets. It is dedicated to St. Mary. It contains a mausoleum of the Drake family, in which, and in the chancel, are some interesting monuments, besides a fine window of stained glass, representing the Twelve Apostles. There are two places of worship belonging to the Baptists, one to the Wesleyans, and one to the Society of Friends. There is a free grammar school, with a revenue of £86, founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by Dr. Robert Challoner, rector of Amersham and canon of Windsor; in connection with which he also established three scholarships at Christ Church College, Oxford. The writing school, endowed by Lord Cheyne, has an income of £20. There is also a Sunday school endowed by William Drake, Jun., with £11 per annum; and an almshouse for six poor widows, erected and endowed by Sir William Drake. The union workhouse, erected in 1838, is a handsome building in the Elizabethan style of architecture. The parochial charities amount altogether to £428. Shardeloes Park, the seat of T. T. Drake, Esq., is about a mile from the town. Queen Elizabeth was entertained there in one of her progresses, by William Tothill, Esq. The hall stands on a hill, overlooking a small lake, and embracing a fine prospect over Amersham and its wooded hills. The manor of Amersham was formerly held by the Neville family, of whom was the great Earl of Warwick, the king-maker, and last of the barons. Several persons suffered death at the stake here, in the reign of Henry V., for following the Lollards. And in the reign of Queen Mary, William Tillsworth and others suffered in the same manner, for holding the doctrines of the Reformation. The market day is Tuesday. Fairs are held on Whit-Monday and the 19th September, chiefly for sheep. Amersham is the seat of a poor-law union.

AMERTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Stowe, hund. of South Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles to the N.E. of Stafford.

AMESBURY HUNDRED, in Wiltshire, is bounded on the N. by Elstub and Everley hundreds, on the E. by the county of Southampton, on the S. by the hundreds of Alderbury and Underditch, and on the W. by the hundred of Branch and Dole. Portions of this hundred lie detached in Berkshire. It contains the pars. of Allington, Amesbury, Boscombe, Bulford, Cholderton, Durnford, Durrington, Figheldean, Ludgershall, Milston, Newton Toney, North Tidworth, West Wellow; besides parts of the four pars. of Hurst, Shinfield, Swallowfield, and Wokingham in Berkshire.

AMESBURY, or AMBRESBURY, a par. in the hund. of Amesbury, in the co. of Wilts, 7 miles to the N. of Salisbury, and 78 miles from London, or 104 miles by the South Western railway. The town is situated in a valley, on the river Avon, and includes the hmlt. of West or Little Amesbury. It was formerly a market town, but the market has been discontinued. It is a place of considerable antiquity. Its name is derived, according to some authorities, from Ambrosius, a Roman and a descendant of Constantine, who became the sovereign of Britain; but according to others, from Ambrius, or Ambrosius, a British monk, the founder of a large monastery, which was destroyed by the Saxons; but both derivations are purely conjectural. During the reign of Edgar, a synod met at Amesbury for the arrangement of disputes between the monks and the clergy. Towards the close of the 10th century, a mitred Benedictine nunnery was founded here, by Elfrida, the widow of Edgar, who hoped, perhaps, thereby to expiate the assassination of her son, at Corfe Castle. The nunnery was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Melorius, a saint of Cornwall. Henry II. expelled the inmates, in 1177, for incontinence, and in the same year placed in it a prioress and nuns from the abbey of Fontevrault, to which it was made a cell. Eleanor, Queen of Henry III., was afterwards abbess in this convent, and died here, in 1291. The establishment continued till the Dissolution, when its revenue amounted to £496. In 1540 it was conferred, with the manor of Amesbury, on Edward, Earl of Hertford. A mansion was erected on its site, by Inigo Jones, for the Duke of Queensberry. This mansion was occupied for some years by a company of nuns from Louvaine, refugees in this country, after the French revolution, in 1789. It is now called Amesbury House, and is the seat of Sir E. Antrobus, Bart. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £141, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Windsor. The church is very old, and is dedicated to the Virgin and St. Melorius. It is of stone and flint, and has been so much altered at various times, that it is hardly possible to distinguish its original style and features. The windows are foliated, and it contains a monumental brass of the year 1470. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. The grammar school, established in 1677, and endowed by John Rose, for the instruction of twenty boys, has a revenue of £80. A free school, for fifty children, has an income of £50, from an endowment by Mr. Spratt. There are also a national school and a charity school, supported by voluntary contributions. The parochial charities amount altogether to £157. Within this parish, and not more than 2 miles from the town, stands that sublime and mysterious monument of the past, Stonehenge. Vespasian's Camp is an ancient entrenchment of considerable extent, on the west side of the town. It covers a space of 40 acres, and is defended by a rampart and ditch. Although named after the Roman emperor, it is believed to be a British work. Several tumuli exist in the neighbourhood. The poet Gay resided some time with the Duke of Queensberry, and wrote some of his best poems in Amesbury House. Fairs are held on the 17th May, the 22nd June, the 6th October, and the 18th December, for the sale of horses and cattle. Amesbury is the seat of a Poor-law Union.

AMESTON, a vil. in the par. of Inverkeilor, in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 5 miles to the N.E. of Arbroath. Ameston (or Auniston) House stands near it.

AMINGTON, Warwickshire. See ALMINGTON.

AMISFIELD, a vil. in the par. of Tinwald, in the co. of Dumfries, Scotland, 4 miles to the N.E. of Dumfries. It is situated on the river Lochar, and is chiefly interesting for an old baronial tower, the most perfect of the kind in Scotland. It is square and slender, and has a curiously carved door, opening into one of the apartments, which are constructed one above another, and communicate by a narrow stair. It formerly belonged to the Anglo-Norman family of Charteris, or Chartres, but was conveyed by the marriage of the only daughter of Colonel Charteris to the noble family of Wemyss, who also possess the mansion of the same name on the banks of the Tyne, in the par. and co. of Haddington. James I. visited it in 1617. The village has also some remains of an ancient fort, which was probably a Roman station.

AMLWCH, a par., market town, and parliamentary borough in the hund. of Twrcelyn, in the co. and Isle of Anglesey, North Wales, 15 miles to the N.W. of Beaumaris, 20 miles to the N.E. of Holyhead, and 261 miles from London. It is situated on the northern coast of the island, on the Irish Sea, and its port is subordinate to Beaumaris. It includes the two chplries. of Llanwenllwyfo and Llanerchymedd. Its present importance and prosperity are of very recent and rapid growth. Previous to the year 1768, Amlwch was a mere fishing village, of very inconsiderable extent. In that year the now celebrated copper mines of the Parys mountain were discovered, and the foundation for the future wealth and progress of the town was laid. The native name of this mountain is Trysclwyn, and its more familiar name is said to be derived from Robert Paris, one of the commissioners appointed by Henry IV., on occasion of the insurrection under Owain Glyndwr. In the most favourable years, above 60,000 tons of ore have been taken from these mines, and 1500 hands were employed in them. After a period of decline the works are now carried on again, and give employment to about 1000 hands. There are several interesting proofs that the mineral wealth of the Parys mountain and its neighbourhood attracted attention at a remote period. It was probably known to the Romans, and still earlier to the Phœnicians. The Marquis of Anglesey and Lord Dinorben are the proprietors of the mines. A noble harbour has been constructed by the companies who work the mines. It is cut out of the slate cliff, and is large and deep enough to hold thirty vessels, of 200 tons burden. It is protected by a breakwater, erected in 1822, and its bed is dry at low water. There are several dangerous rocks lying near the entrance to the harbour. A lighthouse, 26 feet high, has been erected on the north pier. It has a fixed light, which is visible at a distance of 9 miles. There are several smelting furnaces, employing about 100 persons, and some alum and vitriol works. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Bangor, val. £217, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Elaeth; it is large enough to hold 2000 persons, and was built in 1800, by the proprietors of the mines. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists, Independents, Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists. A school was founded and endowed, in 1689, by Edward Kynnier, for poor children. The endowment, since 1821, has been applied in aid of the support of the national school then established. A British school for 400 children, of both sexes, was founded in 1860. Under the Reform Bill, Amlwch was made a contributory borough, with Holyhead and Llangefui, to Beaumaris, and with them returns one representative to parliament. A branch of the National Provincial Bank was established here in 1859. A fair for cattle is held on the 12th November.

AMORIL, a vil. in the par. of Batheaston, in the hund. of Bath Forum, in the co. of Somerset, 2 miles to the N.E. of Bath. It is on the river Avon, and near the Kennet and Avon canal.

AMOTHERLEY, a chplry. in the par. of Appleton-le-Street, in the wap. of Ryedale, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N.W. of New Malton. The river Rye passes near it. There is an endowed school, with an income of £20; six of the scholars are free.

AMOUNDERNESS HUNDRED, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, is bounded on the N. by the Irish Sea and Lonsdale hundred south of the sands, on the E. by Blackburn hundred, on the S. by the estuary of Ribble, and on the W. by the Irish Sea; and contains the town of Fleetwood, the pars. of Bispham, Garstang, Kirkham, Lytham, St. Michael-on-Wyre, Poulton-le-Fylde, and Preston, with parts of the pars. of Lancaster and Ribchester.

AMPFIELD, a vil. in the par. of Hursley, in the co. of Southampton, 4 miles from Romsey, 6 from Winchester railway station, and 74 from London. The beautiful little church, dedicated to St. Mark, is nearly new, and built in the Gothic style; the material is blue brick and stone, with an octagonal spire. The living is a perpet. cur., endowed with £2000 by Sir W. Heathcote and J. White, Esq., in the dioc. of Winchester, and in the patron. of the vicar of Hursley. Ampfield House is the principal residence.

AMPLEFORTH, or AMPLEFORD, a par. chiefly in the wap. of Ryedale; partly in the wap. of Birdforth, in the North Riding; and partly in the lib. of St. Peter of York, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the S.W. of Helmsley. It includes the three tnshps. of Ampleforth Birdforth, Ampleforth St. Peter, and Ampleforth Oswaldkirk. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £261, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is dedicated to St. Hilda. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. There is a Roman Catholic college at Ampleforth Lodge, which was founded at the commencement of this century. It is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parish charities amount to £29.

AMPNEY CRUCIS, a par. in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, in the co. of Gloucester, 3 miles to the E. of Cirencester. It includes the tythg. of Hilcott End. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £84, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to the Holy Rood. There is an endowed charity school, founded by — Pleydell, with a revenue of £80. Ampney Park is the seat of Earl Ducie.

AMPNEY DOWN, a par. in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the S.W. of Fairford. It is situated on Ampney Brook, and the ancient British way called Ermine Street, and the Thames and Severn canal, pass within a short distance of it. It boasts a considerable antiquity, its history reaching back to the Conquest. In Domesday Book it is mentioned as belonging to Ralph du Todini. It afterwards passed to the duchy of Lancaster, and through several families of historic name, to the Eliots. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £116, in the patron. of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church College, Oxford. The church, which was erected by the Knights Templars, about the year 1260, is in the early English style of architecture, and has a tower and spire. It contains a monument of Sir Nicholas de Villiers, a crusader, who died in 1294. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Ampney Down House, the seat of the Hon. P. Bouverie, was erected in the reign of Henry VIII. It has been recently repaired.

AMPNEY ST. MARY, or ASHBROOK, a par. in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the E. of Cirencester. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £71, in the patron. of M. H. Beach, Esq. In some portions of the church, which is small, there are traces of early English architecture.

AMPNEY ST. PETER, or EASINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, in the co. of Gloucester, 5 miles E. of Cirencester. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £60, in the patron. of the bishop.

AMPORT, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Andover, in the Andover div. and union of the co. of Southampton, 4 miles to the W. of Andover, and 71 from London. It contains the tythgs. of East Cholderton and Sarson. The village is situated in a pleasant district on the small river Anton, a branch of the Test. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £858, with the perpet. cur. of Appleshaw, which is annexed to it. The patron. is with the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. There is an endowed school, founded in 1812, by Mrs. Sheppard, and further endowed by Dr. Sheppard, who also established an almshouse for six poor persons. The revenue of these charities is £150. Amport Park is the seat of the Marquis of Winchester, who is lord of the manor. The hall stands on high ground, commanding a fine prospect, and the park is well wooded.

AMPTHILL, a par. and market town in the hund. of Redbornestoke, in the co. of Bedford, 8 miles to the S. of Bedford, and 45 miles from London, or 59 miles by rail. It is a station on the Bedford branch of the London and North Western railway. The town stands in a pleasant situation, between two hills, and is nearly in the centre of the county. The manor of Ampthill, belonged, at an early period, to the Points family, and Henry III. granted the privilege of holding a market here, to Nicholas Pointz and Joan his wife. This manor, with others, was given by Henry VI. to Sir John Cornwall, afterwards created Lord Fanhope, who married the king's sister, Elizabeth of Lancaster. A castle was erected on the domain, by Lord Fanhope, which reverted to the crown in the reign of Edward IV. He conferred it on Lord Grey, of Ruthin, Earl of Kent, from whose descendants it passed again to the crown about 1530, and became the palace of King Henry VIII. He constituted the manor the "Honor of Ampthill." It was in the castle of Ampthill that Queen Catherine of Arragon resided, while the question of her divorce was under discussion. It was here she refused to obey the summons to appear before the commissioners at Dunstable. In 1773, a memorial cross, octagonal in form, was erected on the site of the ancient castle, by the Earl of Ossory, with an inscription composed by Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £283, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. It is a handsome building, in the form of a cross, and has a square tower at the intersection of the transepts. It is mostly in the perpendicular style of architecture, and has several brasses, the earliest being of the year 1506. There is also a monument to Sir Robert Nicoll, who was killed by a cannon shot, in 1672, while attending the Duke of York in Southwold Bay. The cannon ball itself is inlaid in the pediment of the tomb. There are places of worship belonging to the Society of Friends, the Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was established and endowed, in 1691, by Mrs. Emery, for boys and girls, the income of which is now £15. National and British schools have also been established. A hospital for a reader, twelve poor men, and four poor women, founded in 1690, stands about a mile from the town. The Bishop of Oxford and the Vice Chancellor of the University are constituted ex officio visitors. There are twelve poor's cottages, supported by endowment, and mostly occupied by widows, who receive a small sum weekly. Ampthill has a share, with three other parishes, in an endowment by Arthur Whitchelner, for apprenticing poor children. The town, which consists chiefly of five streets, two of which cross each other at right angles, is well paved and lighted, and has a good supply of water. Some of the old houses have been taken down, and a market-house has been erected. A county court is held in the town, and petty sessions for the hundred, once a fortnight. The moot-house, a small ancient building, in which was held a court for the Honor of Ampthill, for the appointment of constables and other officers, was taken down about 1852. Ampthill is a polling place for the county election, and the seat of a Poor-law Union. The manufacture of lace and straw-plait is carried on, and there are some chemical works, and a brewery. A literary and scientific institution was established here in 1846, and a savings-bank. Ampthill Park, with which Houghton Park has been united, is the seat of Lord Wensleydale. The present hall was built by Lord Ashburnham, to whom the estate was granted by Charles II., in 1661. It contains some fine paintings and marbles, and a museum of natural history. In Houghton Park are the remains of Houghton House, which was erected by Inigo Jones for Mary Sidney Herbert, Countess of Pembroke, and sister of Sir Philip Sidney. According to tradition, Sir Philip wrote portions of his "Arcadia," under a pear-tree which still stands in this park. The grounds are ornamented by a great number of fine old oaks. Thursday is the market day. Cattle fairs are held on the 4th May and the 30th

November, and a statute fair for hiring servants 29th September.

AMPTON, a par. in the hund. of Thedwestry, in the co. of Suffolk, 5 miles to the N. of Bury St. Edmunds. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £172, in the patron. of Lord Calthorpe. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It contains a brass and some monuments of the Calthorpes. There is an endowed school for five children, established by Mr. Edwards. In 1705, James Calthorpe founded a hospital or school for the maintenance and instruction of six boys, and endowed it with some land. The pupils have the benefit of this school for seven years. There is also an almshouse for poor women. The parish charities amount altogether to £140. Ampton Hall, which stands in a fine park, with picturesque walks and views, is the seat of Lord Calthorpe.

AMROTH, a par. in the hund. of Narberth, in the co. of Pembroke, South Wales, 6 miles to the S.E. of Pembroke. It is pleasantly situated on the western side of the bay of Carmarthen. Very fine coal is obtained here, and shipped in large quantities to Bristol and other ports. Salmon, cod, and other fish are very abundant in this part of the bay. The collieries and fisheries furnish the chief occupation of the people. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £98, in the patron. of Charles P. Callen, Esq. The church is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and is dedicated to St. Elidyr. There is a free school for boys and girls endowed by D. Rees, who left £20 a year to the parish, of which sum £5 is given away to relieve the poor, and the residue goes to support the school. There are two gentlemen's seats,—Amroth Castle, near the coast, once the residence of a prince of Powys, afterwards the seat of the Elliotts, and named Earc Weare, now converted into an elegant modern villa; and Colby Lodge, in a fine dell opening to the sea.

AMULRIE, a vil. in the par. of Dull, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 10 miles S.W. of Dunkeld, and 11½ to the N.E. of Crieff. The river Bran runs through it. It contains an inn, a government church, and a Free church. It has a cattle fair on the first Wednesday in May, and on the Friday before the first Wednesday of November.

AMWELL, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Hertford, in the co. of Hertford, 2 miles to the S.E. of Ware. It includes the chplry. of Hoddesdon. A small stream, a branch of the river Lea, flows through the village, a quiet, sequestered spot, in the midst of pleasant and picturesque scenery. The church stands on a gentle hill completely embosomed in beautiful trees, close by the "silver stream." The spring at Amwell is called in Domesday Book, "Emmewell," or Emma's Well. It is one of the heads of the New River. Amwell Place was the residence of John Scott, the Quaker poet, who loved the place, and sang of it in a pleasing poem named after the village "Amwell." Hither came, too, at an earlier period, honest Izaak Walton to enjoy nature and his favorite sport. His visits are gracefully alluded to in Scott's poem. In the pretty churchyard is the grave of William Warner, author of "Albion's England," who died in 1609. Here, too, is the last resting-place of Richard Jones, founder of Hayleybury College in this parish, for the education of the civil cadets of the East India Company. He died in 1855. Robert Mylne, the engineer of Blackfriars-bridge, has a monument here. On the little island near the spring-head, is a monument to Sir Hugh Myddelton, who accomplished the formation of the New River for the supply of London with water. Hoole, the translator of Tasso, and biographer of the Amwell poet, resided in the village; and Reed, one of the editors of Shakspeare, is buried here.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £310, in the patron. of the vicar. The church, which is of the 14th century, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is also a district church at Hoddesdon, the living of which is a perpet. cur. val. £150, in the patron. of the bishop. Remains of an old fortification exist on a hill near the church, and there is a large barrow on the road to Hertford.

AMWELL, LITTLE, a lib. in the par. of All Saints, in the hund. of Hertford, in the co. of Hertford, near Great Amwell. Chadwell springs, one of the heads of the New River, are in this liberty. The supply of water is augmented by the construction of an artesian well. There is a chapel of ease to All Saints' vicarage.

ANABISH, an island in the Hebrides, forming part of the par. of Lewis, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland. In the decennial period from 1841 to 1851, the pop. increased from 41 to 63.

ANADORN, a vil. in the bar. of Kinalarly, in the co. of Down, and prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the W. of Downpatrick. A castle formerly stood here, the seat of the Macartans, who owned a large district round the village. Fairs take place on the 14th May and the 8th November.

ANBALLY, a vil. in the par. of Kilmoylan, and bar. of Clare, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 12 miles to the N.E. of Galway. There are remains of an old castle, and an intermitting spring.

ANCASTER, a par. in the wap. of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the N.E. of Grantham. It is a station on the Boston and Grantham branch of the Great Northern railway, and is situated on the river Sleaford. It comprises the hmlts. of Sudbrooke and West Willoughby. The ancient British Ermine Street runs through the parish, and here, it is conjectured, was the Roman station Causennae. Coins, bricks, and other Roman remains have been discovered in the neighbourhood. In 1643, an engagement took place at Ancaster between the royalist forces, under Colonel Cavendish, and the roundheads, in which the latter were defeated. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £160, in the patron. of the Rev. T. S. Warren. The church exhibits various styles of architecture, having Norman arches on one side, and early English ones on the other. It contains a circular stone font, and is dedicated to St. Martin. Oolite is quarried in this parish, and Belvoir Castle and other mansions have been built of stone from these quarries. The Berties, of Uffington, bore the title of Duke of Ancaster, which is now extinct.

ANCOATS, a chplry. in the suburbs of Manchester, in the hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster. There are two curs. in this district, both in the dioc. of Manchester, and in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The churches are dedicated to St. Andrew and All Souls. The living of the former is valued at £124, and that of the latter at £174. Ancoats Hall, which is a timbered mansion, was formerly the seat of the Moseleys, to whom the manor of Manchester belonged.

ANCROFT, a chplry. in Islandshire, a district in the co. of Northumberland, which, until recently, belonged to the co. palatine of Durham. Ancroft is 6 miles to the S. of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and 3 from Scremerston, at which village there is a station on the North Eastern railway. It lies in a very pleasant valley on the sea-coast, and comprises the chplry. of Scremerston, and the tnshps. of Cheswick and Haggerston. Holy Island is nearly opposite to it, and the Newcastle and Berwick railway runs through it. The village of Ancroft is believed to have been of greater extent formerly than it is now. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £131, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church is very old, and was once a chapel of ease to the cur. of Holy Island. It is said to have been built before the year 1145, and its dedication is not known. It has a square, massive tower, resembling a castle. There is another church at Scremerston, also a perpet. cur.,* val. £160, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. A new school-house has just been completed. Coal is obtained at Scremerston, and near Greensis, and there is a large brewery at the latter village. The manor belongs to Greenwich Hospital. Haggerston House, a very ancient seat, visited by Edward II. in 1311, was burnt down in 1618, and has been rebuilt.

ANCRUM, a par. in the district of Jedburgh, in the co. of Roxburgh, Scotland, 3 miles to the N.W. of Jedburgh. The Edinburgh and Hawick railway traverses the N.W. part of the parish, and has a station at Belses. It is situated on the river Teviot, along the northern bank of which it extends about 5 miles, and the Ale Water runs through it and joins the Teviot. The name of the parish, formerly written Alk-ercon, indicates its position at a town of the Alk or Ale. The old parish of Longchamwen was annexed to it in 1664, and forms the northern part of the present parish of Ancrum. It was on moorland in this parish that an engagement took place in December, 1544, between the English forces sent by Henry VIII. and the Scotch under the Regent Arran, in which the English were routed with heavy loss. This conflict is sometimes called the battle of Lylliard's Edge, and has been graphically described by Sir Walter Scott, in a note on the ballad of the "Eve of St. John." There is a touching legend of a maiden, Lylliard, who followed her lover to the fight, and fell herself after having taken brave part in it. A stone still marks the spot where she fell, but the name immortalized is defaced, and only lingers in the memory of the people.

"Fair maiden Lylliard lies under this stane;
Little was her stature, but great was her fame;
Upon the English loons she laid many thumps,
And when her legs were cutted off she fought upon her stumps."

After the battle of Ancrum Moor the village was burned to the ground. The Bishops of Glasgow were formerly the possessors of this district, and made it their frequent residence. In 1633, Charles I. granted it to the Kerrs, with the title of Earl of Ancrum. The title and estate soon after passed to the Marquis of Lothian, by whom they are now held. The Roman highway, Watling Street, passes through this parish. The soil is generally fertile, and under good cultivation. There are some quarries of stone. The living is in the presb. of Jedburgh, val. £224, in the patron. of Sir. W. Scott, Bart. The parish church was built in 1762, and repaired in 1832. There is a Free Church preaching station, and several schools. Most of the houses are modern, and there is an ancient cross in the centre of the green. The principal seats are Ancrum House and Chesters. There is an interesting relic of antiquity, commonly named Maltan Walls, the remains of a fortalice which is considered to have belonged to the knights of Malta. Little of the ruin is now left. The poet Thomson frequently visited at the manor of Ancrum, and a cave in which he mused still bears his name. A fine pillar, a hundred feet in height, has been erected on a hill called Penielheugh by the Marquis of Lothian, to the memory of the Duke of Wellington. This village was the birthplace of Buchan, the author of "Domestic Medicine."

ANDENSHAW, Lancashire. See OLDHAM.

ANDERBY, a par. in the Marsh div. of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 9 miles to the N.E. of Spilsby. It lies on the sea-coast, and has a harbour and pier where the Alford canal terminates. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val., with the rect. of Cumberworth, £345, in the patron. of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ANDERSFIELD HUNDRED, in the co. of Somerset, is bounded on the N. by Cannington hundred, on the E. by Whitley hundred, on the S. by North Petherton hundred, and on the W. by Carhampton hundred; and comprises the pars. of Bawdrip, Cossington St. Michael, Enmore, Goathurst, and Lyng, with parts of Durleigh, Chilton Trinity, and North Petherton. The area of the hund. is about 11,000 acres.

ANDERSON, or ANDERSTONE WINTERBOURNE, a par. in the hund. of Cranborne Ditch, in the co. of Dorset, 5 miles to the S. of Blandford. A branch of the river Stour runs through it. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £116, in the patron. of B. Tregonwell, Esq., who resides at Anderson House. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ANDERSON, a quoad sacra par. in the bar. par. of the city of Glasgow, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland. The living is in the presb. of Glasgow, and in the patron. of the managers and others.

ANDERSTON. See GLASGOW.

ANDERTON, a tushp. in the par. of Great Budworth, hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the N.W. of Northwich. It is situated on the river Weaver and the Grand Trunk canal. The London and North Western railway passes near it. There are extensive salt-works along the river side.

ANDERTON, a tushp. in the par. of Standish, in the hund. of Leyland, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the S.E. of Chorley. It is situated near Rivington Pike, and the Bolton railway runs near it.

ANDOVER, a par., market town, and parliamentary and municipal borough, with exclusive jurisdiction, but lying locally in the hund. of Andover, Andover div. of the co. of Southampton, 13 miles to the N.W. of Winchester, and 63 miles from London, or 66 by the South Western railway, on the Salisbury branch of which it is a station. Its name is composed of Ann, which applied to the district in which it stands, and dover or dofr, a British word for a stream. It lies on the banks of the river Anton, near the skirts of a large, wooded tract, bordering on Salisbury Plain, and comprises the chplry. of Foxcote, the hmlts. of Charlton, Wildhern, and several others. It is the centre of a union containing 32 parishes in the co. of Hants, and 4 in Wilts. The Andover canal, which is now being converted into a railway, connected the town with Southampton Water. It was at this place that Olave, the King of Norway, made treaty with King Ethelred in 994, and professed himself a Christian by receiving baptism. He bound himself not to invade England again, and kept his oath. Andover has been a borough ever since the reign of King John, who granted its first charter. A fresh charter was granted by Queen Elizabeth, under the provisions of which it was governed till the passing of the Reform Act. It is now governed by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, with the style of, the "bailiff, approved men, and burgesses of the borough of Andover." Borough sessions are held once a quarter. From the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Andover has returned two representatives to parliament, as it did also to the parliaments of Edward I. The mayor is the returning officer. The revenue of the borough is £1,246. A large and handsome townhall was erected in 1825. It is of stone, and has a front of Italian architecture. The building is supported on arches, and surmounted by a cupola. The lower part serves for a market-house, over which is the council-room and the sessions-hall. Assemblies are also frequently held in it. A county court is held in the town, and the county magistrates hold their petty sessions here every Saturday. There are three principal streets, now well paved and lighted with gas. The manufacture of shalloons was at one time carried on here. It was superseded by the manufacture of silk, which has now also ceased. The chief occupations, at present, are malting and tanning. There is an iron foundry at Upper Clatford, about two miles from Andover. The Andover canal was constructed in 1789, and is twenty-two miles in length. It crossed the river Anton, and passing by Stockbridge and Romsey, entered Southampton Water at Redbridge, close to the mouth of the river Test. It had above twenty locks, and a fall of nearly 180 feet, but is now being filled in, to make way for the railway which is in course of construction. The living is a vic. with the chplry. of Foxcote, in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £433, in the patron. of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The old church, which was partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English style, with curious wooden pillars in the nave, was ruthlessly destroyed about 1846. William the Conqueror made a grant of the church here with land and several rents to the abbey of St. Florence, in Anjou, to which it became a cell. Henry V. gave it, on the dissolution of the alien priories, to St. Mary's College, Winchester. The new church, completed in 1846 at the cost of the late Dr. Goddard, stands near the site of the former, and is in the early English style. It is dedicated to St. Mary. The ancient Norman doorway has been carefully preserved, and made the entrance to the churchyard. In 1857 the new ecclesiastical district of Smannell-with-Hatherden was formed out of the par. of Andover. The living is a perpet. cur. in the gift of Winchester College. There are churches at both villages. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school was established and endowed by John Hanson in 1569. The school-house was built and is kept in repair by the corporation. Another free school for twenty children was founded by John Pollen in 1719. There is an almshouse for eight poor men, and one for six poor women, the latter founded by Catherine Hanson. The charities of the parish amount altogether to £189. A large national school is maintained by subscription. There is also a British school. Several Roman encampments exist near Andover, that on Bury Hill, to the S.W., being the most extensive. There is also a large camp at Rooksbury, and another on Danebury Hill, with very high ramparts, near which is Canute's Barrow, and the Devil's Ditch. Two Roman roads cross each other about a mile to the N.E. of the town, that from Winchester to Cirencester is still traceable in Harewood, where the Portway crosses it to the north. The market day is Friday. There are fairs for horses, cattle, and cheese, on Mid-Lent Saturday, Old May-day, the 1st August, the 18th November, and on the 17th for sheep. The famous Weyhill fair commences on the 10th October, and lasts seven days. From a Sunday revel before Michaelmas, it grew to be one of the most important fairs in England. Cheese, cattle, sheep, and hops, are the chief commodities. The fair was held under a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth, and confirmed by Charles II. Its importance has declined of late years. The par. contains 7,670 acres: the borough, which includes Foxcott and Knights-Enham, has an area of 10,982 acres, comprising 1,059 inhabited houses, with a population of 5,221, according to the census of 1861, against 5,187 in 1851, showing an increase of only 34 inhabitants in the decennial period.

ANDOVER HUNDRED, in the Andover div. of the co. of Southampton, is bounded on the N. by Wiltshire and the hundred of Pastrow, on the E. by the hundred of Evingar, on the S. by the hundreds of Wherwell, King's Sombourn, and Thorngate, and on the W. by the hundred of Thorngate and Wiltshire, and contains in the upper half the pars. of Amport Fyfield, Grately, Kimpton, Quarley, Shipton Bellinger, Thruxton, and South Tidworth; and in the lower half, the pars. of Upper Clatford, Knights-Enham, Foxcott, Monxton, Penton-Mewsey, Weyhill, and part of Abbot's Ann. This hund. comprises an area of 28,500 acres.

ANDOVER FORD, a vil. in the par. of Dowdeswell, hund. of Bradley, in the co. of Gloucester, 6 miles to the N.W. of Northleach. It lies among the Cotswold hills, and is watered by the small river Isborne.

ANDREW'S, ST., or BALLYHALBERT, a par. in the bar. of Ards, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the E. of Kircubbin. It is situated between Lough Strangford and the Irish Sea, and includes the several pars. of Ballywalter, Ballyhalbert, and Innishargy. A Benedictine monastery was established here, about the commencement of the 13th century, by John de Courcy, as a cell to the abbey of Lonley, in Normandy. On the suppression of alien priories it was given to the Archbishop of Armagh, with whom, after several changes of ownership, it finally remained. The land is good and highly cultivated; much bog has been reclaimed. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £404, with those of Ballyhalbert, Ballywalter, and Innishargy, which were united with it in the reign of Queen Anne, in the patron. of the archbishop.

ANDREW'S, ST., DISTRICT, one of the four districts of the co. of Fife, Scotland, being the north-eastern part of the county, bounded by the German Ocean on the N.E. and S.E., by the Frith of Forth on the N.W., and by the district of Cupar on the W. It contains the pars. of St. Andrew, Anstruther Easter and Wester, Cameron, Carnbee, Crail, Denino, Elie, Ferry-Port-on-Craig, Forgan, Kemback, Kilconquhar, Kilrenny, Kingsbarns, Largo, St. Leonard's, Lenchar's, St. Monance Newburn and Pittenween.

ANDREW'S, ST., a par., city, royal and parliamentary borough, and seat of a university, in the district of St. Andrew's, in the co. of Fife, Scotland, 8 miles to the E. of Cupar, and 41 miles to the N. of Edinburgh, or 44 miles by the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway, with which it is now connected by a branch line. The parish is situated on the coast of St. Andrew's Bay, along which it extends about 10 miles from the river Eden, which forms its northern boundary. Next the sea the land is level and sandy, but rises southward and westward in pleasant and well cultivated slopes. The city stands on slightly elevated ground near the shore. The four vils. of Boarhills, Grange, Kincaple, and Strathkinness, are included in the par. of St. Andrew's. A very high interest attaches itself to this city as the most ancient seat of learning and the Christian religion in Scotland. Its origin lies hidden in a very remote antiquity, and for guides in the obscurity we have only traditions and legends handed down by the men of the Church. There seems no reason to doubt that before and at the time of the first introduction of Christianity into Scotland, this district was a forest, inhabited by wild animals, among which the wild boar was probably the most numerous class. The ancient Celtic name of the district, Muc-ross, which is singularly perpetuated in the present name of the village Boar-hills, points to this fact. Towards the close of the 4th century, the Picts had possession of this part of the country, and the Druids were their religious guides. The introduction of the new faith and the origin of the city are related by the ecclesiastical authors in the following manner:—The remains of the apostle St. Andrew, who suffered martyrdom by crucifixion, were preserved in a shrine, and entrusted to a Greek monk or priest named Regulus. He received a warning in a dream by night to take a certain part of the sacred relics from the shrine, and carry them to an island far away in the west. Obedient to the vision, he set out with several associates, male and female, and after enduring hardships and perils by sea for two years, they were cast upon land on the spot where the city was afterwards built. The barbarous people showed kindness to the strangers thus suddenly thrown amongst them, and their chief or king, whose seat was then at Abernethy, visited them. Regulus told his tale, and spoke so well that the king and many of his people believed. He erected a chapel, and named the place, instead of Mucross, Kilremont, "cell of the King's mount:" which was changed subsequently to Kilrule, "cell of Regulus or Rule." The saint is still called St. Rule, and the city Kilrule, by the Highlanders. The arrival of Regulus with his relics took place, if we may trust the traditions, about the year 372, or nearly 200 years before the arrival of Columba, and the founding of the monastery at Iona. The name St. Andrew's was first given about the year 870 by Kenneth II., King of the Scots, who broke up the Pictish kingdom, and made this place the seat of government. The fame of the city and the shrine increased, and in the reign of Malcolm III., the bishop attained the dignity of episcopus primus, or "chief bishop." About the year 1144 a mitred priory of the Augustine order was founded here by Bishop Robert, which had rich revenues and five subpriories connected with it. The prior enjoyed in parliament precedence of all abbots and priors. A convent of the Dominican order, or of Black Friars, was founded in 1274 by Bishop Wishart, and an Observantine establishment, in the 15th century, by Bishop Kennedy. It was at St. Andrew's that the Scottish parliament, in 1298, met and swore allegiance to Edward I. And here, in 1309, was held the first parliament of Robert Bruce. The castle, which was built by Roger, Bishop of St. Andrew's, towards the close of the 12th century, was garrisoned in 1336 by Edward III., but was retaken the next year after his return to England. At the commencement of the 15th century, John Resby, and some years later, Paul Craw, a Bohemian, were burnt in this city for speaking against Romish superstitions. In 1471 the Bishop of St. Andrew's was raised by the Pope to the dignity of Archbishop, with large revenues and extensive authority.

On the 1st March, 1527, Patrick Hamilton, the first martyr of the Protestant Reformation in Scotland, was burnt here as a heretic. Others soon bore their testimony in the same manner. George Buchanan, who had written against the friars, was imprisoned in the castle, but escaped. Here, on the 8th March, 1545, in the presence of the "infamous" Cardinal Beaton, George Wishart was burnt. Only a few months elapsed and the natural retribution followed; the cardinal was slain in his castle by Norman Leslie and his associates. On the first Sunday in June, 1559, the sermon was preached by John Knox, which so stirred the indignation and roused the wrath of the population, that they immediately attacked the cathedral, and in one day it was destroyed. James VI., in 1583, took refuge for a time in the castle, from the nobles who had laid restraint on him at Ruthven. At Magus Muir, at the western end of the parish, James Sharpe, Archbishop of St. Andrew's, was murdered by a party of covenanters led by Balfour of Burley on the 3rd May, 1679. Five of the party were taken and executed in the following November. A stone still stands which was erected to their memory.—The aspect of the modern town, seen from rising ground to the south and west of it, is very pleasant. It is about a mile and a half in circuit, commanding an open prospect of the German Ocean, and the buildings are agreeably intermingled with trees and gardens. There are three principal streets, which run in nearly parallel directions, and are crossed by others at right angles. There was formerly another street, called Swallow-street, which lay further to the north, now converted into a public walk, called the Scores, to the north of which are the ruins of what was once the castle, about 300 yards distant from the cathedral; and at the west end of the Scores is a handsome monumental obelisk, 45 feet high, on a massive base, erected in 1842 to the memory of the Protestant martyrs of St. Andrew's. Many of the houses are very ancient, most of them are lofty and well built. The public buildings and the remains of antiquity give a dignity and charm to the place such as few towns possess.—St. Andrew's was raised from a village to the dignity of a royal burgh in 1140 by David I, and a city, or archbishop's see, in 1471. Under the Reform Act it is governed by a provost, dean of guild, four bailies, and twenty-four councillors, and the revenues of the burgh amount to about £1,300 a year. It returns one member to parliament in conjunction with Easter and Wester Anstruther, Crail, Cupar, Kilrenny, and Pittenween. The port was formerly subordinate to Kirkcaldy, but has been lately constituted by the government a bonding-port; and its customs amount to about £800 a year, yet it is very inferior to what it was in ancient days. Formerly an extensive commerce was carried on here, with all parts of Europe, and in the 15th century, in the month of April, when the Senzie market was held, no fewer than from 200 to 300 vessels entered the harbour, bringing traders and commodities to the great fair. The harbour is capable of admitting vessels of 300 tons burden, but is dry at low water. There are two lighthouses on the pier with fixed lights, visible at a distance of six miles. The making of golf-balls was long a great branch of industry, but is now extinct. From eight to ten thousand a year of those balls were formerly made, half of which were required for home use, and the rest were exported. The game of golf is a favourite sport at St. Andrew's, and was played on the links or downs by the sea-shore. There were two companies of golfers, one of noblemen and gentry, formed in 1754, distinguished by a red coat; the other of persons of lower rank, distinguished by a green jacket. The chief manufacture at present is linen-weaving, for establishments in Newburgh and Dundee. There are also many flour mills, and an extensive steam saw mill near the harbour.—The University of St. Andrew's, from which the town derives its chief interest and importance, is the most ancient in Scotland. It was founded in 1411 by Bishop Wardlaw, under the sanction of a bull by Benedict XIII. It is said that the coming of the papal messenger produced an excitement of gladness in the city, which vented itself in a grand clerical procession and a Te Deum in the cathedral. In 1455, Bishop Kennedy, who succeeded Wardlaw, founded, under a charter from Nicholas V., the college of St. Salvator: and in 1512, John Hepburn, prior of the Augustine monastery, founded a third college named St. Leonard's. In 1537, Archbishop Beaton, uncle of the Cardinal, undertook to establish a new college on the site of the old buildings called the Pedagogy. The undertaking was completed by Archbishop Hamilton, and the new college was called St. Mary's. In the year 1747 an act of parliament was passed by which the two colleges of St. Salvator and St. Leonard were combined under the title of the United College of St. Salvator and St. Leonard. No change has been made since in the constitution of the colleges, and the university now consists of the United College last named, and St. Mary's. The establishment of the former includes a principal, professors of Greek, Latin, logic and rhetoric, moral philosophy, natural philosophy, civil history, chemistry, and anatomy: political economy being taught by the professor of moral philosophy. St. Mary's College, which is exclusively devoted to theology, has a principal who is also professor of theology, professors of divinity, ecclesiastical history, and the Oriental languages. Each of the colleges has a number of bursaries attached to it, the United College having about sixty, and St. Mary's about twenty. The students of the former wear red frieze gowns, those of the latter wear no gown. The university library, open to both colleges, contains above 50,000 volumes and a few valuable manuscripts. The buildings of the United College are in North-street, and have been re-erected by government grants within the last thirty years. They are in the form of a quadrangle, 230 feet in length and 180 feet in breadth. There is a lofty steeple, 156 feet high, over the gateway, and the ancient chapel is next the street. This chapel is a Gothic structure of extraordinary beauty, but having fallen into decay its fine roof was removed, and its rich windows displaced for inferior ones. A restoration was, however, effected during the year 1861, in harmony with the original design. It contains a marble monument of its founder, Bishop Kennedy, and still serves both as the college chapel and the parish church of St. Leonard's. St. Mary's College is in South-street, and the buildings, which have been recently restored, occupy two sides of a quadrangle. Besides these ancient colleges, St. Andrew's possesses various excellent private educational institutions and public schools, the chief of which is the noble institution founded by Dr. Bell, and called the Madras College. Dr. Bell was a native of the city, and the founder of the Madras system of education. The grammar and English schools formerly existing here, were incorporated with this new college. The buildings are in South-street, in the form of a quadrangle, and in the Elizabethan style of architecture. There are above 1,000 students, and the education received is comprehensive and of a high order. The cathedral is situated at the eastern end of the town, and though in ruins, is the most attractive object in the place. It was a cruciform structure, 370 feet in length, and 70 feet broad, with a transept 180 feet in length. It occupied nearly 160 years in building: Malcolm IV. witnessing the laying of the foundation stone in 1159, and Robert Bruce the consecration in 1318. It had six spires or turrets, one of them being over the centre and very lofty. It was partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English style. Excepting some partial damage by fire soon after its completion, it stood unharmed for 240 years, and then perished in a single day by the violence of the mob, as above related. All that now remains of the venerable edifice is the east end, with its two towers, each 100 feet high, one of the western towers, with half of the western gable, and a part of the south wall. Close by the east end of the cathedral stands the chapel and tower of St. Rule. They are supposed to be the oldest relics of church architecture in Scotland, and are still in a state of good preservation. The tower is 108 feet high, with sides about 20 feet wide; it has a stone staircase to the top. These remains and those of the cathedral stand within a large burying-ground. On the south side of the town is still seen part of the fine wall erected by prior Hepburn in 1516. In South-street is a fragment of Bishop Wishart's monastery of the Black Friars, presenting, in a single aisle, with its groined roof, a most exquisite specimen of Gothic architecture. The ruins of the castle stand on a rocky peninsula on the shore of the bay, about 250 yards from the cathedral. It was built at the close of the 12th, or early in the 13th century, by Bishop Roger, and was rebuilt, after lying in ruins for fifty years, by Bishop Trail about 1400. James III. was born in it, as appears by the golden charter of the see granted to Bishop Kennedy; and it continued to be the episcopal palace till the murder of Beaton, in 1545, and in 1547 it was finally dismantled. The keep and part of the south wall remain, but the sea has been fast undermining the rock on which it stands: in consequence of this a considerable portion fell in December, 1801, and Lady Buchan's cave has lately been swept away. The fearful dungeon cut out of the rock and shaped like a bottle is still shewn. There are two livings in St. Andrew's: St. Andrew's charge, with two ministers, the first receiving £439, the second, £162; and St. Leonard's charge, value £152. The parish church is near St. Mary's. It was built early in the 12th century, and has a monument of Archbishop Sharpe. The monument is of white marble, and was erected by his son in 1679; the assassination is represented on the lower part of it. The church of St. Leonard's is attached to the college. There is a Free church, with an elegant Gothic front, of which the receipts in 1853 were £640, and places of worship belonging to the Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Baptists, and Independents. St. Andrew's is the seat of a presbytery. Fairs are held here on the second Thursday in April, the 1st August, and the 30th November. The par. extends over an area of 11,000 acres, now in a high state of cultivation; and the borough contains, according to the census of 1861, 796 houses, inhabited by 1,323 separate families, comprising a population of 5,176.

ANDREW'S, ST., a par. in Mainland or Pomona, one of the principal of the Orkney Isles, Scotland, 4 miles to the E. of Kirkwall. It is situated on a peninsula, bounded by the bay of Inganess and Deer Sound, and is now united as a quoad sacra parish with Deerness. The surface is mostly flat, and the soil marshy and unproductive. Fishing is the employment of a large number of the inhabitants. The living, val. £208, is in the presb. of Kirkwall, and in the patron. of the Earl of Zetland. The parish church was rebuilt in 1801, and enlarged in 1827, so that it can accommodate half the population at once. There is also a Free church. Cattle fairs are held at Knockhall and Occlester, at Candlemas, Midsummer, and Martinmas.

ANDREW'S, ST., LHANBRYDE, a par. in the co. of Elgin, Scotland, 2 miles to the E. of Elgin. It is situated on the coast of the Moray Frith, extending from the river Spey on the east, to the river Lossie on the west. Its present name includes the names of the two ancient divisions of the parish, of which Lhanbryde signifies "Church of St. Bridget." The living, val. £207, is in the presb. of Elgin, and in the gift of the crown and the Earl of Moray. The district is generally level, with some low hills, and the soil is good. The woollen manufacture is carried on, and there is an iron foundry and a distillery. Relics of British antiquity have been found here. Leslie, the author of the "Survey of Moray," was minister of this place.

ANDREW, ST., a par. in the hund. of Dinas-Powis, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 4 miles to the S.W. of Cardiff. Its name is derived from an ancient fortress of which some walls are still to be seen. It is said to have been built by Jestyn-ap-Gwrgan in the 11th century. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £398, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. In the church is a private chapel and burial-place of the Howel family of Bonville.

ANDREW, ST., MINOR, a par. in the hund. of Ogmore in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 4 miles to the S. of Bridgend. Cardiff is the post town. It is pleasantly situated near the coast of the Bristol Channel, and contains one estate only, the property of the Franklins, whose seat is Clementston House. The living is a sinecure rect. in dioc. of Llandaff, val. £5. The church is in ruins.

ANDREW, ST., a par. in Guernsey, Channel Islands, 2 miles from St. Peter's Port. The living is a rect., in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £150, in the patron. of the governor.

ANDWELL, an ext. par. place in the par. of Upper Nately, in the hund. of Basingstoke, Basingstoke div. of the co. of Southampton, 4 miles to the E. of Basingstoke. It is a small village, containing 143 acres, with a population of 30, belonging to Winchester College, and consists of a mill and a farm.

ANGELTOWN, a vil. in the higher tnshp. of Newcastle, in the par. of Newcastle, hund. of Newcastle, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, not far from Bridgend.

ANGERSLEIGH, a par. in the hund. of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, in the co. of Somerset, 4 miles to the S.W. of Taunton. It is situated near the chalk ridge called Black Down. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £111, in the patron. of the rector. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ANGERTON, HIGH, a tnshp. in the par. of Hartburn, western div. of Morpeth ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 7 miles to the W. of Morpeth.

ANGERTON, LOW, a tnshp. in the par. of Hartburn, western div. of Morpeth ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 7 miles to the S.W. of Morpeth. The river Wansbeck passes through both these townships.

ANGLE, or NANGLE, a par. in the hund. of Castlemartin, in the co. of Pembroke, South Wales, 8 miles to the W. of Pembroke. It takes its name probably from its situation in an angle near the mouth of Milford Haven. The little bay named after the village affords safe anchorage for small vessels. There are some remains of an old building called the Block-house near the harbour, probably designed for a defence; but it is not known when or by whom it was erected. Good limestone is quarried, and the manufacture of straw plait is carried on by women. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £80, and a sinecure rect. val. £157, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Angle Hall, situated near the church, is the principal residence, and the property of John Mirehouse, Esq., who is lord of the manor and proprietor of the whole parish.

ANGLESEY, or ANGLESEA, an island and co. of North Wales, opposite to the coast of Carnarvonshire, from which it is separated by the narrow Menai Strait. Its greatest length from N.W. to S.W., is about 20 miles, and its breadth from S.W. to N.E. about 17 miles, comprising an area of 193,453 statute acres, with 12,361 inhabited houses, and a population of 54,546, according to the census of 1861, against 57,327 in 1851, showing a decrease in the decennial period of no less than 2,781 inhabitants. It is bounded on all sides, except the south-east, by the Irish Sea. The form of the island is irregular. Lines drawn to connect its extreme north, east, south, and west points, would form a figure scarcely deviating from a parallelogram. The coast-line, which is generally rocky, and interrupted by many bays and inlets, is about 80 miles in circuit. From Abermenai Ferry, the southern extremity of the island, the general direction of the coast is north-east as far as the eastern extremity opposite Priestholme Island. From that point it runs westward to Talgwyn, on Red Wharf Bay, and thence northward to St. Elian's Point. From St. Elian its course is westerly to Carnel's Point, whence it runs in an irregular and broken curve southward, and eastward to Abermenai Ferry. Several islands lie along the coast of Anglesey, the principal of which is Holyhead, at the westernmost point. At the north-west, opposite to Carnel's Point, is the rocky Isle of Seals, or the Skerries. Priestholme or Puffin Island lies at the easternmost point. There are several others, but very small and unimportant. The principal bays are those of Holyhead and Beaumaris, Aberffraw, Maltraeth, and Red Wharf. There is some probability that Anglesey was at some remote period a peninsula. A line of rocks is observed extending across the Menai Strait at Pwll Caris, which is thought to indicate the position of an isthmus. Anglesey was in early times a part of the territory of the Ordovices, and was known by various names signifying the "shady island," "isle of heroes," and "remotest island." The Roman name is Mona, which is a slight modification of one of the native names. Its importance arose from its being one of the chief seats of the Druids, and their chosen refuge from the Roman invaders. Suetonius Paulinus was the first Roman commander who succeeded in reaching the island. It was in the year 61 that he led his forces over the strait, made himself master of the sacred territory, massacred many of the Druids and destroyed their groves and schools. The great rising of the people under Boadicea compelled him to retire without completing his conquest, and it was fifteen years before the attempt was renewed. In the year 76 Agricola was sent by the Emperor Vespasian, and after putting down a revolt in North Wales, he advanced to Mona. He was met by a desperate resistance, in which the women and the priests took part; but the invaders achieved a complete success. After the Roman dominion ceased, Mona became the seat of the princes of North Wales. The Saxons, under Egbert, having at one time got possession of it, gave it its present name, which signifies "isle of the Angles or English." Towards the close of the 9th century, Aberffraw was selected to be the royal residence, and continued to be so till Wales was incorporated with England. The island was several times invaded and laid waste by the Danes in the 9th and 10th centuries. In 913, the Irish landed here, and did much damage. In the reign of William Rufus, the Earls of Chester and Shrewsbury led an English army into Wales, and landed on the island, where they took savage revenge on the people for cruelties lately practised by them on the English border. A sudden descent of the King of Norway occasioned the withdrawal of the English. During the 12th century, the island suffered in common with the rest of the principality from intestine warfare. An unsuccessful invasion was made by the Irish, in the time of Henry III.; and the complete subjugation of the country was left to be accomplished by Edward I. After finishing his task, he erected a great fortress on the eastern coast, on a spot named by the Normans Beaumaris or "fair-marsh." This castle was completed in 1296. During the civil war in the 17th century, the castle was garrisoned for the king. An expedition was sent under General Mytton to reduce the island, and after an engagement near Beaumaris, in which the royalists were defeated, the garrison capitulated.—The general aspect and scenery of the island are uninteresting. It is the only county in Wales which is not mountainous. The surface, which was once covered with forests, is now bare, and it is only along the coast of the Menai Strait, that the scenery becomes pleasing and beautiful. There is a large tract of waste land called "Talwrn Mawr," comprising several thousand acres, which runs through a large part of the county. A still larger waste, the "Marsh of Maltraeth," was inclosed by means of a strong embankment, between the years 1790 and 1820, and is now under cultivation. The principal rock is mica schist, granite also is found, and on the eastern side of the island limestone and gritstone are obtained in abundance. Coal is found, but only in thin beds, which scarcely repay the labour of working them. There is a great variety of coloured marbles of excellent quality for the sculptor and the architect. The several varieties obtained are white, blue-veined grey, blue-veined white, black, mottled brown, and green marbles. A curious asbestine variety occurs near Cemlyn Bay, which has veins of a white, silky looking substance, which is incombustible. This marble is too brittle for polishing. Serpentine, steatite, potter's clay, fuller's earth, and several kinds of marl, are also found. But the chief mineral treasures of Anglesey lie in the famous Parys Mountain, in the north-west of the island. This mountain is part of the table-land of Trysglwyn, which has a striking aspect of rude grandeur, rising in rugged masses of shale and quartz, with its vast mines open to the light of day. The discovery of the copper ore was made in 1768. The principal stratum is in some parts 300 feet in thickness. [See Amlwch.] The climate of this island is rendered milder than that of the neighbouring part of North Wales, by the sea breezes and the comparative evenness of its surface. But it is also more subject to mists, especially in the autumn. The soil is of various kinds, generally fertile; light soils are the most common, reddish loams are found on the south-eastern side, and there are many marly soils. The greater part of the land is pasture, as much, it is said, as 150,000 acres. The rearing of cattle is the chief object of the farmer. The Anglesey oxen are of small size, with short legs and deep chests, and of a black colour. They are called runts, and resemble the Roman oxen described by the agricultural writer Columella. About 5,000 of them are exported yearly. Sheep are also exported. They are the largest breed in North Wales. The present improved systems of farming have not been commonly introduced in the island. Many of the farms are held by tenancy at will. Most of the farm-houses and buildings are of an inferior kind, and the fields are separated by banks formed of sods, four feet high, with ditches at the sides. Quickset hedges are seen near the strait, and they have been raised in several districts in the interior. Lime and seaweed are employed as manure. The shell-sand, the best of which is obtained in Red Wharf Bay, is largely used and also exported. There are twelve small rivers, pretty evenly distributed over the island; the principal being the Cevin, Alan, Braint, Dulas, and Fraw. There are several good natural harbours, but no means of inland navigation. Fish of many kinds are found in abundance. In the channel between Priestholme Island and the main-land, oysters of large size are obtained. They are called Penmen oysters, and are exported in large quantities. Some peculiar species of fish and beautiful shells are found in this channel.—There are no manufactures of importance. The coarse wool from the Carnarvonshire mountains, mixed with the native wool of Anglesey, is made by the people into blue cloths, flannels, and blankets, for their own use.—The county is divided into three districts or cantrefs, and these into six hundreds, or cwmwds; the hundreds are Llyfon, Maltraeth, Menai, Talybolion, Twrcelyn, and Tyndaethwy. It contains seventy-six parishes, of which three, Amlwch, Beaumaris, which is the county town, and Holyhead, are boroughs, market towns, and seaports: one, viz., Llangefin, is a borough and market town; and another, Llanerchymedd, is a market town. The county returns one member to parliament. The four boroughs united return one member. Beaumaris, Holyhead, and Llangefin, are the polling-places, and the elections take place at Beaumaris. The county is governed by a lord-lieutenant, a sheriff, several deputy lieutenants, and twenty-five magistrates. Assizes and sessions are held at Beaumaris, where the county gaol stands. Anglesey is in the archdeaconry and diocese of Bangor, in the province of Canterbury. It is divided into six deaneries, and contains forty-five benefices.—The roads of the island were early improved, in consequence of its being the great thoroughfare to Ireland. The principal road is that leading from the Menai Bridge, right across the island to Holyhead; it is 22 miles in length. The railway from Chester is now continued over the strait by means of the great Britannia Bridge, from which it runs, south of the old coach-road, to Holyhead. Both road and railway cross the strait between Anglesey and Holyhead on embankments, which have central arched passages for the water. Before the erection of the great suspension and tubular bridges, there were five or six ferries across the Menai Strait; and the cattle sometimes used to swim over. [See Menai: Britannia Bridge.] The relics of antiquity in Anglesey are numerous. There are about thirty cromlechs, the largest of which is in the park of Plâs Newydd. Its upper stone measures 13 feet in length, 11 in breadth and 4 in thickness, and rests upon four other stones. A smaller cromlech stands close by it. At Trér Dyrw, is a huge stone rampart encircling a hollow, 180 feet in diameter, which is supposed to mark the seat of the Arch-Druid. Another large cromlech is at Llugwy, and two at Presaddord. At Holyhead are extensive remains of Roman fortifications. There is an entrenchment consisting of a rampart and triple ditch on the top of Gwydryn Hill; it is thought to be a British work, and is called Caer Idris. Roman coins and other relics have been found in different parts of the island. At Penmon, near Beaumaris, are ruins of the Benedictine priory, and a curious old sculptured cross. The chapel of the priory at Llanvaes, is still standing. There is a tower with some remains in Priestholme Island, supposed to have been part of a monastic building. The castle at Beaumaris is a grand ruin. Few of the churches have a tower or spire, and most of them stand near the shore; some of them are surrounded by the tide at high water. The principal seats in the island are the following:—Plâs Newydd, the residence of the Marquis of Anglesey; Llanidan, that of Lord Boston; Baron Hill, of Sir R. B. Williams Bulkeley, Bart.; Bôdorgan, Cadnant, Henllys, Llwydiarth, Plas Gwyn, and Tre-Jorwith.

ANGLESEY, or ANGLESEY VILLE, a vil. and watering place in the par. of Alverstoke, in the libs. of Alverstoke and Gosport, Portsdown div. of the co. of Southampton, 2 miles to the S.W. of Gosport railway station. It is a beautiful village, of modern construction, commanding extensive views, and is situated on the coast opposite to Spithead and the Isle of Wight. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the rect. of Alverstoke. A chapel of ease, in the Elizabethan style of architecture, was opened here in 1844. It is dedicated to St. Mark. There is a large hotel, reading-room, baths, and public gardens. This place owes its origin to the Marquis of Anglesey, who founded it about thirty-six years ago.

ANGLEZARKE, a tnshp. in the par. of Bolton-le-Moors, hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles to the E. of Chorley. It contains some stone quarries, and lead mines are worked. The rare ore named carbonate of barytes was first discovered in this township.

ANGMERING, a par. in the hund. of Poling, rape of Arundel, in the co. of Sussex, 3 miles to the S.E. of Arundel. It is a station on the South Coast railway. The hamlet of West Angmering is included in this parish. The living consists of the vic. of Apgmering, or East Angmering, and the rect. of West Angmering, in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £258, in the patron. of Sir G. R. Pechell, Bart., R.N. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, contains a monumental brass of the year 1598. There is an endowed free school founded in 1679, by William Older.

ANGRAM, a hmlt. in the chplry of Muker, par. of Grinton, in the waps. of West Gilling and West Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N.W. of Muker. It is situated within 2 miles of Shunner Fell, which has an elevation of 2,350 feet. The river Swale, which takes its rise on that mountain, runs through the hamlet.

ANGRAM, a tnshp. in the par. of Long Marston, ainsty of the city, and East Riding of the co., of York, 4 miles to the N.E. of Tadcaster. There is an endowment, by Edward Randall, in 1705, for educating poor children in this township, Marston, and Hutton.

ANGRAM GRANGE, a tnshp. in the par. of Coxwold, wap. of Birdforth, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N. of Easingwold.

ANGUS, a district in Scotland, now called Forfarshire. At a remote period it gave the title of earl to two families. Towards the close of the 15th century, the title was settled in the Douglas family. It subsequently passed to the Hamiltons, who bear it still. See FORFARSHIRE.

ANHID, or ATHNETT, a par. in the bar. of Coshma, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 1 mile to the S. of Croom. The river Mague forms its eastern boundary. The living is a prebend in the cathedral church of St. Mary, Limerick, val. £33, in the patron. of the crown. There is no church.

ANICK, a tnshp. in the par. of St. John Lee, southern div. of Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, not quite 2 miles to the N.E. of Hexham.

ANICK GRANGE, a tnshp. in the par. of St. John Lee, southern div. of Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 1 mile to the E. of Hexham.

ANKTON, or ANCTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Felpham, and hund. of Avisford, rape of Arundel, in the co. of Sussex, not far from Bognor.

ANLABY, a tnshp. in the pars. of Kirk Ella and Hessle, in the co. of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the W. of Hull. The Hull and Selby railway passes near it. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. Anlaby House, the principal residence, was the seat of the Anlabys and Legards, to whom the manor formerly belonged.

ANMER, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge-Lynn, in the co. of Norfolk, 5 miles to the N.E. of Castle Rising. It lies near the ancient road called Peddar Way. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £222, in the patron. of H. Coldham, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small building, standing in the grounds of Anmer Park, which is the principal seat.

ANNACARRIGA, a vil. in the bar. of Lower Tulla, in the co. of Clare, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N. of Killaloe.

ANNACLONE, or ANNAGHCLONE, a par. in the bar. of Upper Iveagh, in the co. of Down, and prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.E. of Banbridge. It is watered by the river Bann. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £311, in the patron. of the bishop. There are two chapels belonging to the Presbyterians. The soil is good and well cultivated, with a small tract of bog. Tanvally Fort, very large and perfect, and several lesser forts, are in this parish.

ANNACOTTY, a vil. in the city and co. of Limerick, in the prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles from Limerick. The river Mulcairn passes through it. It is a station on the Limerick and Castle Connel railway.

ANNADUFF, or ANNAGHDUFF, a par. in the bars. of Leitrim and Mohill, in the co. of Leitrim, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, near Carrick-on-Shannon. It contains the vils. of Drumod and Drumsna, and is situated on the river Shannon, which here expands into two fine loughs. An abbey once existed here, which was established in 766, of which nothing more is known, and no ruins remain. This parish was the scene of a trifling engagement in the reign of William III., between his forces and those of the deposed monarch, and the name of the spot, James's Heap, commemorates the fight. The living is a rect in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. £599, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is in the perpendicular style, with a square tower. The district contains limestone and freestone, with some iron ore. The chief residences are—Mount Campbell, lately the seat of Admiral Sir Josias Rowley, Bart.; Derrycarne, and Lismoyle.

ANNAGASSAN, a vil. in the par. of Drumcar, bar. of Ardee, in the co. of Louth, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 8 miles to the S. of Dundalk. It stands in a very pleasant situation, on the shore of Dundalk Bay, at the mouth of the rivers Glyde and Dee. There are large corn-mills the property of Robert Thompson, Esq., who is lord of the manor, and resides at Annagassan House. A handsome bridge crosses the Glyde, which has abundance of salmon and trout. Fairs are held on the 17th March, the 7th May, the 22nd July, and the 8th November.

ANNAGELLIFF, a par. in the bar. of Upper Loughtee, in the co. of Cavan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 1 mile E. of Cavan. The living is a vic. united with that of Urney, in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin.

ANNAGH, or BELTURBET, a par. in the bars. of Tullygarvey and Lower Loughtee, in the co. of Cavan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland 8 miles to the N. of Cavan. It is situated on the river Erne, and contains the town of Belturbet and the village of Redhill. There is a large tract of bog in the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. £803, in the patron. of Lord Farnham. The perpet. cur. of East Annagh, val. £62, is in the patron. of the rector. There are several seats.

ANNAGH, a vil. in the bar. of Orrery and Kilmore, in the co. of Cork, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.W. of Charleville. The manufacture of linen is carried on in this village, which stands on the site of a bog, reclaimed by the Earl of Egmont. The river Awbeg flows by it.

ANNAGH, or ST. ANNA, a par. in the bars. of Corkaguiny and Trughanacmy, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 6 miles to the W. of Tralee. It is situated on the coast of the bay of Tralee, extending for several miles between the bay and the Slievenish mountains, and contains the village of Blennerville. The living is a rect., forming part of the union of Ballynahaglish, in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe. The church is at Blennerville. The greater part of the parish consists of mountain pasture, and the rest of arable land.

ANNAGH, a par. in the bar. of Costello, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 20 miles to the S.E. of Castlebar. It is situated near the river Moy, and contains the town of Ballyhaunes. Here was formerly a monastic establishment, whether of the Franciscan or Augustine order is doubtful, which was a cell to the abbey of Cong. The living is a rect., part of the union of Kiltullagh, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry.

ANNAGHDOWN, a par. in the bar. of Clare, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 7 miles to the N. of Galway. It is situated on the shore of Lough Corrib, which forms its western boundary. It is a place of great antiquity, and was the seat of a bishopric and of several religious establishments. A nunnery was founded here by St. Brendan, which was granted by Celestine III. to nuns of the Arroasian order. It passed at the suppression to the Earl of Clanricarde. A Premonstratensian abbey also existed here at a remote period, and a Franciscan friary, which was head of the monasteries of Connaught and Ulster. There was also a college, named after St. Brendan, for four priests. The old bishopric has long been incorporated with Tuam. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, val., with those of Lackagh and Killascobe, £697, in the patron. of the bishop. Annaghdown House, Cregg Castle, and Waterdale are the principal residences.

ANNAGH ISLAND, in the par. of Kilcommon, bar. of Erris, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland. It is situated near the entrance of Achill Sound, and consists chiefly of mountain, with excellent pasture. A salmon and herring fishery is established here.

ANNAHILT, a par. in the bars. of Lower Iveagh, and Kinelarty, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.E. of Hillsborough. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £413, in the patron. of the bishop. There are almshouses for ten old men and ten women, erected in 1835, and endowed by Robert Sharland. Each of the inmates receives £5 a year. Slate, of good quality, is obtained at Clantogh. Linen and cotton weaving are carried on, and many females are engaged in spinning. There are two places of worship for Presbyterians. The principal seats are Larchfield and Lough Aghery. An extensive fort once occupied the site of the present churchyard, and other forts exist near it.

ANNALONG, a hmlt. in the bar. of Mourne, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 5 miles to the N. of Kilkeel. It lies on the coast of Annalong creek.

ANNALORE, a vil. in the bar. of Partree, in the co. of Monaghan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the W. of Clones. The Ulster canal passes by it.

ANNAMOE, a vil. in the par. of Derrylossory, bar. of Ballinacor, in the co. of Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 9 miles to the N.W. of Wicklow. It is situated in a charming valley by the Annamoe rivulet which runs down from Lough Dan to the river Ovoca. Not far from the village are the remains of Castle Kevin, an ancient fortress of the O'Toole. It was in the form of a quadrangle. All that is left are the rampart and ditch, and some of the foundations. The principal seats are Castle Kevin, on a fine wooded hill, with extensive prospects; Dromreen and Lara House.

ANNAMULT, or AGLINAMULT, an ext. par. place in the bar. of Shillelogher, in the co. of Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 6 miles to the S. of Kilkenny. It is situated at the junction of the King's river and the river Nore. The living is a rect., part of the union of Kells, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. An extensive Merino cloth factory, employing 800 hands, was established here, but did not succeed, and the works have remained unoccupied. Annamult House is the principal residence.

ANNAN, a par., seaport, market town, and royal and parliamentary borough, in the co. of Dumfries, Scotland, 16 miles to the E. of Dumfries, and 79 to the S. of Edinburgh. It is a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway. The town stands on the left bank of the river Annan, which enters the Solway Frith a mile below the town. It includes part of the quoad sacra par. of Brydekirk. Annan is a place of great antiquity. A castle was built here by the Bruces, who were lords of Annandale. The first charter of incorporation was granted by Robert Bruce in 1306: and the privileges of the burgh were more perfectly defined by a charter of James V. in 1538. The charter was renewed by James VI. in 1612. Annan suffered much and frequently from the border wars. In 1298 it was burnt by the English, and was often plundered. The town, which comprises 631 houses, inhabited by 857 separate families, consists of several streets, the principal one being in the line of road from Carlisle to Dumfries. The streets are paved, and the houses well built. There is a town-house at the west end of the town, and its environs are studded with many beautiful villas, giving the place an appearance of cheerfulness and prosperity. A handsome bridge of three arches was erected over the Annan in 1826, the old bridge having been previously removed. Vessels of 300 tons can unload in the river, and small vessels can discharge their cargoes at the town. The port is subordinate to Dumfries, and the ships belonging to it, about thirty sail, comprising an aggregate of 2,500 tons burden, are principally engaged in the coasting trade. Two or three trade to America and the Baltic. Before the opening of the railway there were two steamers to Liverpool. There is a convenient quay. The chief exports are corn, bacon, timber, &c.; the chief imports coal, slate, herrings, &c. The cotton manufacture, gingham-weaving, ship-building, and the fisheries give occupation to many of the inhabitants. Vessels of upwards of 1,000 tons burden have been built here. Annan is one of the five contributory boroughs to Dumfries, in returning one representative to parliament. The municipal and parliamentary constituency in 1852 was 191. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, and eleven councillors, and has a revenue of about £450. Annan is the seat of a presbytery. The living, val. £279, is in the patronage of Johnstone of Annandale. The church, which was built in 1790, is a handsome edifice, with an elegant spire. A new church has been erected, the living of which is in the gift of the managers. There are places of worship belonging to the Episcopalians, Free Church, United Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, and Independents. There is a mechanics' institute, with a good library, reading-room, and lecture hall. The academy, erected in 1820, in Ednam-street, is a large establishment, conducted by two masters. The surface of this parish is generally level, but there are three lines of low hills running through it in the same direction. The course of the river lies between two of these, and through very picturesque scenery. The Dumfries and Carlisle railway crosses the river here on a substantial stone viaduct, and afterwards enters a deep cutting, on emerging from which it discloses a magnificent view of the basin and land-screens of the Solway Frith. Part of the parish consists of moorland. There are quarries of limestone, and freestone. Annan is the birthplace of Dr. Blacklock, the poet, of Hugh Clapperton, the African traveller, and of Edward Irving, the celebrated preacher. The market is held on Thursday, and fairs for hiring servants on the first Thursday in May, and the third Thursday in October. The par. extends over an area of 16,000 acres, and the town, according to the census of 1861, contains 3,473 inhabitants, of whom 622 are children under 15 years of age, entered on the school books.

ANNAN, a river in the south of Scotland, which rises in a mountain hollow, on the borders of Dumfriesshire and Peeblesshire. It flows through the fertile valley district of Annandale, receiving into it the waters of many burns and rivulets, and, passing the towns of Moffat and Annan, falls, after a course of 30 miles, into the Solway Frith, at the village of Annan Water-Foot. Hartfell, the mountain on which this river rises, is sometimes called by the extraordinary name of the Devil's Beef Stand. The name of the river signifies slow-running.

ANNANDALE, one of the three districts of the co. of Dumfries, Scotland, consisting of the fine and fertile valley of the river Annan, in the central part of the co. In geologic ages it is supposed to have been long the bed of a great inland lake. It formed part of the kingdom of Strath Clyde, and also of the Roman province of Valentia, at which period it was covered with a dense forest. Of its Roman occupation there are abundant traces: part of Severus's wall, the camps of Birreus and Brunswark, and the remains of a great military road, still are visible. There are also many ruins of the Scottish period: the large quadrangular fortress of Auchioncap, on Even-water, once the seat of the Regent Randolph, Lochmaben Castle, and the Castles of Hoddam and Comlongan. It became a lordship under the Bruces, to whom it was granted by David I. in 1124. The Douglases held it at a later period, and after them the Hopetouns. At one time, Annandale gave the title of marquis to the Johnstones, a family noted for their military prowess, but the title became extinct in 1792. They were wardens of the western marches, and were a terror to evil doers on the borders. It is said that the author and poet, Ben Jonson, was the descendant of an Annandale family, and was really not a Jonson, but a Johnstone.

ANNAN-WATER-FOOT, sometimes called simply WATER-FOOT, is a vil. situated at the efflux of the river Annan, and is sheltered by Barnkirk hill. It is in close proximity to the town of Annan, to which it serves as the port, having ready communication with the town. It has two jetties of 140 yards in length, and a commodious inn at the place of landing, which was formerly much used when the two steamers ran to Liverpool, but they are now superseded by the railway.

ANNASCALLY, a vil. in the par. of Ballinacourty, bar. of Corkaguiny, in the co. of Kerry, Ireland, 9 miles to the E. of Dingle. It is pleasantly situated in a valley near Dingle bay, and not far from a lake. In a neighbouring glen is a spot called "Wolf Step," where the last wolf in Ireland is said to have been killed. The village has a police station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. Woodlawn is the chief residence.

ANNATRIM, a vil. in the par. of Offerlane and bar. of Upperwoods, in Queen's County, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, not far from Coolrain. An abbey formerly stood here.

ANNESBOROUGH, Down. See DROMARAGH.

ANNE, ST. See ALDERNEY, Channel Islands.

ANNE, ST., Yorkshire. See BRIERS.

ANNE, ST., SHANDON, a par. in the bar. and city of Cork, in the co. of Cork, and prov. of Munster, Ireland. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £653, in the patron. of the Duke of Leinster and H. Longfield, Esq.

ANNESLEY, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Broxtow, in the co. of Nottingham, 8 miles to the N. of Nottingham. It lies within the limits of Sherwood forest, and comprises the hmlts. of Annesley, Woodhouse, Wandesley, and Felley. It is an ancient parish, and belonged at the Conquest to the family of the Annesleys, who had their seat here. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £64, in the patron. of J. Chaworth Musters, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is an ancient edifice, and contains monuments of the Annesleys, and an interesting brass, with a representation of a forester and dog. Annesley Hall is a beautiful residence, formerly the seat of the Chaworths, and late of John Musters, Esq., who married Lord Byron's "Mary." It is not far from Newstead Abbey. A castle formerly stood in the park, which was erected, at an early period, by the Annesleys. There is an endowment, amounting to about £45, for the benefit of the minister of the Baptist or Independent congregation in Annesley.

ANNESLEY, Staffordshire. See ANSLOW.

ANNESTOWN, a vil. in the bar. of Middlethird, in the co. of Waterford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the W. of Tramore. It is situated on the coast of St. George's Channel, and has a small harbour. Lead is found in the neighbourhood.

ANNISTON, Forfarshire. See AMESTON.

ANN, LITTLE, a tythg. in the par. of Abbot's Ann, in the hunds. of Andover and Wherwell, in the co. of Southampton, 2 miles to the S.W. of Andover. The Andover canal passes near it.

ANNOCK, a small river of Renfrewshire and Ayrshire. It takes its rise from the White Loch, in the par. of Mearns, and after a course of 14 miles joins the river Irvine Water, a little above the town of Irvine.

ANSFORD, Somersetshire. See ALMSFORD.

ANSLEY, a par. in the hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick, 3 miles to the S. of Atherstone. Nuneaton is the post town. It is situated on the river Bourne, and the Oxford canal passes through the parish. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £116, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, part of which is in the Norman style, has a handsome tower, and is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The parochial charities amount to £47. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. Ansley Park, which was lately the seat of the Ludfords, is a spacious and picturesque demesne, adorned with a Chinese temple, erected by Sir W. Chambers, and a hermitage built of the materials of an ancient oratory.

ANSLOW, or ANNESLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Rolleston, northern div. of the hund. of Offlow, in the co. of Stafford, 3 miles to the N.W. of Burton-on-Trent. The Grand Trunk canal passes near it. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

ANSTEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Hilton and hund. of Whiteway, in the co. of Dorset, 8 miles to the W. of Blandford.

ANSTEY, a par. in the hund. of Edwintree, in the co. of Hertford, 4 miles to the N.E. of Buntingford. It is situated on the old British way called Ermine Street, and near the river Quin. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £504, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge. The church is in the form of a cross, and has a central tower. It was built by Nicholas de Ainstie of the ruins of a castle, which was erected at the Conquest, by Eustace, Earl of Boulogne. There still remain some traces of the castle. The church contains a font, stalls, and a monument of the founder. The manor is held by the Lyttons.

ANSTEY, a chplry. in the par. of Thurcaston, in the hund. of West Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 4 miles to the N.W. of Leicester. A branch of the river Soar runs through it, and the Leicester and Swannington branch of the Midland railway passes near. It was formerly among the possessions of the abbey of Ulverscroft, and subsequently belonged to the Greys of Groby. The living is a rect. united with that of Thurcaston, in the dioc. of Peterborough. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1850, with the exception of the tower, which is old. The black pointing, with light freestone ornaments, has a remarkable appearance. There are chapels belonging to the Wesleyans, Reformed Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. The parochial charities amount to £41. Anstey Hall is the principal residence. The chplry. comprises 1,400 acres, a large part of which was formerly waste, but has been lately enclosed.

ANSTEY, a par. in the co. of the city of Coventry, in Warwickshire, 5 miles to the N.E. of Coventry. The Trent Valley railway and the Oxford canal pass through the parish. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £162, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. A free school was founded here, in 1712, by the Rev. John Million. The rent of the schoolhouse, £2 per annum, is all that remains of the endowment. Ribband weaving is carried on here. Anstey House is the chief residence.

ANSTEY, a par. in the hund. of Dunworth, in the co. of Wilts, 5 miles to the S.E. of Hindon. It is situated at the foot of White-street Hill. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £22, in the patron. of Lord Arundel. The church, the most ancient in the diocese, is dedicated to St. James. A preceptory of the Knights' Hospitallers was founded in this parish in the reign of King John, by Walter de Turbeville, part of which is still remaining, and is used as a barn. The revenue of the house, at the Dissolution, was £81. Anstey was the birthplace (1590) of Dr. Richard Zouch, the great lawyer, who was judge of the Admiralty court, in the reign of Charles I.

ANSTEY, EAST, a par. in the hund. of South Molton, in the co. of Devon, 10 miles to the E. of South Molton. Dulverton is the post town. It is pleasantly situated, on the borders of Somersetshire, near the source of the river Yeo, and at the foot of Anstey Hill, a lofty eminence on the north of the village. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £180, in the patron. of T. S. Jessopp, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

ANSTEY PASTURES, an ext. par. lib. in the hund. of Gascote, in the co. of Leicester, close to Anstey. It formerly belonged to the duchy of Lancaster.

ANSTEY, WEST, a par. in the hund. of South Molton, in the co. of Devon, a little to the N.W. of East Anstey. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £132, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Petrock. There is an almshouse for poor persons, and charities amounting to £7.

ANSTON, a par. in the southern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 12 miles to the E. of Sheffield. Rotherham is the post town. It comprises the tnshps. of North Anston, South Anston, and Woodsetts. A rivulet separates North and South Anston, which stand on opposite hills, and the Chesterfield canal passes at a short distance. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £230, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is dedicated to St. James. The manufacture of nails and of starch is carried on here. There is a small endowed school.

ANSTRUTHER EASTER, or ANSTER, a par., royal and parliamentary burgh, and seaport, in St. Andrew's district, in the co. of Fife, Scotland, 16 miles to the S.E. of Cupar, and 25 miles from Edinburgh. It is situated on the coast of the Frith of Forth, and is only separated from Anstruther Wester by the rivulet called the Dreel, which is crossed by a bridge. The East of Fife branch railway is to be continued to this town. The port was formerly a creek of Kirkcaldy, but in 1710 it was made a port, and a custom-house established here. The vessels belonging to it are chiefly engaged in the coasting trade, and the herring and other fisheries. There is daily communication by steam with Leith. The burgh is contributory with Cupar and St. Andrew's in returning one member to parliament. It has been a royal burgh since 1583, when a charter was granted by James VI., and is now governed by three bailies and nineteen councillors, one of these being provost. The population, according to the census of 1861, is 1,178, distributed into 508 separate families, occupying 201 houses. The living is in the presb. of St. Andrew's, val. £132, in the patron. of William Baird, Esq. The parish church was built in 1634, and has a spire. There are chapels belonging to the Free Church, the Independents, Baptists, and United Presbyterians. The heroine of the popular song, "Maggie Lauder," lived in this town. Anstruther was the birthplace of the great preacher, Dr. Chalmers, and of Professor Tennant, the linguist, author of the clever descriptive poem of "Anster Fair." This fair, which was once of note, was held on ground north of the town. The market is held on Saturday. The fairs have long been discontinued.

ANSTRUTHER WESTER, a par. joined with Anstruther Easter, St. Andrew's district, in the co. of Fife, Scotland. It is a royal and parliamentary burgh and seaport, containing, according to the census of 1861, only 56 houses, inhabited by 102 separate families, comprising a population of 367. It was made a royal burgh by James VI., in 1587, and now contributes to the burgh of St. Andrew's in sending one member to parliament. In 1852 the parliamentary and municipal constituency was 12. Since 1852 it has been governed by three commissioners appointed by the Court of Session. The town has suffered much on several occasions from encroachments of the sea. It had once a salmon fishery of some importance, which, after it had very much declined, has recently revived. The living is in the presb. of St. Andrew's, val. £142, in the patron. of William Baird, Esq. The church, a Gothic building of great antiquity, with a spire and large choir, has been so frequently repaired and altered that scarcely a trace of its original character remains. The par. was anciently a vic belonging to the priory of Pittenweem. Land has of late years so much improved in value in this parish, that fields which were let at the end of the last century for 20s. to 30s. per acre, now realise £3 10s. to £4 per acre. Opposite to Anstruther lies the small Isle of May, on which there is a lighthouse.

ANTHONY, ST., IN MENEAGE, a par. in the hund. of Kerrier, in the co. of Cornwall, 7 miles to the E. of Helston. It is situated on the coast of the English Channel, at the mouth of the river Helford. The ground is high, and commands extensive sea views. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £101, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, which is of great age, has a granite tower. A monastic house formerly existed here, which was a cell to the priory of Tywardreath, and was probably founded before the reign of Richard I. In this parish are two ancient British entrenchments, now named Great and Little Dinas, or Great and Little Fort. During the civil war of the 17th century, a small fort was constructed by the royalists, on the site of Little Dinas, for the defence of Helford harbour; it was taken in 1646, by Fairfax. Poor children of this parish have the benefit of an endowment founded by Mr. Hosken, in 1743, for the purpose of maintaining and educating them.

ANTHONY, ST., IN ROSELAND, a par. in the western div. of the hund. of Powder, in the co. of Cornwall, 3 miles to the E. of Falmouth. St. Mawes is the post town. It is situated on a promontory on the coast of the English Channel, at the entrance to Falmouth harbour. It was the site of an Augustine priory, subordinate to that of Plympton in Devonshire, and founded about 1124, by Bishop Warlewast. The estate was given at the Dissolution to Thomas Goodwin, and subsequently passed into the family of Spry, of Place House, who have long held it. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Exeter, in the patron. of Sir S. T. Spry. The church, which is partly in the Norman style, contains some monuments of the Sprys. A chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, stood formerly on the western promontory. Slate is the prevailing rock, and at Porth there is a shell bed at an elevation of thirty feet above high-water mark. A lighthouse has been erected on Anthony Point, sixty-five feet high, having a revolving light, which can be seen at a distance of twelve miles. Place House, the seat of the Sprys, stands on the site of the old priory.

ANTHORN, a tnshp. in the par. of Bowness, in the ward and co. of Cumberland, 7 miles to the N. of Wigton. It lies at the mouth of the river Wampool, and near Anthorn lake.

ANTINGHAM, a par. in the northern div. of the hund. of Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the N.W. of North Walsham. The river Ant rises here. The living consists of the rect. of St. Mary, with the vic. of Thorpe Market, and deanery of Bradfield annexed, in the dioc. of Norwich, val. together £115, in the patron. of Lord Suffield, who is lord of the manor. There were formerly in this parish two churches in the same churchyard, built by two sisters, the one dedicated to St. Mary, the other to St. Margaret: the latter is now in ruins, with its ivy-mantled tower; the former is built of flint, and has a monumental brass to Richard Calthorpe. The register dates from 1679. Here is a beautiful rectory-house, in the Italian style, built in 1845, and a national school. The rect. of St. Margaret is now united with the vic. of North Walsham.

ANTONINUS, WALL OF, a famous Roman entrenchment, extending from the Forth to the Clyde, constructed about the year 140, under the superintendence of Lollius Urbicus, one of the lieutenants of the Emperor Antoninus Pius. It consisted of a foss, a strong rampart, and a military road on the south side of them. A line of twenty-one forts had been formed long previously by Agricola, and this new work was probably undertaken to connect them. Its length was about thirty-six miles, and there was an interval of about two miles between fort and fort. At Duntocher, which was one of the chief stations, there are still remains of it, and also a Roman bridge; and the course of the entrenchment may be traced a great part of its length. The rampart, which was of earth, rested on a stone foundation, 24 feet thick, and was about twenty feet high. Its purpose was, to protect South or Roman Britain, from the destructive inroads of the northern tribes. It is now locally called Grime's Dyke. Inscriptions have been discovered which show the particular divisions of the army which were engaged in forming this wall.

ANTONY, ST. JACOB, a par. in the southern div. of the hund. of East, in the co. of Cornwall, 3 miles to the W. of Devonport. It is situated on the coast of Lynher Creek, at the mouth of the river Tamar, not far from the borders of Devonshire. It contains the chapelry of Torpoint. The living is a vic.* with the cur. of Merrifield, in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £262, in the patron. of the Right Hon. W. H. P. Carew. The church is dedicated to St. James, and contains a brass under a rich canopy, to the memory of Margery Arundell, who died in 1420. It has also several monuments to the Carew family, one of them being to Richard Carew, who wrote the "Survey of Cornwall." He died in 1620. There is also a church at Torpoint, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £124, in the patron. of the vicar. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. There is a free school for ten children endowed by Sir C. Carew. Antony House is the seat of the Carews; Thancks, on the banks of Hamoaze, is the seat of the Dowager Lady Graves. Coarse slate is quarried here.

ANTRIM, a maritime co. in the prov. of Ulster, bounded on the E. by the Irish Channel, on the N. by the Northern Ocean, on the S. by Lough Neagh and the counties of Armagh and Down, and on the W. by the counties of Derry and Tyrone. It has a coast line of 90 miles. It extends in length, N. and S., 56 miles, and its greatest breadth is 25 miles. It comprises an area of above 760,000 acres. It is situated between 54° 28′ and 55° 13′ north latitude; and between 5° 40′ and 6° 37′ west longitude. It is divided for civil purposes into fourteen baronies, which are the following—Upper Antrim, Lower Antrim, Upper Belfast, Lower Belfast, Upper Massereene, Lower Massereene, Upper Glenarm, Lower Glenarm, Upper Toome, Lower Toome, Kilconway, Upper Dunluce, Lower Dunluce, and Carey. It contains 74 parishes, of which twelve are market towns and three are boroughs. The latter are Belfast, recently made the county town; Carrickfergus, which was formerly the county town; and Lisburn. Before the union, Antrim returned ten representatives to parliament; it now returns six, two for the county, two for Belfast, one for Carrickfergus, and one for Lisburn. The government of the county is entrusted to a lieutenant and custos, a high sheriff, twenty-two deputy lieutenants, and above a hundred magistrates.—In the earliest times, this part of Ireland was the seat of a Celtic tribe called the Darini. It was frequently subject to the desolating descents of the Danes upon its coasts, and at a later period to those of the Scots, who at last fixed themselves there. The O'Neills were for a time lords of the district, and after them, some English adventurers. Antrim was made a county in the reign of King John, by whom also the castle of Carrickfergus was built in 1210. For a short time it fell into the hands of the Scottish chief Edward Bruce, from whom it was retaken by the English. But the O'Neills, on a sudden provocation, rose in 1333, against the English, and regained the whole district except Carrickfergus and part of the Glynnes. Dunluce Castle was besieged by Sir John Perrot, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and the garrison surrendered. The MacDonnells, the greatest proprietors at that period, and who came into possession of the district in the 15th century, again gave up the castle to the English, after it had been lost by treachery.—The country was at one time divided into the three districts of Lower Clan-Hugh-Boy, the Glynnes, and the Route; the first name being formed from that of a chief of the O'Neills, Hugh Boy O'Neill, the second indicating the natural character of the surface, abounding in glens, and the third being a corruption of the more ancient name Dalriada. The surface of this county is mostly hilly, rising gradually from the southern and western sides in parallel ridges towards the north-east. The mountains attain their greatest elevation near the coast, where they terminate in bold cliffs and headlands. The predominant formation is the trap, which forms nearly the entire surface of the county. Beneath the trap there lie in succession beds of chalk, indurated and incapable of being worked, green sand, red sandstone, and mica slate. These beds, with their various colours, give to the cliffs and headlands a singular and striking effect. Their highest beauty and grandeur are attained on the northern coast, at the well-known Giant's Causeway, which consists of a mass of basalt in the columnar form, dipping perpendicularly into the sea. Beds of coal and red ochre are occasionally observed, mixed with the other strata. Coal was at one time obtained near the basaltic rock, at the north-east point of the county, called Benmore or Fair Head. Porphyry is found in a small district north of the town of Antrim, and in some other places. The principal mountains in the interior are Divis, to the west of Belfast, which has an elevation of 1,567 feet; Agnew's Hill to the west of Larne, 1,558 feet; Slemish, to the east of Ballymena, 1,437 feet; Tristan, the loftiest in the county, and situated to the south-west of Cushendall, 1,810 feet; and Knocklayd, to the south of Ballycastle, 1,685 feet. As the greatest elevation of the county is near the coast, most of the principal rivers flow westward and discharge themselves into Lough Neagh. These streams which fall into the Irish Channel are very inconsiderable. The largest river is the Bann, which flows along the western border of the county from Lough Neagh, as far north as Ballymoney, and then through a part of Londonderry to the Atlantic ocean. The Main rises among the mountains of the north and east, and falls into Lough Neagh below Randalstown. The Six-Mile Water flows across the county from Larne, and falls into the Lough near Antrim. The Lagan flows through a rich fertile valley, on the southern border, and unites Belfast with Lough Neagh. The Bush runs northward and falls into the Atlantic below Bushmills. Lough Neagh is the largest lake in the British islands. It is about 20 miles in length and 12 miles in breadth, and has an area of 150 square miles. Its surface is estimated to be 48 feet above the level of the sea at low water. [See NEAGH, LOUGH.] Lough Beg, the only other lake of importance, lies a little north of Lough Neagh, and is connected with it by a channel a mile in length. There are large tracts of bog in the county, and very little wooded country. The principal features of interest along the coast, which is mostly abrupt and rocky, are on the northern line, the three rocks called the Skerries about a mile to the north of Portrush; the Giant's Causeway; the promontory next to it, Benmore Head; the island of Rathlin, opposite to Ballycastle Bay; and Benmore, or Fair Head, the eastern point of the same bay. Along the eastern coast, Red Bay, so called from the red sandstone which is conspicuous there; Glenarm Bay, off which are the Maiden rocks and lighthouse; Larne Lough, enclosed on the east by the peninsula called Island Magee, and forming an excellent harbour; Black Head, and Belfast Lough and harbour, at the southernmost point of the coast. There are twenty-three coast-guard stations, on which about 140 men are employed. The only canal in the county is the Lagan Navigation or Belfast canal. It was constructed in the reign of George III., and connects Belfast with Lough Neagh. Its length in county Antrim is 22 miles and it is capable of admitting ships of 50 tons burden.—The climate of Antrim is generally dry and healthy. The soil is various in quality: over the greater part of the county it is light; along the river valleys it is better, and fit for wheat crops; the best is perhaps that in the Lagan valley. The farms are usually small. The fishery districts are those of Ballycastle and Carrickfergus, which comprise 121 miles of coast, including the bays. Above 1,000 boats are engaged, and about 3,000 hands. The fish taken are cod, ling, conger, &c. There is a salmon fishery at Carrick-a-Rede, and in several other places. But the chief occupation of the inhabitants is the linen manufacture. It has been carried on from very early times in Ireland, and was especially promoted in the north by Lord Strafford. It was the object of many legislative enactments during the 17th and 18th centuries, and grew so important that parliament granted £12,000 a year for its protection. The division of labour and the aid of machinery appears to have been first applied in the manufacture in 1725. Belfast is the great market, and Lisburn and its district the great seat of the manufacture. There are also cotton and woollen manufactures. The former was introduced in 1777. The first twist mill was erected near Belfast in 1784. Other branches of manufacture are damasks, canvas, and rope; paper, leather, glass, and iron. The influence of manufacturing industry in this county is strongly marked by the progressive increase in the population and wealth of two of its principal towns, Belfast and Carrickfergus, while every other part of Ireland, except the county of Dublin, has been rapidly decreasing. The average population of the county shows a decrease of only 28,774 in the last 20 years, having been returned in 1841 at 276,188, against 247,414 in 1861. This decrease would have been much greater only for the unexampled prosperity of Belfast, which has increased from 75,308 to 119,242 or 33·19 per cent.— There are numerous interesting relics of ancient times in the county. They consist chiefly of cairns and cromlechs. The principal cairn is on the Colin Hill, a little to the north of Lisburn. Others are found on Slieve True and Colinward. The most interesting cromlech is at Cairn-graine, near the road from Belfast to Templepatrick. Others are at Mount Druid and Island Magee. The remains of entrenchments are very numerous and in great variety. Two hundred and thirty exist in the two parishes of Killead and Muckamore, besides ten earthworks. There are also similar remains at Donegore, Kilconway, Dunmaul, Dunmacaltar, &c. There are four of the celebrated round towers in the county—at Antrim, Armoy, Trummery, and on Ram's Island in the great lough. Of monastic houses there are ruins at Benamargy, Kells, Glenarm, Glynn, &c. The castle of Carrickfergus is the only ancient fortress in good preservation; ruins of others exist in various parts of the county—Green Castle, between Belfast and Carrickfergus; Olderfleet Castle, near the entrance to Larne Lough; Castle Chichester, Red Bay Castle, Court Martin, near Cushendall; Bruce's Castle in the Island of Rathlin, Dunluce, once the seat of the McDonnells, in a most striking situation; Shane's Castle, the seat of the O'Neills, &c. The county has several interesting caverns, one under Red Bay Castle, another under Dunluce; one in the Cave Hill, and several others. There are chalybeate springs at Ballycastle and Knocklayd, a nitrous spring at Kilroot, and salt springs near Carrickfergus. Among the mansions and residences of the nobility and gentry are the following: Belfast, the seat of the Marquis of Donegal; Glenarm Castle, the seat of the Earl of Antrim; Antrim Castle, of Viscount Massareene; Brownlow, of Lord Lurgan; Bushmills, of Sir Edmund William W. McNaughten, Bart.; Langford Lodge, of Lieut.-Col. Pakenham, M.P.; Garron Towers, of the Marchioness of Londonderry; Moneyglass, Portglenone, Red Hill, New Town, Cromnelin, Castle Dobbs, Thornfield, Lesbe Hill, Lissanore Castle, &c.—A railway now intersects the county, from Belfast in the south to Port Rush at the north-western extremity; passing by Antrim, Ballymena, Ballymoney, and Coleraine. There is a branch line from Belfast to Carrickfergus, and one from Antrim to Randalstown, and round the northern end of Lough Neagh to Cookstown. The Coleraine line is continued to Londonderry; and the Ulster railway from Belfast, passing by Lisburn, Lurgan, and Armagh, is open to Monaghan. The principal roads in the county are the following: 1st. the great coast road from Belfast to Carrickfergus, Larne, Glenarm, Cushendall, Ballycastle, Ballintoy, to the Giant's Causeway, a length of 73 miles. This road was formed at a very great expense and in face of great difficulties. At the headland of Glenarm it was necessary to remove by blasting immense masses of the rock dipping perpendicularly into the sea, and at the base of which the road had to be carried. In other parts the difficulty arose from slippery moving clay banks. This road running between the mountains and the sea from Larne to Cushendall, and thence across the hills inland to the northern coast, opens to the traveller a succession of striking and magnificent prospects. 2nd. the road from Belfast to Antrim, continued through Randalstown, Ballymena, Ballymoney, Coleraine, to Bushmills, near the Causeway, a length of 56 miles. 3rd. the road from Belfast to Lisburn, branching off in several directions into the county of Down.

ANTRIM, a par. partly in the bar. of Upper Antrim, partly in that of Upper Toome, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 22 miles to the N.W. of Belfast by railway, and 106 miles to the N. of Dublin. It is situated at the north-eastern extremity of Lough Neagh, at the mouth of Six-Mile Water, which discharges itself into that lake. It has a station on the Belfast and Northern Counties railway. A monastery appears to have been founded here as early as 495, by Aedh, a disciple of St. Patrick, which became subsequently subordinate to Woodburn Abbey. A sharp encounter took place here, between a large body of natives and a party of the English settlers, under Sir Robert Savage. It is said that 3,000 of the Irish fell in the fight. In 1616 the town and a large part of the parish of Antrim were given by James I. to Sir Arthur Chichester. In 1643 Lough Neagh was the scene of an engagement between the English and Irish, in which the latter were defeated, and their ships taken to the town of Antrim. The town was burnt in 1649, by General Monroe. It was attacked by the insurgents in 1798, who marched on it in four columns. After a severe conflict they were dispersed, leaving 900 dead in the town. The town is situated in one of the most fertile and agreeable districts in the county, the wide valley of the Six-Mile Water. There are two principal streets. The houses are mostly modern and built of stone; but the town contains only 421 inhabited houses, with a population of 2,131.—According to the census of 1861, 524 belong to the Established Church, 965 are Presbyterians, and only 493 Roman Catholics; the remainder are Protestant Dissenters of various denominations. There is a handsome court-house and a market-house, part of which serves as a bridewell. Paper making has long been carried on here on a large scale. The first mills were erected in 1776. There are several bleach-greens, a large brewery, and flour-mills. Many persons are employed in their own houses in the linen manufacture. Antrim was formerly a parliamentary borough. Under letters-patent of Charles II., it returned two members to parliament, from 1666 till the time of the Union, when it was disfranchised; £15,000 being granted as compensation to the Earl of Massereene and the Skeffingtons. The quarter sessions for the county are regularly held here, and petty sessions once in three weeks. Antrim is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and a chief station of the constabulary police. It has a dispensary and a loan fund bank. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £235, in the patron. of the Marquis of Donegal. The church, which was rebuilt in 1720, having been burnt down seventy years before, has a fine square tower and octagonal spire. There are two chapels belonging to the Presbyterians, two to the Primitive Methodists, and one to the Unitarians. Near the town stands Antrim Castle, the ancient seat of the Massereenes. It was erected in the reign of Charles II., and has been since enlarged. It is situated on high ground above the Six-Mile Water. Shane's Castle, 2 miles N.W. of the town, was the seat of Viscount O'Neill. It was burnt by accident, in 1816. The people of the neighbourhood say it is visited by the "Banshee." There are several other seats in the vicinity. In the plantations connected with Steeple stands a round tower, one of the most perfect in Ireland. It is of unhewn stone, and 95 feet in height. The walls are nearly a yard in thickness. Over the door-way is a cross, cut in relief on the stone. It is conjectured that this tower occupies the site of the ancient monastery. Antrim gives the title of earl to the Macdonnells. It was the residence of the ancestors of the distinguished surgeon, John Abernethy. A market is held on Tuesday and Thursday. Fairs are held on the 1st January, the 12th May, and the 12th November.

ANTRIM, UPPER AND LOWER, two of the fourteen baronies into which the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, is divided. They lie nearly in the centre of the county, and are bounded on the N. by the baronies of Kilconway and Glenarm, on the E. by those of Glenarm, and Lower Belfast, on the S. by Lower Massereene, and on the W. by the baronies of Upper and Lower Toome. The pars. contained in the bar. of Lower Antrim are the following—Ahoghill, Ballyclug, Connor, Glenwhirry, Racavan, and Skerry; and the towns of Broughshane, Connor, Harryville, and Kells. It comprises an area of about 80,827 acres. The pars. in the bar. of Upper Antrim are—part of Antrim, Ballycor, Doaghgrange, Donegore, Kilbride, Nilteen Grange, and Rashee; and the towns of Antrim, Ballyeaston, Ballyclare, and Doagh.

ANTROBUS, a tnshp. in the par. of Great Budworth, hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 4 miles to the N. of Northwich. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Chester, val. £80, in the patron. of the vicar of the parish. Antrobus Hall is the seat of Sir E. W. Antrobus, Bart., who is the proprietor of the whole township.

ANWICK, a par. in the wap. of Flaxwell, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the N.E. of Sleaford. The Sleaford canal passes through it. The living is a vic. united to the rect. of Brauncewell, in the dioc. of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Edith.

ANWOTH, a par. in the stewartry and co. of Kirkcudbright, Scotland, 7 miles to the N.W. of Kirkcudbright. It is situated on the eastern coast of Wigton bay, at the mouth of the small river Fleet, formerly called the Avon, and contains part of the village of Gatehouse-of-Fleet. The coast is generally flat, but rocky. The inland district is hilly; Cairnharrah, which is partly in this parish, rising to the height of 1,100 feet. From its summit there is a commanding view of the adjacent country, the shire of Wigton, the Isle of Man, the hills of Cumberland, and even of the high land of the coast of Ireland. The living, val. £248, is in the presb. of Kirkcudbright, and in the patron. of Sir D. Maxwell, Bart. The old church, now disused but carefully preserved, is very small, and was built in 1626. A new church was erected in 1827. Samuel Rutherford, the well known divine, was minister of this parish from 1627 to 1639. His name is held in high honour by the people, and a monument, in the form of an Egyptian obelisk, 56 feet in height, and composed of granite, has been raised to his memory, on Boreland Hill. There are remains of two feudal structures in Anwoth—the castle of Cardoness on a rock overlooking the bay, and the tower of Rusco. Cardoness, a modern mansion, is the seat of the Maxwells. There is a lead mine on the estate of Rosco.

APESTHORPE, Nottinghamshire. See APPLESTHORPE.

APETHORPE, a par. in the hund. of Willybrook, in the co. of Northampton, 5 miles to the N. of Oundle. Wandesford is the post town. It is situated on a branch of the river Nen, and contains Moorhay Lodge, an ext. par. place in Rockingham forest. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £80, in the patron. of the prebendary of Nassington. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard, and contains a richly decorated monument to Sir Anthony Mildmay, Bart., and his lady; it has also stalls and stained windows. There are several charities, which amount altogether to £66. Apethorpe Hall, built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, is the seat of the Earl of Westmoreland. James I. visited there on his way to London to take possession of the English crown; and there he first met his favourite, Villiers, afterwards Duke of Buckingham.

APETON, a hmlt. in the par. of Gnosall, western div. of the hund. of Cuttleston, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles from Stafford.

APLEY, a par. in the western div. of the wap. of Wraggoe, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 3 miles to the S.W. of Wragby. The river Langworth runs near it. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £20, in the patron. of T. T. Drake, Esq. The church, which was dedicated to St. Andrew, is in ruins. The Tyrwhitts had a fine seat here, and part of the mansion is now a farm-house.

APLEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Wellington, in the hund. of Bradford, in the co. of Salop, 1¼ mile N.N.E. of the town of Wellington.

APLEY PARK, a hmlt. in the par. of Stockton, in the hund. of Brimstree, in the co. of Salop, 5 miles S. of Shiffnal, its post and railway town. It is situated on the banks of the Severn, and is bounded on the E. by a beautiful terrace 2 miles long, commanding extensive views towards the Wrekin and the Clee hills. There is an elegant mansion of Grinshill freestone.

APPERLEY, a hmlt. united with Whitefield, in the par. of Deerhurst, hund. of Westminster, in the co. of Gloucester, 3 miles from Tewkesbury. It is situated on the river Severn, and contains Apperley Court, the residence of Miss Strickland. The cur. is united with that of Deerhurst. There is a chapel for Wesleyan Methodists.

APPERLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of St. Peter's Bywell, eastern div. of Tynedale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 9 miles to the E. of Hexham.

APPERLEY BRIDGE, a vil. in the tnshp. of Eccleshill, and par. of Bradford, wap. of Morley, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 8 miles to the W. of Leeds. It is situated in a most beautiful part of Airedale, and the Liverpool canal passes through it. It is a station on the Midland railway. Here is a school for the sons of Wesleyan ministers, which was founded in 1812, and is similar to that at Kingswood, in Gloucestershire.

APPERSETT, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Hawes, and par. of Aysgarth, western div. of the wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the S.W. of Hawes. It is situated near the source of the river Ure, at the foot of Cam Fell, which rises to the height of above 1,900 feet.

APPERTON, Middlesex. See ALPERTON.

APPIN, a par., part of the united par. of Lismore and Appin, in the Lorn district of the co. of Argyle, Scotland, 12 miles to the N.E. of Oban. Appin is one of the most charming spots in the Highlands, with its deeply indented coast, besprinkled with islands, and its mountain and lake scenery. Excellent facilities are afforded by the Glasgow and Inverness steamers for visiting this part of the country. The parish church is situated in the Strath of Appin, and has 400 sittings. There is also a govern-meat church at Dunor, for the districts of Dunor and Glencoe. There are chapels belonging to the Free Church, the Episcopalians, and Independents. The hunting-lodge of James IV., situated on a rock in the Sound between Appin and Lismore, is an object of interest. See Lismore.

APPIN, a mountainous district on the coast of Argyleshire, Scotland, bounded on the N. by Loch Leven, on the S. by Loch Creran, and on the W. by Loch Linnhe. It extends from the Airds in the S.W. to the vale of Glencoe in the N.E., and its coast-line is 64 miles in length. The average breadth of the region is about 12 miles. It includes four vills., Port Appin, Tayvilich, Portnacoish and Lurach. It was formerly the demesne of the Stuarts, and is celebrated by the Ettrick Shepherd in the ballad entitled "The Stuarts O'Appin. It abounds in striking and grand scenery—hill, valley, and glen. The slate quarries of Ballachulish are celebrated. Granite and limestone are also obtained, and lead ore occurs on the property of Mamfield. Appin House, a fine seat, is situated on the shore of Loch Linnhe.

APPIN, a charming valley in the par. of Dull, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, which see.

APPLEBY, a par. in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, in the co. of Leicester, partly also in the hund. of Repton, in the co. of Derby, 6 miles to the S.W. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Atherstone is the post town. It lies near the point at which the four counties of Derby, Leicester, Stafford, and Warwick meet, and not far from the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £750, in the patron. of G. Moore, Esq. The church, which is old, stands in Leicestershire, and is dedicated to St. Michael. It contains a monument to one of the Applebys. There is a free grammar school, established and endowed in 1669, by Sir John Moore, an alderman of London. It has an income of £326. The school-house was erected after a design by Sir Christopher Wren. Appleby Hall is the principal residence. The Atherstone hounds meet here.

APPLEBY, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the N.W. of Brigg. It lies near the river Ancholme, and contains the hmlt. of Ravensthorpe. The old British way, Ermine Street, passes through it. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £150, in the patron. of C. Winn, Esq., who resides at Appleby House. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

APPLEBY, a municipal borough, and market town in East ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, of which it is the county town, 30 miles to the S.E. of Carlisle, and 270 from London, or 305 miles by the Lancaster and Carlisle and the London and North Western railways. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Eden, which almost surrounds it. The town lies in two pars., St. Lawrence and St. Michael, but almost wholly in the former. That part which lies in the latter is called Bongate. The two pars. contain, besides the borough of Appleby, the following tnshps.—Burrels, or Burrells, Colby, Drybeck, Hoff, Scattergate, in St. Lawrence; and Bongate and Langton, Crackenthorpe, Hilton, and Murton, in St. Michael. A Roman road, a branch of Watling Street, passed near Appleby, and the town is thought by some to have been the Roman station Gabrosentum, or, as Camden supposes, Aballaba. It was a place of sufficient importance in the reign of Edward the Confessor to give name to the shire. William the Conqueror gave the barony to Ranulph de Meschines, and after being in the possession of several other families, it was taken by the crown, after the murder of Thomas à Becket, in which one of its then possessors, the Morvilles, was implicated. It was conferred by King John on Robert de Veteripont, or Vipont, a Norman baron, whose descendant joining the league of the barons against Henry III., it was forfeited to the crown. The king having restored it to the family, it passed to the Cliffords, whose representatives still hold it. In the year 1175 the castle was taken and the town burnt, by William, King of Scotland. A similar calamity befell the town in 1388, from the effects of which it never recovered. It was visited by the plague in 1598, and the greater number of the inhabitants fell victims to it. The castle was garrisoned for Charles I. by the Countess of Pembroke. After the battle of Marston Moor it fell, with other fortresses, into the hands of the parliament. A charter of restrictions was laid on the town by Cromwell, the annulling of which, at the Restoration, was an occasion of great rejoicing.—The town, which is a neat and compact place, has one broad street, irregularly built on the side of a hill, and several smaller streets crossing it at right angles. At the top of Main-street stands the castle, on a fine wooded hill, and at the lower end of the same street is the church of St. Lawrence. The two parishes lie on opposite sides of the river Eden, and are connected by an ancient stone bridge of two arches. There is a handsome market-house near the church, on the site of the cloisters; it was rebuilt, in the early English style, in 1811, after a design by Mr. Smirke. The town-hall, an ancient building, stands in the principal street. The shire-hall and the county gaol, in Boongate, are commodious buildings, and the magistrates hold their sittings here once a fortnight. The mechanics' institute, established a few years past, is well supported. There is also a news-room at the King's Head hotel, where assemblies are occasionally held. A stone cross or obelisk stands at each end of the principal street. There was formerly a chapel at the west end of the bridge. A militia store-room was built in 1857. Appleby is a borough by prescription. Its first charter was granted by Henry I., and after several renewals, was confirmed by Edward I. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, sixteen burgesses, and other officers. The corporation seal bears on the reverse the figure of St. Lawrence on the gridiron over the fire, with other figures, and the whole surrounded with an inscription, "Hic jacet Laurentius," &c. From the reign of Edward I. the borough returned two members to parliament, until the passing of the Reform Act, in 1832, when it was disfranchised. The county assizes are held here. The quarter sessions are held at Appleby and Kendal in turn. The town is the seat of a County Court district. The woollen manufacture, linen-weaving, brewing, and malting, are carried on here, but not on a large scale.—The livings are vics.* in the dioc. of Carlisle; that of St. Lawrence, val. £366, being in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle; that of St. Michael, val. £175, in the patron. of the bishop. The church of St. Lawrence, which is an old building, partly restored in 1655, contains handsome marble monuments to the famous Anne Clifford, Countess of Pembroke, and her mother, the Countess of Cumberland. There is another church dedicated to St. John, at Murton, opened for divine service in June, 1856, the living of which is a perpet. cur. in the gift of the vicar of St. Michael. The parish church of St. Michael is situated in Bongate parish, about half a mile S.E. of the town; it is an old stone building, in the early English style, with a small tower and ancient porch. The registers of both churches are old. There are chapels belonging to the Wesleyan and Association Methodists. Queen Elizabeth's free grammar school, which dates from the year 1453, but was settled in its present form in 1574, is under the control of ten governors, and has an income from endowment of £216. It has six exhibitions at Queen's College, Oxford. Several distinguished men have been educated at this school, among whom are Bishops Bedell, Barlow, and others, and Dr. Langhorne, the translator of Plutarch's Lives. Bainbrigg, a friend of William Camden, the antiquary, was once master. There is a hospital for thirteen widows, founded and endowed by the Countess of Pembroke, in 1653. The building, which is quadrangular, and includes a small chapel, is situated near the upper end of the principal street. Its present endowment amounts to £512 per annum. The repair of the church, school-house, bridge, &c., are provided for by an endowment of the Countess, now amounting to £122 a year. Bongate national school is a neat Elizabethan building, erected in 1844 by subscription. Of the present castle, the greater part dates from the year 1686, when it was rebuilt by the Earl of Thanet; but the keep is of much earlier origin. It is a fine tower, 80 feet high, with perpendicular buttresses, and has square turrets at the angles. It is surrounded by a wall and a deep moat. For some reason, now forgotten, this part of the castle is called Cæsar's tower. There are many interesting old pictures in the castle, and also some armour of steel and gold, which belonged to George Clifford, Earl of Cumberland. The gardens and grounds are extensive, and the views from them are very fine. It is at present the property of Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., who resides here for a short time every summer. A Carmelite monastery, founded in 1281, and two hospitals for lepers, formerly stood in Bongate. On the site of the former now stands a modern residence called the Friary. The market is held on Saturday. There are fairs on St. Lawrence's day, Whit-Monday, the second Wednesday in June, and the 21st August. The two pars. of St. Michael and St. John cover an area of 19,900 acres, of which 14,450 acres are in the latter parish.

APPLECROSS, a par. in the co. of Ross, Scotland, 11 miles to the N.W. of Jean-town. It is situated on the western coast of the county, between Loch Torriden in the N. and Loch Carron in the S. It formed part of the parish of Lochcarron before 1726, when it was erected into a separate parish by the name of Applecross; its native name still is Comrich, or Comaraich. It includes the quoad sacra parish of Shieldag and the island of Croulin. The district is wholly mountainous and uncultivated, red sandstone being the prevailing rock. There are some lime quarries, and copper has been found in small quantities. There was formerly a religious establishment on the island of Croulin, which had privilege of sanctuary. The people speak the Gaelic language. They are employed chiefly in the salmon and herring fishing. The living is in the presb. of Lochcarron, val. £158, in the patron. of the crown. The parish church was built in 1817, and has 800 sittings. There is also a government church at Shieldag, built in 1827, and a preaching station at Kishorn, besides a Free church at Applecross, and a Free Church preaching station at Shieldag, which is 12 miles distant from the parish church. Applecross House is the seat of the chief heritor.

APPLEDORE, a tythg. in the par. of Burlescombe, hunds. of Bampton and Halberton, in the co. of Devon, 7 miles to the E. of Tiverton. It is situated near the river Culm, on the borders of Somersetshire, and the Great Western railway and the Western canal pass within a short distance of it.

APPLEDORE, or APPLEDORE EAST AND WEST, a market town and seaport in the par. of Northam, hund. of Shebbear, in the co. of Devon, 3 miles to the N. of Bideford, and half a mile from the Instow railway station. Barnstaple is the post town. It is situated at the mouth of the rivers Taw and Torridge on the coast of Barnstaple bay, and is the first harbour within the bar of Barnstaple. The port is subordinate to the port of Bideford, and a surveyor of customs resides at the watch-house. A broad and spacious quay has recently been erected, and W. Yeo, Esq., is at present building a dry dock which will much improve the shipping interest of the town. The market house was erected in 1848. The trade principally consists in shipbuilding; and in the transport of timber and limestone from Wales. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £160, in the patron. of the vicar. The church, a neat stone building, is dedicated to St. Mary. There are chapels belonging to the Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans, also a national school. It was here that Hubba, the Danish chief, encountered and was defeated by Earl Odun and his followers in 878. The memory of Odun and his achievement is preserved in the name of a seat in the neighbourhood, Odun Hall, at the foot of Hubblestone Hill, where Hubba was buried.

APPLEDORE, a par. in the hund. of Blackbourne, lathe of Scray, in the co. of Kent, 5 miles to the S.E. of Tenterden. Staplehurst is the post town. It is situated in Romney Marsh on the river Rother. The Grand Military canal from Shorncliffe to Hythe passes through it. The town is built on the site of a fort erected by Alfred the Great, which was attacked in 893 by the Danes, who sailed up to the town, and is supposed to have been destroyed by the French in 1380. The surrounding country is chiefly marsh and pasture land. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val., with the cur. of Ebony, £200, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church, which is in the perpendicular style, is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. It formerly belonged to the priory of Christ Church. Fairs are held on the 11th January and the 22nd June.

APPLEDRAM, a par. in the hund. of Box and Stockbridge, rape of Chichester, in the co. of Sussex, 2 miles to the S.W. of Chichester. It is situated on the eastern shore of the harbour of Chichester, the South Coast railway passing a little to the north, and the Arundel and Portsmouth canal a little to the south of it. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £64, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church, with which a chantry was formerly connected, is in the early English style and is dedicated to St. Mary. Not far from the church is Appledram House, the ancient manor-house, in the Tudor style of architecture.

APPLEFORD, a chplry. in the par. of Sutton Courtney, hund. of Ock, in the co. of Berks, 3 miles to the S.E. of Abingdon. It is situated on the western bank of the river Thames, and the Oxford and Birmingham branch of the Great Western railway passes through it. It has a free school endowed by Edmund Bradstock, the benefits of which are shared with the parish of Sutton.

APPLEGARTH, a par. in Annandale, in the co. of Dumfries, Scotland, 10 miles to the N.E. of Dumfries. The Caledonian railway traverses the parish, and has a station at Nethercleuch. The Edinburgh and Carlisle turnpike road also passes through it. The parish occupies a tract of country between the rivers Annan and Dryfe, which unite a little below the village. The old par. of Sibbaldbe and the chplry. of Dinwoodie are included in Applegarth. The soil is fertile and under good cultivation, and the ground rises, at Dinwoodie Hill, to the height of 736 feet. The living, val. £250, is in the presb. of Lochmaben, and in the patron. of Sir W. Jardine, Bart., and Johnstone of Annandale. Jardine Hall and Hook House are the principal seats.

APPLEGARTH FOREST, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Bowes, wap. of Gilling, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 11 miles to the N. of Muker.

APPLESHAW, a par. in the hund. of Upper Andover, Andover div. of the co. of Southampton, 5 miles to the N.W. of Andover. It is situated on the borders of Wiltshire, not far from the Downs, a chalk ridge running through the county, and contains the hmlts. of Appleshaw Bottom, Danse, and Tilley Down. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the vic. of Amport, in the dioc. of Winchester. There is a free school for six children, endowed in 1761 by Mrs. Frances Offley. Fairs are held for the sale of sheep on the 7th and 8th October, and on the Friday and Saturday before the great fair at Weyhill in November. The sales on the days before Weyhill fair are generally on a very large scale. There is also a pleasure and pig fair on the 23rd May. Appleshaw House is the principal residence.

APPLESHAW BOTTOM, a hmlt. partly in the par. of Appleshaw, partly in that of Weyhill, hund. of Upper Andover, Andover div. of the co. of Southampton, 2 miles to the N.W. of Andover.

APPLESTHORPE, APESTHORPE, ALBLESTHORPE, or HABLESTHORPE, a par. in the wap. of Bassetlaw, in the co. of Nottingham, 5 miles to the E. of Retford. It includes the hmlt. of Coates. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £81, in the patron. of the bishop. The church has long been in ruins. The parochial charities amount to £62.

APPLETHWAITE, a tnshp. in the par. of Windermere, ward of Kendal, in the co. of Westmoreland, 4 miles to the S.E. of Ambleside. It is situated in the beautiful valley of the Troutbeck river. Calgarth Park, a fine villa on Windermere lake, was the seat of Bishop Watson, by whom it was erected about 1789, and who died there in 1816. There are several other pleasant villas. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £120, in the patron. of the bishop. Applethwaite shares the benefit of a free school at Bowness.

APPLETON, a par. in the hund. of Ock, in the co. of Berks, 5 miles to the N.W. of Abingdon, and 7 miles S.W. of Oxford. It lies on the borders of Oxfordshire, from which it is separated by the river Thames which bounds it on the W. The par. contains the tnshp. of Eaton. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £307, in the patron. of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church, which contains monuments of the Fettyplaces, who once held the manor, and a brass of the year 1518, is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a free school endowed by Sir R. Fettyplace in the reign of James I., the income of which is now £16. The charities of the parish, including the free school, amount to about £50 per annum. The manor-house of Appleton, near the church, is a remarkable mansion of very great antiquity; parts of it are thought to belong to the reign of Henry II. It was formerly surrounded by a moat, part of which has lately been filled up. Appleton is the birthplace of the physician and chemist Dr. Edmund Dickinson (1624), who was author of a book on the origin of the heathen mythologies.

APPLETON, a tnshp. united with Hull, in the par. of Great Budworth, hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 3 miles to the S.E. of Warrington. The Bridgwater canal passes a little to the north of the township. Appleton Lodge is the principal residence.

APPLETON, a vil. in the tnshp. of Widness, in the par. of Prescot, hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 5 miles to the S.E. of Prescot. The river Mersey flows to the south of the village, which is a station on the St. Helen's branch of the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

APPLETON, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge Lynn, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the N.E. of Castle Rising; it is now united with Flitcham. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £8, in the patron. of Edmond Kent, Esq. The church is in ruins.

APPLETON, EAST AND WEST, a tnshp. in the par. of Catterick, wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the S.E. of Richmond. Appleton House is the principal residence.

APPLETON-LE-MOORS, a tnshp. in the par. of Lastingham, wap. of Ryedale, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N.W. of Pickering. It is situated on the river Severn. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists.

APPLETON-LE-STREET, a par. in the wap. of Ryedale, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the W. of New Malton. It is situated near the river Rye, and comprises the chplry. of Swinton, and the tnshps. of Amotherby, Broughton, and Hildenley. The name of the parish is derived from the fact of the Roman way (or street) to Aldborough running through it. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £515, in the patron. of the Rev. J. J. Peach. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The parochial charities amount to £25.

APPLETON ROEBUCK, a tnshp. in the par. of Bolton-Percy, ainsty of the city and East Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the E. of Tadcaster. The North Midland railway passes near it. In the reign of Stephen a nunnery was founded at Appleton by Adeliza de St. Quintin, dedicated to God, the Virgin, and St. John the Evangelist. At the Dissolution it was granted to Sir William Fairfax and Humphrey Shelley. The present house, called Nun Appleton Hall, was erected by Thomas Lord Fairfax, and subsequently became the seat of Sir William Milner, Bart. The park is well wooded, and in the midst of pleasant scenery. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

APPLETON-UPON-WISKE, a par. in the western div. of the hb. of Langbaurgh, North Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the N.E. of Northallerton. The river Wiske flows through it. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in the linen manufacture. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the rect. of Great Smeaton, in the dioc. of York.

APPLETREE HUNDRED, in the co. of Derby, is bounded on the N. by Wirksworth hundred, on the E. by Morleston and Litchurch hundred, on the S. by Repton and Gresley hundreds, and on the W. by Staffordshire. Part of this hundred lies detached, and is surrounded by Morleston and Litchurch hundreds. Appletree hundred contains the pars. of Barton Blount, Boylstone, Bradley, Brailsford, Breadsall, Church Broughton, Chaddesden, Cubley, Dalbury, Doveridge, Duffield, Edlaston, Etwall, Kedleston, Longford, Marston-on-Dove, Marston Montgomery, Mugginton, Norbury, Osmaston, Radbourne, Scropton, Shirley, Snelston, Somersall-Herbert, Spondon, Sudbury, Sutton-on-the-hill, Trusley, with part of Ashborne, Barrow-on-Trent, Bradborne, Kirk-Hallam, and Wirksworth.

APPLETREE, a hmlt. in the par. of Aston-le-Walls, hund. of Chipping Warden, in the co. of Northampton, 7 miles to the N.E. of Banbury.

APPLETREE HALL, a vil. in the par. of Wilton, in the co. of Roxburgh, Scotland, not far from Hawick.

APPLETREE-WICK, a tnshp. in the par. of Burnsall, eastern div. of the wap. of Staincliffe and Ewcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the N.E. of Skipton. It is situated on the rocky banks of the "crystal Wharfe," not far from Barden Fell, and contains the hmlts. of Skirecholme and Greenhowhill. This village was the birthplace of Sir William Craven, who became lord mayor of London in 1612. He established and endowed a grammar school here. The privilege of holding an annual fair at Appletree-Wick was granted by Edward II. to the canons of Bolton. The fair, for the sale of horses and cattle, takes place on the 26th October.

APPULDERCOMBE, Isle of Wight. See Gossmere.

APSHALL, or APESHALL, a hmlt. in the hund. of the Isle of Ely, in the co. of Cambridge, 3 miles N. of Littleport railway station, and 5 from Ely, situated in a fenny part of the isle. The old parish church of Littleport is a fine specimen of early English architecture

APSLEY, a hmlt. joined with the hmlt. of Fordhall, in the chplry. of Ullenhall, par. of Wootton-Wawen, in the hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 5 miles to the N.W. of Henley-in-Arden.

ARASAIG, a vil. in the par. of Ardnamurchan, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, 27 miles to the N.W. of Fort William. It is situated on a promontory between Loch Morar on the N., and Loch-na-nua on the S. The district surrounding the village, which has a neat Roman Catholic chapel, bears the same name, and abounds in fine scenery. Lord Cranstoun has his seat here. The steamers from Glasgow and the Isle of Skye call regularly in the vicinity.

ARBEADIE, a vil. in the par. of Banchory-Ternan, in the co. of Kincardine, Scotland. It stands on the river Dee, 18 miles W.S.W. of Aberdeen, with which it is connected by the Deeside railway. It is an entirely modern village, having been built since 1805.

ARBELA, a vil. in the bar. of Trughanacmy, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles from Tralee.

ARBIRLOT, or ABER-ELLIOTT, a par. in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 2 miles to the W. of Arbroath. It is situated on the coast of the German Ocean, at the mouth of the small river Elliott, whence its name is derived. There is a chalybeate spring at Wormy hills, which was formerly more esteemed than it is now. Kelly Castle, a very ancient structure, is on a rock rising from the river bed, and belongs to the Panmures. The living, val. £184, is in the presb. of Arbroath, and in the patron. of the crown. The parish church was built in 1832. There is also a Free church, and a parochial library.

ARBOE, a par. chiefly in the bar. of Dungannon, in the co. of Tyrone, partly also in the bar. of Loughinsholin, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 5 miles to the E. of Stewartstown. It is situated on the western shore of Lough Neagh. The soil is fertile and well cultivated, with a small tract of bog. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Cashel, val. £676, in the patron. of the Provost and Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin. The church was erected in the reign of William III. This parish was the site of a monastery, founded at a very remote period by St. Colman, and destroyed about the middle of the 12th century. The ruins of the abbey, and the walls of an old church, still stand near the Lough. There is a curious old stone cross near the ruins.

ARBORFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Sonning, in the co. of Berks, 3 miles to the S.W. of Oakingham. It is situated on the river Loddon. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £345, in the patron. of Lord Braybrooke. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and is a plain edifice, with a wooden belfry. Arborfield Hall is an old mansion, the seat of the Standens, of which family Edward Standen, the last heir male, is the lover in Gay's ballad of "Molly Mogg."

ARBROATH, or ABERBROTHWICK, a par. and market town, royal and parliamentary burgh and seaport, in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 13 miles to the S.E. of Forfar, and 64 miles from Edinburgh by rail. It is a station on the Scottish North Eastern, and the Dundee and Arbroath railways, which here meet. It is situated on the coast of the German Ocean, at the mouth of the small river Brothock, and is shut in on the northwest and east by an amphitheatre of hills. It contains the quoad sacra pars. of Abbey Inverbrothock and Lady Loan. Arbroath is a place of considerable antiquity. It was the seat of an abbey, which was founded about the year 1178 by William the Lion. The abbey was occupied by monks from Kelso Abbey, and was dedicated to the saint, Thomas à Becket. A charter is still extant of King John of England granting the monks and citizens equal rights of commerce with his own subjects in every part of England, except London and Oxford. Various privileges were conferred by the popes on the abbots of Arbroath, Pope Benedict raising the establishment to the rank of a mitred abbey. The town owes its origin to the abbey, and is believed to have been made a royal burgh by the founder of the abbey. As early as the close of the 14th century, the abbots engaged to uphold the pier. By one of them, the now famous Inch Cape Rock, which lies about 12 miles to the S.E. of the town, was deprived of its terror by a bell attached to it, which was rung by the motion of the waters as they flowed over the hidden reef. Southey has made old and young familiar with this bell, by his fine ballad story of Sir Ralph the Rover. It was in this monastery that the Scottish nobles met in 1320, and drew up their remonstrance against the claims of Edward II. to the sovereignty. The building was almost destroyed by the excited mob at the commencement of the Reformation. Cardinal Beaton was its last abbot. It was afterwards granted to the Hamiltons, with the patron. of thirty-four livings, and was purchased subsequently by Patrick Maule, of Panmure.—The town, which is irregularly built, comprises 1,914 houses, inhabited in 1861 by 4,443 separate families, constituting a population of 17,591, of whom 2,770 are children under fifteen years of age, entered on the school books. It has one street running northward from the sea, and another crossing it, with smaller streets crossing each of these. But there are also, on the east side of the town, within the abbey lands, two modern streets, regular and elegant in construction. The town-house, which is of stone, and has a Grecian front, is in High-street. Near the town-house are the new market buildings, a handsome structure of iron and glass. The town has greatly extended in recent times, and is an important key-post of railway traffic. In 1853 the revenue of the custom-house was £13,000. The linen manufacture is carried on in the town; there are twenty-one spinning-mills, and eleven power-loom factories, which give employment to above 3,000 hands. The rise of this manufacture, and the trade consequent on it, dates from about the middle of the last century. There are bleach works, plash and boating mills, ship-building yards, three foundries, a leather manufactory, one of the largest in the kingdom, and two tanneries. The original harbour is small, and protected by a breakwater, but a new one has been recently formed, capable of admitting vessels of larger size. On the pier is a lighthouse twenty-four feet high, which was erected in 1826. Its fixed red light is visible at the distance of eight miles. There were in 1853, 127 vessels, of 16,148 tons belonging to the port, most of which are employed in the coasting trade. The principal exports are linen and cotton manufactures of the town, ores from the mines of Forfarshire, paving-stone, barley, potatoes, fish, &c. The imports are flax, vitriol, hemp, hides, timber, groceries, bones, codilla, potash, manganese, salt, coals, bark. The paving stones exported from Arbroath are celebrated. They are obtained in thin slabs, and cut into oblong pieces of convenient size. About 400,000 square feet are yearly exported.—Arbroath is a contributory burgh to Montrose, in sending one representative to parliament. Under the Reform Act, the burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, and fifteen councillors. It has a revenue of £1,927. There are seven incorporated trades, who have an elegant hall belonging to them. A joint-stock bank was founded here in 1825, and the Bank of Scotland, the Royal, Commercial, and the British Linen Company's Banks, have branches in the town. The public subscription library contains 7000 volumes, and the Mechanics' Institute has a library of 1500 volumes. The High School is conducted by a rector and four professors. Near the pier is a signal tower, erected for the purpose of communication with the Bell Rock.—The town is the seat of a presbytery, in the synod of Angus and Mearns. The living, val. £220, is in the patron. of the crown, with a stipend of £100 for an assistant minister. The church, which stands near the ruins of the abbey, has a fine Gothic steeple, erected about 1832, after a design by Henderson, of Edinburgh; it is 150 feet in height. There are two other churches, the abbey, and Lady Loan churches. The value of the former is £100, and the minister is appointed by the pew-owners; the patronage of the latter is with the heads of families. There are three chapels belonging to the United Presbyterians, four to the Free Church, and one each to the Episcopalians, Independents, Methodists, Roman Catholics, Baptists, and Glassites. The ruins of the fine old abbey are still beautiful and impressive. The chapel, which occupies the south side of the pile, was in the form of a cross, and measured 270 feet in length. Parts of the walls, towers, cloisters, and windows remain, to hint the sublimity of the whole. Much of the carving is still undefaced. The great eastern window is perfect, and at the vertex of the gable over it is a circular opening visible for some distance at sea, and called by seamen the "round O of Arbroath." The market is held on Saturday, and fairs on the 31st January, the third Wednesday in June, and the 18th July.

ARBURY, a tnshp. in the par. of Winwick, hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 3 miles to the N. of Warrington. It is a joint tnshp. with Houghton and Middleton. The Liverpool and Manchester railway passes near it.

ARBUTHNOTT, a par. in the co. of Kincardine, Scotland, 3 miles to the N.W. of Bervie. The country is hilly, and the river Bervie flows in a pleasant valley through the parish. Freestone and trap occur, and small quantities of manganese are found. The living, val. £225, is in the presb. of Fordoun, and in the patron. of Viscount Arbuthnott. The church, which is situated in the valley, is ancient, and contains several monuments of the Arbuthnotts. There is a fine aisle attached to the church, which was built by Sir Robert Arbuthnott in 1505. The physician and wit, Dr. Arbuthnott, the friend of Pope and Swift, was a native of this village, and his monument is in the church. Allardyce Castle is the old seat of the family of Allardyce, but is now in ruins. The noble mansion of Arbuthnott stands on the other side of the church. Kair was anciently the seat of the Sibbalds; but Kair House, a pleasant modern mansion, is now the property of the Kinlochs. Arbuthnott gives the title of viscount to the family of the same name.

ARCHAIG, or ARKEG LOCH, a beautiful sheet of water in the par. of Kilmallie, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland. It is about 17 miles in length, and 1½ in breadth, picturesquely situated amongst the hills in the glen of Archaig, and about 2 miles distant from the lake of Loch-Lochy. Here it was that Prince Charles sought shelter in the house of Donald Cameron of Glenpean after the fatal battle of Culloden, whose descendant still occupies the farm.

ARCHDEACON-NEWTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Darlington, Darlington ward, in the co. palatine of Durham, 3 miles to the N.W. of Darlington.

ARCHIESTOWN, a vil. in the par. of Knockando, in the co. of Elgin, Scotland, 2 miles from Inveraven, and near the river Spey, which passes to the south of the parish. It stands on the moor of Ballintomb, and the nearest post-office is at Craigellachie.

ARCLEDON, a hmlt. in the par. of Plumbland, ward of Allerdale-below-Derwent, in the co. of Cumberland, 7 miles to the N.E. of Cockermouth. Coal mines are worked here.

ARCLID, a tnshp. in the par. of Sandbach, hund. of Northwich, in the co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the E. of Sandbach.

ARD. See ARD-LOCH.

ARDAGH, a par. in the bar. of Imokilly, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 6 miles to the N.W. of Youghal. It is situated on the river Turra, on the borders of the co. of Waterford. The surface is hilly, and the soil poor, with much bog and waste. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £535, in the patron. of the crown. Ruins of the castle of Kilnaturra stand on the banks of the river.

ARDAGH, a par. partly in the bar. of Shanid, partly in that of Glenquin, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.W. of Newcastle. The district is pleasant and fertile, partly planted. Coal is found in the mountains on the west, with good ironstone and fireclay. The living is a rect. forming part of the union of St. Michael, in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe. The church was destroyed in 1641, and its ruins stand near the village. The principal seats are Ardagh Lodge, and Ballynaborney. Fairs are held on the 11th May, the 14th August, and the 21st November.

ARDAGH, one of the six bars. of the co. of Longford, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland. It lies in the centre of the county, and is bounded on the N. by the baronies of Longford and Granard, on the E. by the county of West Meath, on the S. by the baronies of Moydow and Shrule, and on the W. by those of Moydow and Longford. It contains the towns of Longford and Edgworthstown, and the pars. of Mostrim and Rathreagh, with parts of Ardagh, Ballymacormick, Clonbrony, Granard, Kilglass, Street, and Temple-michael.

ARDAGH, a par. chiefly in the bar. of Ardagh, partly also in that of Moydow, in the co. of Longford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Edgworthstown. The town is of great antiquity, being mentioned before the middle of the 5th century. It was made the seat of a bishopric before 454. The diocese now forms part of that of Kilmore, Elphin, and Ardagh. This place was the site of a friary of the Franciscan order, founded at an early period by the O'Ferralls, and reformed in the 16th century. The town is situated on high ground near Ardagh Hill, which rises to the height of 403 feet. The soil is good and mostly under tillage. There is some bog. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Elphin, and Ardagh, val. £399, in the patron. of the crown. The church is a modern one with a square tower. There are remains of the ancient cathedral, and also of the church which took its place. St. Mel, a disciple of St. Patrick, and the first bishop and abbot of Ardagh, was interred here. Ardagh is a police station, and petty sessions are held weekly. Ardagh House is interesting as the scene of the humorous incident in the life of Oliver Goldsmith, on which he founded his play of "She Stoops to Conquer," originally called "Mistakes of a Night." Fairs are held on the 5th April and the 24th August.

ARDAGH, par. in the bar. of Tyrawley, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.W. of Ballina. It is situated on the north-eastern shore of Lough Conn, near the mouth of the river Deel, which falls into that lake. There is much bog in the parish. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, val. with that of Attymass and several others, £920, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is in ruins, and a chapel has been erected near Deel Castle, which is the principal residence. It stands in a beautiful park, on the banks of the river Deel. Fairs are held on the 4th August and the 1st November.

ARDAGH, a par. chiefly in the bar. of Lower Slane, partly also in that of Morgallion, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.E. of Nobber. It lies near the point of meeting of the three counties of Louth, Cavan, and Monaghan, and has within its limits part of Lough Ballyhoe, the greater part of which lake is in the county of Monaghan. Limestone is quarried in large quantities in this parish. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Meath, val. £102, in the patron. of the crown. A castle formerly existed here, of which there are still some remains.

ARDAMINE, a par. in the bar. of Ballaghkeen, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.E. of Gorey. It is situated on the coast of St. George's Channel, and comprises the village of River Chapel. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. with the perpet. cur. of Killenagh, £92. A fishery in the bay of Ardamine gives employment to some of the inhabitants. Ardamine House is the principal residence. Near it is a very perfect tumulus called the moat of Ardamine, and conjectured to be a Danish monument or tomb.

ARDARA, a vil. in the bar. of Bannagh in the co. of Donegal, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 17 miles to the N.W. of Donegal. It is situated at the head of Loughros More Bay, into which the river Oanea here falls. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, val. £32, in the patron. of the rectors of Killybegs and Inniskiel. Here is a police station, and petty sessions are held occasionally. A fair is held on the 1st November.

ARDARGIE, once a vil. in the par. of Forgandenny, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 5 miles to the S.W. of Perth. The site where the former village stood is situated near the river May, on the northern slope of the Ochil hills, and contains an ancient Roman entrenchment, in very perfect condition, about 270 feet square. In the neighbourhood is an old British castle.

ARDBOE, Tyrone. See ARMOY.

ARDBRACCAN, a par. in the bar. of Lower Navan, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the W. of Navan. It contains the village of Bohermeen. The name of this parish signifies the "hill of Braccan," and is derived from St. Braccan, who was at the head of a monastery here in the 7th century. A bishopric was subsequently established here, which became part of the diocese of Meath in the 12th century. The monastery frequently suffered from the violence of the Danes, and was several times burnt. The country is fertile and well cultivated. Excellent limestone is quarried, and marl and gravel are raised. Some of the inhabitants are employed in weaving linen and cotton cloth. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Meath, val. with the vic. of Martry and several others, £687, in the patron. of the crown. In the church are monuments to the bishops Pococke and Montgomery. In this parish is the episcopal palace of Meath, an elegant structure situated in a fine demesne. Among its noble trees are some singularly handsome horse-chestnut trees, and two cedars of Lebanon planted by Bishop Pococke.

ARDCANDRISK, or ARDCANDRIDGE, a par. in the bar. of Shelmaliere, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.W. of Wexford. It is situated on the south bank of the river Slaney, on the road from Wexford to Enniscorthy. The living is a rect. forming part of the union of St. Patrick's, Wexford, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. Ardcandrisk House, the principal residence, stands on a wooded hill with a fine view over the river.

ARDCANNY, a par. in the bar. of Kenry, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 8 miles to the W. of Limerick. It is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the river Mague with the Shannon, being bounded on the N. by the latter, and on the E. by the former, of those rivers. The soil is very fertile, resting on limestone. A large part of the land is meadow and pasture. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, val. £277, in the patron. of the bishop. There are many gentlemen's seats along the banks of the Mague; among them are Cartown, Mellon, Rockfield, Shannon Grove, which was the seat of the Earls of Charleville, Mount Pleasant, &c. There is an old fortress formed of loose stones at Rockfield.

ARDCARNE, a par. in the bar. of Boyle, in the co. of Roscommon, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles to the E. of Boyle. It is situated on the southern shore of Lough Key, and the river Shannon flows along part of its eastern boundary. An abbey existed here in the 6th century, which was given by Queen Elizabeth to Trinity College, Dublin. This parish had also a nunnery of the Benedictine order, a cell to the abbey of Kilcreunata in Galway, and a Franciscan monastery. The soil is fertile, and the district well wooded. There is abundance of good limestone and freestone. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. with the rect. of Killukin and other livings, £446, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was originally a part of the old nunnery. Rockingham House, a noble mansion in the Ionic style of architecture, situated on the shore of Lough Key, and surrounded by beautiful grounds and woods, was the seat of the Viscount Lorton. Oakport, a Gothic mansion on the Boyle river, is the seat of the Molloys. Knockvicar and Mount Francis are the other seats. Petty sessions are held weekly at Cootehall, formerly called O'Molloy's-hall. There are two dispensaries and a free school. The par. extends over an area of 19,100 acres, of which 1,160 acres are covered by the waters of the lough.

ARDCATH, a par. in the bar. of Upper Duleek, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 6 miles to the S.W. of Drogheda. The parish contains a good slate quarry, and the inhabitants are engaged in linen and cotton weaving. The living is a vic. united with the perpet. cur. of Duleek, in the dioc. of Meath. The ruins of the old church are near the present one. Fairs are held here on the 7th May, the 21st June, and the 27th October.

ARDCAVAN, a par. in the bar. of Shelmaliere, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.E. of Wexford. It is situated on a peninsula at the northern end of Wexford Haven, where the river Slaney joins it, and contains the greater part of the village of Castlebridge. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the vic. of Ardcolme, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. Ruins of the old church stand near the shore, and there are remains of an ancient castle at Ballytramont. The principal residence is Ely House, which belongs to the Marquis of Ely.

ARDCHATTAN, a par. in the Lorn district of the co. of Argyle, Scotland, 8 miles to the N.E. of Oban. It is situated on Loch Etive, which divides the southern part of the parish from Muckairn and Loch Creran, which forms its northern boundary. The magnificent hill, Ben Cruachan, one of the loftiest in Scotland, rises from the middle of the parish to the height of 3,670 feet. Here, too, are the remains of the old fortifications, supposed to be Pictish, of which many fables have been related, especially that this was the site of Beregonium, a great city, and the seat of government in the 4th century before Christ. A priory was founded in Ardchattan by Duncan M'Coull, or, as others name him, John McDougall, in 1230, of which some part of the walls still remain. In 1308 a parliament was held there by Robert Bruce. The monastery was burnt down during the civil war of the 17th century. The district is mountainous and well wooded, and comprises, with the usual characteristics of Highland scenery, about 3,000 acres of forest, chiefly consisting of oak, ash, birch, hazel, and alder, with a few pine and fir plantations. At every cutting these woods are supposed to yield from £15,000 to £16,000 of timber. Roes and fallow deer run wild in the woods. Several small streams flow through it, of which the principal are the Awe, the Etive, and the Kinloss. The living, val. £283, is in the presb. of Lorn, and in the patron. of Campbell of Lochnell. There are two churches in Ardchattan proper, both situated close upon the northern shore of Loch Etive, being 10 miles from the western, and 31 miles from the north-eastern boundary of the parish. There are chapels of ease at Muckairn and Inverguesechan in Glenetive; besides a Free church in Ardchattan proper, and another in Muckairn. There are two assembly's schools, a society's school, and three or four private schools. At the mouth of Loch Etive, and on its southern coast stand the ruins of Dunstaffnage Castle. It is a square structure with round towers at three of its angles, and the rock it stands on has been cut to a similar form. The situation of the castle, on the end of a promontory, is very striking. The founder of this fortress is unknown, but it is supposed probable that at a very early period here was a royal residence and place of sepulture. The present structure is thought to be not of earlier date than the 14th century. At that period it became the possession of the McDougalls. In 1305 it was taken and garrisoned by Bruce. It was here that the Earl of Argyle effected his landing in 1685. The most interesting circumstance connected with the castle is, that in it was deposited the famous coronation stone which is now attached to the chair in which the British sovereigns are crowned. This stone was brought to Westminster by Edward I., who seized it at Scone, where the Scottish monarchs were crowned. Kenneth II. had transferred it to Scone in 834 from Dunstaffnage; when and whence it came to Dunstaffnage, we have only fables to tell us. If we can believe these, it was the stone on which the patriarch Jacob slept on the plains of Luz, and which arrived at Dunstaffnage after various and wonderful travels. The burial-place of the early kings was the small and elegant chapel near the castle. The principal residence in the parish is Ardchattan House. The par. extends above 40 miles in extreme length, and about 10 miles in mean breadth.

ARDCLACH, a par. in the co. of Nairn, Scotland, 8 miles to the S.E. of Nairn. It is situated on the western bank of the river Findhorn, in a mountainous and heathy district. The living, val. £248, is in the presb. of Nairn, and in the patron. of Brodie of Lethen, chief heritor, and is 11 miles long, and between 7 and 8 miles broad. There are about 2,000 acres of arable land, and 4,000 acres of moss and moor, with a considerable quantity of woodland, which abounds in game of all kinds, including the deer. About a mile below Dulsie there is an ancient sculptured tablet, 8 feet high, having a rude cross and many Runic characters discernible on its surface.

ARDCLARE, Roscommon. See CLOONYGORMICAN.

ARDCLINIS, a par. in the bar. of Lower Glenarm, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.W. of Glenarm. It occupies an elevated tract on the coast, not far from Red Bay, and contains the vils. of Carnlough and Glenariff. There is abundance of limestone and basalt in the district. A fishery is carried on in the bay. The living is a rect. united with that of Agherton, in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore. There are remains of a Danish camp, on a headland, called Dunmaul, near Garron Point. The principal residences are Drumnasole, Knappan, and Bay Lodge.

ARDCOLME, a par. in the bar. of Shelmaliere, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Wexford. It is situated at the north end of Wexford haven, and includes part of the village of Castle Bridge, and the island of Erin Beg, in the harbour. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. with the perpet. cur. of Ardcavan and several other benefices, £514, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is at Castlebridge, and occupies the site of an old castle. It was built in 1764, and has monuments of Lieut.-Col. James Watson and Edward Turner, Esq., who fell in the rebellion of 1798. There are ruins of a very ancient church on Erin Beg Island.

ARDCRONY, a par. in the bar. of Lower Ormond, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Borrisokane. Lough Derg is about 8 miles to the W. of this parish. The soil is generally light. Limestone is obtained in abundance, and there are some small tracts of bog. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Killaloe, Kilfenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh, val. £68, in the patron. of the bishop. There are ruins of the old church on a hill near the road, and of a castle at Ballyluskey, and remains of a fort at Beechwood. The principal seats are Beechwood, formerly the residence of the Earl of Norbury, Mount Falcon, Conger House, &c.

ARDDA, a tnshp. in the tnshp. of Dol-y-Garrog, and par. of Llanbedr-y-Cennin, in the hund. of Isaf, co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, 4 miles to the N.W. of Llanrwst.

ARDDYNWENT, a tnshp. in the par. of Mold, and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Flint, North Wales, close to Mold.

ARDEA, a par. in the bar. of Portnahinch, in Queen's County, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the N. of Maryborough. It contains the vil. of Irishtown and part of the vil. of Mountmellick.

ARDEA, a hmlt. in the par. of Tuosist, in the bar. of Glenarought, co. of Kerry, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 10 miles to the S.W. of Kenmare. Not far off is Ardea Castle.

ARDEE BARONY, one of the six bars. of the co. of Louth, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, is bounded on the N. by the county of Monaghan and the barony of Louth, on the E. by the bay of Dundalk and the barony of Ferrard, on the S. by the barony of Ferrard, and on the W. by the county of Meath. It contains the pars. of Ardee, Cappoge, Charlestown, Clonkeen, Dromin, Drumcar, Germonstown, Kildemock, Kilsaran, Mapastown, Mosstown, Philipstown, Richardstown, Shandis, Smarmore, Stabannan, Stickellin, and Tallanstown, with part of Killanny and Louth.

ARDEE, a par. and market town in the bar. of Ardee, in the co. of Louth, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 12 miles to the N.W. of Drogheda, and 43 miles to the N. of Dublin. It is a town of great antiquity, and is situated on the river Dee, from which it derives its name, anciently written Athirdee or Ath-air-dee, the "ford on the Dee." At the commencement of the 13th century, a castle was built here by Roger de Peppard, one of the English settlers. About the same time he also founded and endowed a hospital for crouched friars, of the Augustine order, which became a wealthy and important house. There was also a Carmelite friary. This friary was attacked and destroyed by Edward Bruce. The town itself was burnt, in 1538, by O'Nial. The possessions of the monastery were granted by James I., in 1612, to Sir Garret Moore. The town became the headquarters of the Irish army in 1641, but was retaken by Sir H. Tichborne. It subsequently fell into the possession of Cromwell, and was occupied by James II. after he retired from Dundalk. Ardee was a borough at an early period. It is referred to as a corporation in a charter of the year 1377, and returned two members to the Irish parliament till the Union, when it was disfranchised. It is a chief station of police; petty sessions are held fortnightly, and the quarter sessions for the county are held here in January and June. It is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and head of an excise district. The town, which chiefly consists of one long street, contains a corn-market erected early in the last century, a meat-market erected in 1796, a bridewell attached to the old castle which serves as a court-house, a savings-bank, and a dispensary; the two latter are newly-erected. The principal occupations are the corn-trade, malting, and basket making. The population, according to the census of 1861, is 2,572; of these, 2,381 are Roman Catholics, 173 belong to the Established Church, and only 18 to all other Protestant denominations. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. with the rect. of Kildemock and several other benefices, £807, in the patron. of the primate. The church of the old monastery still serves as the parish church. It is a large edifice, and was probably built about the year 1208. Except the church, little of the monastery remains. There are no traces of the friary. There is a new chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. Besides the castle, now used as a court-house, there is another belonging to the Hatch family, having been granted to an ancestor of that family by Oliver Cromwell. On a lofty mount, near the town, are some remains of a tower, supposed to be part of Roger de Peppard's castle. Ardee House is the principal residence. Ardee gives the title of Baron Brabazon of Ardee to the Earl of Meath. Tuesday is the market-day. Fairs are held on the 1st March, the 10th April, the 6th June, the 8th July, the 20th August, the 23rd October, and the 17th December.

ARDELEY, a par. in the hund. of Odsey, in the co. of Hertford, not far from Buntingford, its post town. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £224, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's.

ARDEN, a par. in the hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 3 miles from Alcester, now forming part of the parish of Temple-Grafton. See TEMPLE-GRAFTON.

ARDEN, a vil. in the par. of New Monkland, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, not far from Airdrie.

ARDEN, FOREST OF, in ancient times an extensive tract of forest, situated between the rivers Trent and Severn; but at present the designation is occasionally applied to that part of the county of Warwick which lies to the north of the river Avon. The Earl of Egmont takes from this district the title of baron. Shakspeare has made the name a household word; and it is not unlikely that this region of British woodland may be the true scene of "As You Like It."

ARDEN-WITH-ARDENSIDE, a tnshp. in the par. of Hawnby, wap. of Birdforth, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles to the N.W. of Helmsley. A Benedictine nunnery was founded here about the middle of the 12th century. There is a small endowment by John Smales and Gregory Elsley, for the education of six boys. The district is principally moorland. Arden Hall is the chief residence.

ARDEONAIG, or LOCH-TAYSIDE, a vil. and ecclesiastical district in the pars. of Killin and Kenmore, in the co. of Perth, Scotland. Its greatest length is 7 miles by 3 broad. The church was built by the Marquis of Breadalbane.

ARDERRA, a par. in the bar. of Iverk, and co. of Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the W. of Waterford. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Jerpoint.

ARDERSIER, or ARDROSSER, a par. in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, 10 miles to the N.E. of Inverness. It is situated on the coast of the Moray Frith, and contains Fort George and the village of Campbelltown. It was formerly the possession of the Bishop of Ross and the Knights Hospitallers. The living, val. £158, is in the presb. of Nairn, and in the patron. of the Earl of Cawdor, heritor. The parish church was built in 1802. There is also a Free church, and a United Presbyterian chapel at Campbelltown. The soil is well cultivated, except near the coast, and the roads are exceedingly good, great improvements having been made of late years. There is an obelisk, 6 feet high, called the Kobbock Stone, on a heath in this parish, of which there are various accounts. It may mark the grave of a chief, the scene of a victory, or nothing more poetical than the boundary of a county. Fort George stands at the extremity of the peninsula. See FORT GEORGE.

ARDESS, a hmlt. in the bar. of Lurg, in the co. of Fermanagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the E. of Kesh.

ARDESTIE, a par. in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, now united with Monifieth. See MONIFIETH.

ARDFERT, a par. and market town, chiefly in the bar. of Clanmaurice, partly in that of Trughanacmy, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 6 miles to the N. of Tralee, and 198 miles from Dublin. It is situated in a fertile district on the coast of Ballyheigue bay, a little to the north of the range of hills called the Stacks mountains. It is a very ancient place, and the seat of one of the oldest bishoprics in the island. A monastery was founded here in the 6th century, by St. Brendan, previous to which a bishopric is said to have existed. The town and the monastery were destroyed by fire in 1089. The monastery suffered a similar calamity in 1151, at the hands of Cormac O'Culen, and again in 1179. A Franciscan monastery was established in the middle of the 13th century, by Thomas, Lord of Kerry, which became famous for the miracles wrought in it, and for the tombs of its founder and other lords. In 1599 the town was taken by the royal forces. The castle which had been erected in 1312, by Nicholas Fitzmaurice, was taken by Sir C. Wilmot, in 1600. This castle, after being rebuilt in 1637, was destroyed with the cathedral in 1641. Ardfert is a borough by prescription, and returned two members to the Irish parliament till the Union, when it was disfranchised. The corporation is now merely nominal, and the place a decayed village. Petty sessions were formerly held once a fortnight, but are transferred to Abbeydorney. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, val. £101, in the patron. of the crown. The parish church is a portion of the ancient cathedral. The diocese of Ardfert has been from time immemorial incorporated with that of Aghadoe, and both are now united with the see of Limerick. The ruins of the cathedral stand on a hill north of the town. The east window is very elegant; in a niche beside it is the figure of a bishop, readily believed to be that of St. Brendan. There is another effigy in the choir. Several Norman archways still remain. A round tower stood near the cathedral, but fell about 1780. In the grounds of the Earl of Glandore are the ruins of the Franciscan abbey. It was a cruciform building, and the remains are extensive and interesting. They include the nave and choir, a tower, a chapel, and part of the cloisters. In a recess under the south wall is an altar tomb of the last Earl and Countess of Glandore. There are several ancient monuments. Ardfert Abbey is the principal seat, and has been the residence of the Crosbies from the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It is situated in a fine park, which contains the beautiful ruins of the monastery. Other seats are Tulrid, Sackville House, and Barra. Rahanane Castle, the ruins of which are near the town, was the episcopal residence. The creek or harbour of Barra is within this parish. The market is no longer held. Fairs are held on Whit-Monday, and the 9th July.

ARDFIELD, a par. in the bar. of Ibane and Barryroe, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Clonakilty. It occupies the south-eastern part of the peninsula, between the bays of Clonakilty and Ross. The soil is good, and well cultivated. Copper ore has been found. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £96, pat. the bishop. The church is a ruin, and stands on the highest ground in the parish. Near Dunny Cove is a ruined castle.

ARDFINNAN, a par. in the bar. of Iffa and Offa West, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Cahir. It is situated on the river Suir, between the Galtee mountains on the N.W. and the Knockmealdown mountains on the S. A bridge of fourteen arches crosses the Suir here. The name of the parish signifies the "Hill of Finian." A monastery was founded here by St. Finian, the leper, before the 7th century. It was burnt by the English in 1178. King John erected a castle in this place, the ruins of which now form a picturesque object on a rock near the river. The district is fertile, and has some limestone quarries. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, val. with the rect. of Rochestoun and the vic. of Neddans, £289, in the patron. of the bishop. There is a police station in the village, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. Fairs take place on the 2nd February, the 17th May, and the 19th November.

ARDGAY, a vil. in the par. of Kincardine, in the co. of Ross, Scotland. It is situated near Bonar Bridge, and has daily public conveyance to Tain.

ARDGLASS, a par. and seaport in the bar. of Lecale, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 6 miles to the S.E. of Downpatrick, the terminus of the Belfast and County Down railway, and 103 miles from Dublin. It is pleasantly situated on the coast of the Irish Channel, near a conical hill called the Ward of Ardglass, which rises to the west of the town. This hill and the Ward of Ardtole on the opposite side of the town are well-known sea-marks. It was formerly a place of importance, and had several castles. In the reign of Henry IV. a London trading company was established here; and in the reign of Henry VI. the town was governed by a mayor, and had a port-admiral. It is now one of the most frequented watering-places in the north of Ireland. It is also an important fishing-place, and centre of the fisheries on this part of the coast. The port is subordinate to that of Newry. There is an excellent harbour, with a pier, and storehouses for corn, &c. A light-house, erected on the pier, has been washed away by the sea, and the pier is in a dilapidated condition. From three to four hundred vessels may be seen in the harbour during the fishing season. It is capable of admitting vessels of 500 tons at all times. A coast-guard station is fixed here, and also a police station. The living is an impropriate rect. The several castles of which there are remains, are called Jordan's Castle, Cow'd, Margaret's, John's, and King's castles, and the Tower. Jordan's Castle is in the centre of the town, and takes its name from its heroic owner and defender, Simon Jordan, who held out for three years, during the insurrection of Tyrone, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Near the town, on the north-east, are remains of the old church of Ardtole. The walls are of great thickness. There is a cavern on the north-east side of the bay. The view from Ardglass Ward hill embraces Dundrum Bay, and the Mourne hills beyond it, the Isle of Man, and the coast of Ayrshire. An octagon tower is erected on this hill, which serves as a look-out for the coastguard. The principal seat is Ardglass Castle, the residence of A. De Vere Beauclerk, Esq. It comprises part of a range of buildings called the New Works, which are of unknown age, adjoining the harbour, and extending in length 250 feet. It is in the castellated style, and was built by Lord Lecale. King's Castle is converted into a mansion, and is the residence of G. G. Beauclerk, Esq. Good rubble-stone is quarried near the shore. Ardglass gave the title of earl to the Cromwells, and subsequently that of viscount to the Barringtons.

ARDGOUR, or ARDGAUR, a district in the extreme north of the mainland of Argyleshire, Scotland. In 1829 a church was erected here by order of the Parliamentary Commissioners. See BALLACHULISH.

ARDGROOM, a vil. in the par. of Tuosist, and bar. of Glenaroght, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 14 miles to the S.W. of Kenmare. It is situated on the southern bank of the river Kenmare, and has a small and safe harbour.

ARDINGLEY, a par. in the hund. of Buttinghill, rape of Lewes, in the co. of Sussex, 3 miles to the N.E. of Cuckfield. It lies near the Brighton railway, and comprises the hmlt. of Hapsted. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £498, in the patron. of J. F. W. Peyton, Esq. The church contains two brasses and several monuments of the Culpeppers, and monuments of the Wakehursts. Wakehurst Place, a little to the north of the village, is a noble mansion, forming three sides of a quadrangle, and is the seat of the Peytons.

ARDINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Wantage, in the co. of Berks, 2 miles to the E. of Wantage. It is situated on the Roman way called Ikneld Street, and the Wilts and Berks canal. The Great Western railway passes near the village, and has a station at Wantage-road, about 2 miles to the N.E. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, in the patron. of Christ Church College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and is in the early English style, with square tower, surmounted by a spire. It contains the tomb of R. Vernon, Esq., the collector of the famous "Vernon Gallery" of pictures, which he bequeathed to the nation, on his death, in 1849. His death took place at Ardington House, formerly the residence of the Clarkes, to whom the manor belonged, but at present the seat of Captain Leicester Vernon, M.P.

ARDINTENNY, a vil. in the par. of Kilmun, in the co. of Argyle, Scotland, 10 miles to the N.W. of Greenock. It is situated on the north-western branch of Loch Long, and has communication by steamer with Glasgow and other towns. A road leads from it among the mountains, by way of Loch Eck to Strachner. Near the village is the mansion of Ardintenny, the name of which is celebrated in the song of Tannahill—"The lass o' Ardintenny."

ARDKEEN, a par. in the bar. of Ards, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N. of Portaferry. It is situated on the narrow peninsula between Lough Strangford on the W. and the Irish Channel on the E. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £261, in the patron. of the prebendary of St. Andrew's. The church contains monuments of the Savages, to whom the manor at one time belonged. A large part of the surface is mountain and bog. This parish was the site of a fortress, belonging to the De Courcys, which was besieged by Shane O'Neil, in 1567.

ARDKILL, a par. in the bar. of Carbery, in the co. of Kildare, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 7 miles to the N.W. of Robertstown. It lies close to the western extremity of the bog of Allen. The living is a vic. forming part of the union of Castle Carbery, in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare.

ARDLEIGH, a par. in the hund. of Tendring, in the co. of Essex, 5 miles to the N.E. of Colchester. It is a station on the Eastern Union railway. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £380, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. There is an endowment by William Littlebury, in 1571, for the instruction of four boys.

ARDLER, a station on the Scotch Midland Junction railway, in the par. of Cupar-Angus, in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 2 miles from the village of Cupar-Angus, and 5 miles from Newtyle, on the south-west border of Forfarshire.

ARDLEY, a par. in the hund. of Ploughley, in the co. of Oxford, 4 miles to the N.W. of Bicester. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £307, in the patron. of the Duke of Marlborough. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and is a modern structure, except the chancel and tower, which are ancient. A castle was erected here in the reign of King Stephen, of which some remains still exist to the west of the church. The castle stood on the site of Offa's camp. The foss, which formed the boundary line of the kingdoms of Wessex and Mercia ran through this parish, and is still traceable at some points.

ARD-LOCH, a small lake in the valley of Aberfoile, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, a little to the W. of the village of Aberfoile, and 30 miles from Glasgow. It is not more than three miles long and one mile broad, but its situation and surrounding scenery make it one of the most beautiful and picturesque lakes in Scotland. Loch Katrine, Ben Lomond, and the Trossachs lie within a few miles of it on the west and north. Its waters are discharged at its eastern end in a fall of thirty feet over the rocks, and form thence the river Forth.

ARDMAYLE, a par. in the bar. of Middlethird, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.W of Cashel. It is situated on the east bank of the river Suir, which is crossed by a stone bridge. From the remains of antiquity found here, Ardmayle seems to have been an important place. The castle of Sinaise, the oldest of the several castles whose ruins exist here is a round tower, and is said to have been the scene of the slaughter of some of the troops of Strongbow, and also their burial-place. A square tower is all that remains of the castle at Castlemoyle, which was the seat of the Butlers and the Cootes; it was taken by Cromwell. Another castle stood near the bridge. The district is fertile, and good limestone is found in abundance. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, val. £108, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was rebuilt in 1815, but the tower is old. There is a police station. The principal seats are Ardmayle House, Longfield, Fort Edward, and Noddstown.

ARDMEANACH, or THE BLACK ISLE, a peninsula between the Friths of Moray and Cromarty, comprising a portion of the counties of Cromarty and Ross, and Nairn. This region was formerly a bleak, barren moorland, but has recently been reclaimed, and is now well cultivated and intersected with roads.

ARDMILLAN, a hmlt. in the bar. of Lower Castlereagh, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Comber. It is situated on the western shore of Lough Strangford.

ARDMORE, a par. in the bar. of Decies-within-Drum, in the co. of Waterford, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.W. of Dungarvan. It is situated on a bay on the coast of St. George's Channel, a little to the north of Ardmore Head. It has a fine beach, and is frequented as a bathing-place. At an early period a bishopric was founded here by St. Declan, a native of Ireland. It existed till the English invasion, and was incorporated with the see of Lismore about 1170. The district is partly mountainous, but between the hills and the sea there is some good land. Copper and lead have been obtained, and some iron ore of excellent quality. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, val. with that of Ballymacart, £254, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is modern. Near it are remains of the ancient one, which appears to have been a handsome building. There is a round tower ninety feet in height, in the churchyard. St. Declan's dormitory, a small structure near the church, is much venerated. On Ardmore Head is St. Declan's Well, and on the beach his stone. There are several caverns on the coast, the largest of which is that called the "parlour," near Ardmore Head. Ardmore is the seat of coastguard and police stations.

ARDMORE.—There are four places of this name in Scotland: 1st, a low, well-wooded promontory in the par. of Cardross, Dumbartonshire; 2nd, a harbour in the par. of Eddertoun, Ross-shire; 3rd, a headland with the adjacent bay and islands in the par. of Kildalton, Argyleshire; and 4th, a promontory in the Isle of Skye, Inverness-shire, celebrated in Scottish story for the foray of the Macdonalds of Uist, who, landing suddenly at this spot, set fire to the adjacent church of Trumpan, where many of the hostile clan of the Macleods were assembled at mass, and keeping guard at the doors suffocated them; but the fiery cross" soon waved on the hills, and before the Macdonalds could recover their boats, the greater part of them were slain on the beach.

ARDMULCHAN, a par. in the bar. of Skreen, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles to the N.E. of Navan. It is situated in a fertile district on the river Boyne. Limestone and building stone are quarried here. The living is a rect. united with that of Painestown in the dioc. of Meath. Ardmulchan House is the principal residence.

ARDNACRUSHA, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Patrick, in the bar. of Lower Bunratty, in the co. of Clare, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 2 miles to the N. of Limerick.

ARDNAGEEHY, a par. in the bar. of Barrymore, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.W. of Rathcormack. It is situated in a mountainous country on the river Bride, and contains the vils. of Glenville and Watergrasshill. The surface rests on clay slate, and flagstone and coarse slate are quarried. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, val. £437, in the patron. of the bishop. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight at Watergrasshill; and there are police stations at that village and at Glenville. The principal residences are Bridestown, Mount Pleasant, Glanassack, and Westmount. Fairs are held at Glenville on the 4th May and the 3rd November.

ARDNAMURCHAN, or AIRDNAMURCHAN, a par. joined to Sunart, partly in the Argyle district of the co. of Argyle, partly in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, about 30 miles to the S.W. of Fort William. It comprises the five districts of Ardnamurchan, Sunart, Moidart, Arasaig, and South Morar, of which the first two are in the county of Argyle, the other three in the county of Inverness. The whole parish lies between Loch Morar in the N., and Loch Sunart in the S., and has the parish of Kilmalie on the E. and N.E. It contains the quoad sacra pars. of Aharacle and Strontian. The general character of the country is mountainous and wild, abounding in lakes, bays, glens, and torrents. There are some level tracts and patches of cultivated ground, and some good sheep-pastures. The principal lake is Loch Shiell, lying between Sunart and Moidart. It is about 25 miles in length, and has an average breadth of a little more than a quarter of a mile. Several of the mountains in Sunart have an altitude exceeding 2,500 feet. There are several tracts of moss near the western extremity of Loch Shiell. On the northern coast of Ardnamurchan are several caverns, one of which is above 300 feet in length. The coast line is generally bold and rocky. Ardnamurchan Point is the principal headland along the western coast of Scotland, from Cape Wrath to the Mull of Cantire; and it is noted as the westernmost point of the mainland of Great Britain. Many valuable minerals occur among the various rocks in the district. Lead ore is abundant; pitchstone is found in the trap; strontium occurs in the hills at Strontian, which place gave its name to that mineral. Iron and copper ores are also said to exist. The people are chiefly engaged in the breeding and managing of black cattle and sheep, and in the several fisheries. Herring, cod, ling, and other fish are taken. The living, val. £228, is in the presb. of Mull, and in the patron. of the Duke of Argyle. There are churches at Kilchoan (which is the principal one), Kilmorie, Aharacle, Strontian, and Polnish, besides two Free churches. On an islet in Lochaylort, are remains of two vitrified forts. Kinloch-Moidart house, which was burned in 1746 by the king's troops, who also destroyed all the stock of cattle, and every hut they could discover, has been rebuilt in an elegant style by Colonel Donald Macdonald. The castle of Mingary is about 5 miles from Ardnamurchan Point. It was the seat of Mac Ian, and has been the scene of several historical incidents. Castle Tirom is on a small island in Loch Moidart, but was burned in 1715, so that the ruins alone now remain. There are many remains of ancient churches scattered through the district. Two fairs are held at Strontian, one on the 19th May, the other on the 15th October. There is a fair also held at Arisaig. The district comprised at present under the name of Ardnamurchan, is estimated to have an area of about 273,280 acres of land and water, of which it is believed 200,000 acres are land.

ARDNAREE, a vil. in the par. of Kilmoremoy and bar. of Tireragh, in the co. of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, close to Ballina. It is situated in a pleasant district on the river Moy, which separates it from Ballina, and is crossed by a modern bridge of four arches. A monastery of the Augustine order was established here in the year 1427, and a fine doorway and windows of the building still remain. Here is a handsome Roman Catholic church with a tower and spire, forming the cathedral church of the R. C. diocese of Killala. A police station is fixed here. Fairs are held on the 20th June, the 10th October, and the 13th December.

ARDNURCHER, or HORSELEAP, a par. partly in the bar. of Kilcoursey in King's County, partly and chiefly in the bar. of Moycashel, in the co. of Westmeath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.W. of Kilbeggan. It is situated on the river Brosna, and on the road from Dublin to Galway. There is a large tract of bog and abundance of limestone. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Meath, val. with the vic. of Kilcumreagh and several others, £613, in the patron. of the crown. The church, which stands on a hill, is an ancient building, and has a spire erected in 1822. The chief proprietor of the parish is Lord Maryborough. Several castles formerly existed in this place. Here is an ancient moat, the fort of Ardnurcher, over which a knight, one of the De Lacys, is said to have leapt when escaping from pursuit: whence the common name of the moat, Horseleap. There are remains of a monastery founded in the 5th century, and of a nunnery founded by Matilda de Lacy in the 13th. Donour Castle, still in good preservation, is the seat of the Nagles.

ARDOCH, a quoad sacra par. in the pars. of Blackford, Dumblane, and Muthill in Strathallan, co. of Perth, Scotland. It contains the vils. of Ardoch, Balhaddie, Braco, Buttergask, Greenloaning, and Rottearn. The village of Ardoch is situated on the banks of Knaick Water, a feeder of the Allan, 4 miles to the S.W. of Muthill, and 12 miles N.E. of Stirling. The living is in the presb. of Auchterarder, and in the gift of the heads of families. The place derives its interest from the important remains of antiquity it contains. Here is one of the most perfect examples of a Roman station or permanent camp to be found in Great Britain: and near it are remains of three temporary camps. The station is on the east bank of the Knaick, 50 or 60 feet above the level of the water. The bank here is very steep, and formed a strong defence on the western side of the works. The form of the camp is a rectangle, and its dimensions within the lines 500 by 430 feet. On the northern and eastern sides, which have been little injured, it is fortified by five ditches and six walls; three of its gates remain. The praetorium, or general's quarter, occupies nearly the central part of the quadrangle, and is itself very nearly a square. Its sides, however, are not parallel with the outer walls. This part of the camp has been named Chapel Hill for centuries, and from some foundations discovered in it, it is thought probable that a place of worship may have been erected on the spot. The station is believed to have been constructed by the Roman general Agricola. The works on the south side have been laid in ruins by the diligent hand of the modern cultivator, and those on the west by the rude touch of the military road-maker. A stone wall now surrounds and preserves from further destruction the whole station. The three temporary camps lie north of this permanent one—the first measures 2,800 by 1,950 feet; the second, the ramparts of which cross those of the first, 1,910 by 1,340 feet; and the third, 1,060 by 900 feet. At Strathgeath, and West Dealgin, Ross, are vestiges of two other camps. At the distance of a mile from the village of Ardoch, there was formerly a huge cairn, but it has been carried off piecemeal and applied to profane modern uses. Its length was 182 feet, breadth 45, and height along the slope 30 feet. Ardoch Park is the seat of Major Stirling.

ARDOYNE, a par. partly in the bars. of Rattivelly and Forth, in the co. of Carlow, partly in the bar. of Shillelagh, in the co. of Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Tullow. It is situated in a fertile district on the river Burren. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £50, in the patron. of the incumbents of Fennagh and Barragh.

ARDPATRICK, a par., now part of the parish of Kilquane, in the bar. of Coshlea, co. of Limerick, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.E. of Kilmallock. It is situated on the western side of the Ballyhowra hills. An abbey existed here in very early times, which is said to have been founded by St. Patrick. Ruins of it still stand on the top of Ardpatrick Hill, and near them a portion of a round tower. Small quantities of gold ore have been found here, and the fossil remains of an elk. The living is united with the cur. of Kilquane, which is joined to the rect. of St. Patrick, Limerick. Sunville, an old seat, was the residence of the Godsalls. Fairs are held here on the 17th March, the 26th April, the 12th September, and the 12th November.

ARDQUIN, or ARDGUIN, a par. in the bar. of Ards, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the N. of Portaferry. It lies in a fertile and well cultivated district on the eastern shore of Lough Strangford. The road from Portaferry to Belfast passes through the village. Ardquin was the seat of a monastery at an early period, and subsequently of a bishopric. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, in the patron. of the crown. The church, a neat edifice in a pleasant situation, was built in 1829 by the bishop, Dr. Mant. Remains of the monastery and the bishop's palace still exist. Clay-slate is obtained in the parish, which is used both for building purposes, and for road-making. There are several flour and flax mills, which give employment to some of the inhabitants. Portaferry House, in a fine wooded park, is the seat of Colonel Nugent.

ARDRAHAN, a par. chiefly in the bar. of Dunkellin, partly in those of Loughrea and Kiltartan, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 16 miles to the S.E. of Galway. It lies between the coast of Galway Bay, and the north-western extremity of the Slievebooghta mountains. Many black cattle are pastured on the mountains. Iron ore has been found, and there are some mineral springs. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Killaloe, Kilfenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh, val. with that of Beagh, £602, in the patron. of the Marquis of Clanricarde. Here is a police station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. Flannel weaving is carried on in the village.

ARDREE, or ARDRIE, a par. in the bar. of Kilkea and Moone, in the co. of Kildare, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, close to Athy. It is situated on the east bank of the river Barrow, and was formerly a possession of the monastery of St. Thomas, Dublin. The living is a vic. forming part of the union of Athy, in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare. A Danish fort existed here, of which there are still remains.

ARDREE, Queen's County. See ARDEA.

ARDRESS, a vil. in the par. of Killaghton, bar. of Kilconnel, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 6 miles to the S.W. of Ballinasloe.

ARDRISHAIG, a small seaport and post town in the par. of South Knapdale, in the co. of Argyle, Scotland. It stands at the east end of the Crinan canal, 2 miles from Lochgilphead, and near Loch Fyne. It is a place of considerable importance, having a custom-house and fishery office, and steamers ply between it and Glasgow three times a day. The traffic is principally in fish, sheep, and cattle. A road of 200 yards was specially constructed for the Queen and Royal party when they landed here in August 1847, to facilitate their passage to the royal barge, which was to convey them on board the Victoria and Albert yacht, lying at anchor in Crinan bay.

ARDRISTAN, a par. in the bar. of Rathvilly, in the co. of Carlow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles to the S.W. of Tullow. It lies on the south-western bank of the river Slaney, and consists chiefly of meadow land. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £87, in the patron. of the bishop. The ruins of the parish church are on the townland of Ardristan.

ARDROSSAN, a par. and seaport town in the Cunningham district of the co. of Ayr, Scotland, 8 miles to the N.W. of Irvine, and 31½ miles S.W. of Glasgow. It is situated on an accessible point of the coast of the Frith of Clyde, opposite to Brodick Bay, Island of Arran, and is a station on a branch of the Glasgow and Ayr railway. It has grown up, under the auspices of the Earls of Eglintoun, from a small village to a considerable town, busy seaport, and favourite watering-place. The par. includes the greater part of the town of Saltcoats, which is 1 mile S.E. of Ardrossan. The district is dry and healthy, and the soil fertile. The ground rises to the height of 700 feet at the hill of Knockgeorgan. Coal and limestone are obtained. The town is regularly laid out, the streets are broad and straight, and well lighted with gas. Hotels, lodging-houses, and baths, have been erected for the accommodation of summer visitors. There is a post-office, stamp-office, branches of the banks of Ayrshire and Scotland, a savings-bank, 8 insurance offices, and a water company. The harbour, which was commenced in 1806, is one of the largest and best on the coast. There are a good dock, two piers, one 460 feet, and the other 900 feet in length, and two lighthouses, which were erected in 1840, and have been lately rebuilt. There is constant steam communication with Ireland, the Isle of Arran, Glasgow, Ayr, and Fleetwood. The living, val. £261, is in the presb. of Irvine, in the patron. of the Earl of Eglintoun. The new parish church has a handsome appearance. There is also a district church at Ardrossan, besides the Free church, United Presbyterian church, and a chapel belonging to the Independents. The Pavilion, a modern mansion, is the marine residence of the Earl of Eglintoun. Ardrossan Castle, the old seat of that family, is a ruin. On the rocks in front of the town is a battery recently erected for the artillery volunteers. Fairs are held here on the Tuesday before the July fair at Ayr, and on the fourth Thursday in November. The par. has an area of about 18 square miles.

ARDS BARONY, one of the ten bars. of the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, occupies the long, narrow peninsula extending southward from the north-eastern extremity of the county. It is bounded on the N. by Belfast Lough, on the E. and S. by the Irish Channel, and on the W. by Strangford Lough, and the barony of Lower Castlereagh. The bar. contains Kirkcubbin and Portaferry, the pars. of Ardkeen, Ardquin, Ballyphilip, Ballytrustan, Ballywalter, Castleboy, Donaghadee, Greyabbey, Inishargy, St. Andrew's or Ballyhalbert, Slanes, Witter, and part of Bangor and Newtownards.

ARDSALLAGH, a par. in the bar. of Lower Navan, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles to the S. of Navan. It is situated on the western bank of the river Boyne. There are no traces left of a monastery, said to have been founded here by St. Finian. The living is a rect. joined with that of Navan, in the dioc. of Meath. Ardsallagh House, the old seat of the Ludlows, is now the seat of the Duke of Bedford.

ARDSALLIS, a vil. in the par. of Tomfinlough, bar. of Upper Bunratty, in the co. of Clare, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.E. of Clare. The Ardsallis river runs through the village, and joins the Fergus. There is a good race-course, and the races were formerly of note. Cattle fairs are held on the 12th May and the 12th August.

ARDSKEAGH, a par. in the bar. of Fermoy, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.E. of Charleville. It is situated in a fertile country, with mountain pasture, on the borders of the co. of Limerick. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne. There is no church, but some remains of the old church exist.

ARDSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Darfield, wap. of Staincross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the S.E. of Barnsley. It is a station on the Barnsley branch of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway. The Dearne and Dove canal passes near it. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £120, in the patron. of the vicar. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. An endowment by Richard Micklethwaite in 1745, for the education of five children, was augmented by a bequest of John Micklethwaite in 1752. Ardsley Hall, the seat of the Micklethwaites, and Ardsley Park House, are the principal residences.

ARDSLEY, EAST, a par. in the lower div. of the wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N. of Wakefield. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £269, in the patron. of the Earl of Cardigan. There is a small free school. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the coal mines and in the weaving of woollens. Coal is abundant, and the mines have been long worked.

ARDSLEY WEST, or WOODKIRK, as it was formerly called, a par. in the lower div. of the wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N.W. of Wakefield. It is a station on the Leeds and Wakefield branch of the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway. The par. contains the hmlt. of Tingley and several others. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £265, in the patron. of the Earl of Cardigan. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is an endowment by Richard and John Micklethwaite for the education of three children, and an almshouse, founded by — Greenwood, for three poor widows. The valuable coal mines and the woollen manufacture furnish employment to the people. There is a farm-house in the parish which was originally a mansion, the seat of Chief Justice Topcliffe in the reign of Henry VII.

ARDSTRAW, or ARDSRATH, a par. chiefly in the bar. of Strabane, partly in that of Omagh, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland. It occupies a picturesque situation at the foot of two mountains called Bessy Bell and Mary Gray, and at the confluence of the rivers Struell, Glenelly, and Derg, which form the river Mourne. It comprises the town of Newtown-Stewart and the village of Douglasbridge. It was the seat of a very ancient bishopric, and had a small stone church. The see was transferred in 597 to Maghera, and in 1158 to Derry. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, val. £1,537, in the patron. of the Provost and Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin. There are several chapels belonging to the Presbyterians, two to the Wesleyan Methodists, and one to the Primitive Methodists. A considerable part of this parish is mountain and bog. The rest of the land is arable, and the soil in the valleys is good. Limestone, clay-slate, and freestone are obtained. Here were formerly several bleach-grounds, where the process was carried on on a large scale. The parish is rich in remains of antiquity. Near the village are those of the cathedral and monastery, consisting of some foundations, parts of sculptured crosses, and some fluted columns and stones. The ruins of the Franciscan abbey of Scarvagherin, which was founded in 1456, are on a hill, three miles above Ardstraw Bridge. Nothing remains of the friary of Pubble but the cemetery, near Newtown-Stewart. Sir Robert Newcomen's castle, built in 1619, in which James II. once lodged, is in good preservation, except the roof, which was removed by order of the king. There is an ancient building at the foot of Bessy Bell mountain, which is the subject of some curious local legends. There are several cairns, and above thirty forts in the parish. At Newtown-Stewart is a very old bridge of six arches, one over the Derg, at Ardstraw, of six arches, and several other bridges. The principal seats are Baron's Court, the residence of the Marquis of Abercorn, Castlemoyle, Newtown-Stewart Castle.

ARDSTRAW BRIDGE, a vil. in the par. of Ardstraw, bar. of Strabane, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, 3 miles to the N.W. of Newtown-Stewart. It is a very ancient place, and was the site of the abbey mentioned in the preceding article. Here is an ancient bridge of six arches across the river Derg. The Presbyterians have a chapel in the village.

ARDUDWY HUNDRED, one of the five hunds. of the co. of Merioneth, North Wales, is bounded on the N. by Carnarvonshire, on the E. by the hundreds of Edermion and Penllyn, on the S. by the hundreds of Tal-y-bont and Moddwy, and on the W. by the bay of Cardigan. It contains Harleigh, and the pars. of Festiniog, Llanaber, Llanbedr with Llandanwg, Llanddwywe, Llandecwyn, Llanelltyd, Llanenddwyn, Llanfair, Llanfihangel-y-Traethau, Llanfrothen, Maentwrog, Trawsfynydd, and part of Beddgelert.

ARDUTHIE, an estate in the par. of Fettelesso, in the co. of Kincardine, Scotland, not far from Glenbervie. The new town of Stonehaven was built upon it, and was originally called Arduthie.

ARDVARNEY, a hmlt. in the bar. of Lurg, in the co. of Fermanagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, not far from Kesh. Advarney House is the principal residence.

ARDVASAR, or ARDAVASAR, a hmlt. in the Isle of Skye, co. of Inverness, Scotland; it is situated on the coast of Sleat Sound, not far from Armadale, and gives name to a bay and headland.

ARDVERIKIE, a shooting-lodge on the banks of Loch-Laggan, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland. It was erected by the Marquis of Abercorn in 1840, and was occupied by her Majesty and suite for several weeks in the autumn of 1847. It is a plain, unostentatious building, rather irregular in its construction, and washed by the waters of the lake on three sides. Landseer has sketched upon the walls of two of the apartments several of his best known and finest designs.

ARDWICK, a chplry. in the par. of Manchester, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, forming a constituent part of the town of Manchester. Ardwick station is the point at which the two great lines of railway, the Manchester and Birmingham, and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, unite. The river Medlock passes through the chapelry. Ardwick Green, which is about 2 miles from the Exchange, forms a pleasant approach to the town of Manchester. It is a kind of square, with an ornamental piece of water, lawns, shrubs, and walks. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £294, in the patron. of the Warden and Fellows of the Collegiate Church of Manchester. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas. The cotton manufacture, and other departments of the general Manchester trade, form the staple occupation.

ARELEY-KING'S, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Doddingtree, in the co. of Worcester, close to Stourport. It is situated on the western bank of the river Severn, and contains the hamlet of Dunley. From the hill on which the church stands, there is a fine prospect westward as far as Malvern. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £346, in the patron. of the Rev. H. J. Hastings. The church is in the early English style, and is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There is a monument in the churchyard, formed of oblong stones, and bearing a curious inscription in Latin rhyme, purporting that one Sir Harry lies buried there. A hermitage once existed at Redstone Ferry, on the borders of this parish. It consisted of a chapel, and several chambers cut in the side of a rock. Areley House, formerly the seat of the Mucklows, and Areley Hall, are the principal residences.

ARELEY, UPPER, a par. in the southern div. of the hund. of Seisdon, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles to the N.W. of Kidderminster. It is pleasantly situated on the eastern bank of the river Severn, on the borders of Shropshire and Worcestershire. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £255, in the patron. of the Earl of Mountnorris. The church stands on high ground, from which there is a fine view. It is dedicated to St. Peter, and contains a monumental figure of a knight. Areley Hall is the seat of the Earl of Mountnorris. There are remains of a Roman camp in the wood near the Hall.

ARGAM, or ERGHAM, a par. in the wap. of Dickering, in the East-Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N.W. of Bridlington. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of York, val. £21, in the patron. of C. Grimston, Esq. The church, which was dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has long been ruined.

ARGOED, a tnshp. united with that of Ystrad, in the par. of Caron-ys-Clawdd, hund. of Penarth, in the co. of Cardigan, South Wales. It is situated on the river Teifi, and contains the township of Tregaron.

ARGOED, a tnshp. in the par. of Mold, and hund. of Mold, in the co. of Flint, North Wales.

ARGYLE, or ARGYLL, a county on the western coast of Scotland, forming the south-western extremity of the highlands, and comprising, besides an extensive district of the mainland, the following islands — Mull, Tirree, Coll, Lismore, Jura, Islay, Colonsay, and many smaller ones; among which are Staffa and Iona. It is bounded on the N. by Inverness-shire, on the E. by the counties of Perth and Dumbarton, on the S. by the Irish Sea, and on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean.

It lies between 55° 15′ and 56° 55′ north latitude; and between 4° 32′ and 6° 6′ west longitude. Its greatest length, measured from Lochiel in the north, to the Mull of Cantire in the south, is 115 miles; its greatest breadth, from Ardnamurchan Point to the border of Perthshire, 66 miles. It is estimated to contain an area of 3,210 square miles. It has a coast line of 600 miles, remarkably broken and irregular. It is said that there is no point in the whole county more than twelve miles from the coast, either of sea, bay, or loch, nor any gentleman's seat more than ten minutes' walk from the sea, with the exception of the mansions on the banks of Loch Awe. The county is subdivided into the six following districts — Mull, occupying the north-western part; Islay, the south-western; Lorn, the western; Argyle, the central; Kintyre and Knapdale, the southern; and Cowal, the south-eastern part. It contains 51 pars., of which three are burghs—Inverary, which is the county town, Campbelltown, and Oban. It is under the government of a heritable lord-lieutenant (the Duke of Argyle), a lord-lieutenant, a high sheriff, above 50 deputy-lieutenants, sheriffs, and substitutes. The county returns one representative to parliament, and its three burghs are contributory to Ayr. A large part of the county is the estate of the Duke of Argyle, the head of the Campbells, a family which has long been supreme there. The name Campbell, now so widely spread over that district of Scotland, first became of note in the time of Bruce. The earldom of Argyle was created by James III. in 1457; the marquisate, by Charles I., and the dukedom, by William III., in 1701. Argyle is a land of mountain and waters. Full of attraction for the lover of nature, poet, or naturalist, it is for the most part barren to the utilitarian. Following the line of coast from the north, we observe the bold headland called Ardnamurchan Point, distinguished as the westernmost point of the mainland of Great Britain. To the south of Ardnamurchan, and separating it from the Isle of Mull, is Loch Sunart, connected by the narrow Sound of Mull, with the larger Loch Linnhe. Loch Eil is a narrow arm of Loch Linnhe, running up to the north-east as far as Fort William, and thence about an equal distance to the westward. A still narrower arm stretching eastward is Loch Leven. In Loch Linnhe is Lismore Island, with smaller ones near it, on one of which is a lofty lighthouse. Lock Etive is another extension of Loch Linnhe. On a promontory at its mouth, stands the venerable castle of Dunstaffnage. Southward from Loch Sunart, stretches the Isle of Mull, in form approaching a semicircle, and embracing a number of small islands on its western side. Iona lies opposite its south-western extremity. Along the coast, southward from Loch Etive, are the islands of Kerrera, Seil, Lunga, and Scarba, with numerous islets. Further out, and opposite the peninsula of Cantire, are the large islands of Jura, Islay, and Colonsay. At the southernmost extremity of Cantire is the headland called the Mull of Cantire, with its "light" at an elevation of nearly 300 feet. On the eastern coast is the harbour of Campbelltown. Loch Fyne, after running nearly north about twenty miles, strikes off inland to the north-east, beyond Inverary. The remainder of the coast is washed by the Kyle of Bute, the Frith of Clyde, and Loch Long; the latter lake, extending northward as far as Ben Lomond. Almost all these inlets afford good harbourage. The largest and most beautiful inland loch, is Loch Awe to the west of Inverary, and having a direction parallel to Loch Fyne. The other inland lakes are Arick, close to Loch Awe, Fyk, near Loch Long, Lydoch, and Tulla, and many lesser ones. Argyle has no great rivers, but many short and rapid streams. The principal of these are the Orchay and the Awe; the former running from the Grampians through Glenorchy, and falling into Loch Awe; the latter discharging the waters of that lake into Loch Etive. The predominating rock in the county is mica slate, which extends over the greater part of the mainland to the south of Loch Awe, and over the principal islands. It also prevails in the southern part of the Isle of Mull. The mountains to the north of the Awe, consist chiefly of granite, which occurs also on the opposite shore of Loch Linnhe. In the Isle of Mull, and the districts of Ardnamurchan and Morven, basalt is found. The Isle of Staffa and the Colonnade of Ulva are magnificent examples of columnar basalt. In the peninsula of Cantire, near Campbelltown, sandstone occurs with traces of coal. The Grampian range borders the county on the east, and the few tracts of level ground occur generally near the coast. The principal mountains are the following—Ben Cruachan, a double-headed hill in Lorn, between Loch Etive and Loch Awe, which is the loftiest in Argyle, and rises to the height of 3,390 feet; Benmore, in the centre of the Isle of Mull, 3,185 feet; Ben-an-an-Sceriodain, in the parish of Appin, 3,570 feet; Paps of Jura, a triple mountain in the southern half of the Isle of Jura, 2,580 feet; Buachaelle-Etive, at the head of the loch, 2,537 feet; Ben-Ima, or the Cobbler, near the head of Loch Long and Loch Lomond, 2,389 feet; Benmore and Cowal, in the Isle of Kerra, Ben Tuirck, in the peninsula of Cantire, Ben Vara, in Islay, and the Peak of Scarba. The barrenness of the surface of the country is to some extent compensated by the mineral treasures which lie beneath it. It yields in greater or smaller quantities lead, copper, coal, slate, marble, granite, and limestone. There are lead mines at Strontian in the district of Ardnamurchan; in Lorn, and at Tyndrum, to the east of Glenorchy, on the borders of Perthshire. At Strontian was first discovered the earth which bears that name. Copper also is obtained in Islay, and was formerly found at Kilmartin, on the coast of Jura Sound. Blue slate is procured from the quarries in Easdale Island, a very small island lying 10 miles to the S.W. of Oban. These quarries have been worked above 150 years. There are large and productive slate quarries at Ballahulish on the borders of Inverness-shire, 5 miles to the S. of Ben Nevis. At the same place, white and grey marble is quarried, but the best marble is procured in the Island of Lismore. It is hard and of green and pink colour. A beautiful kind of granite is found in the neighbourhood of Inverary, and limestone abounds generally through the county. Cobalt has been discovered in small quantities in Glenorchy.—The climate of Argyleshire is generally damp and changeable. From the close proximity of the sea to every part of the county, its temperature is seldom severe. The greatest cold occurs in the mountainous districts of the north and east. But there are numerous glens and sheltered valleys among these. Only a small part of the surface is under tillage. The mountains are usually barren in their highest parts. Lower down is heath and pasture, on light and gravelly soils. There is great variety in the quality of the ground. Many tracts in the mountain valleys are arable, as well as the districts lying near the coast. The soil in part of the lower grounds is mossy and marshy. The county has few woodland districts, although in early times it was almost wholly forest. It is calculated that in the whole county there are about 40,000 acres of natural and planted woods, and about one-eighth of the soil is under cultivation. The principal branch of the local industry is the rearing of cattle, which are the chief article of export. They are of the small and hardy West Highland breed, and are sold to the south, where they are afterwards fattened. Sheep also, of the black-faced breed, are kept in large numbers on the hills. Butter and cheese-making are carried on in Cantire extensively. As the people live chiefly on oatmeal and potatoes, oats and potatoes form their most important crops. Agriculture has till recently been in a low state. Indeed, previous to the abolition of the feudal system in 1745, any material progress was impossible in this wild region; but that event gave a new stimulus to industry: the conversion of corn rents and services into money rents; the formation of military roads, under the direction of the Parliamentary commission; the suppression of smuggling and the execution of the Caledonian and Crinal Canals — have entirely changed the face of the ntry, and paved the way for recent improvements. is, however, questionable how far the conversion of ge tracts of country into sheepwalks and deer forests to be desired, considering how greatly it tends to minish the number of human inhabitants. In 1851 the pulation of this county was 89,298, and in 1861 it had creased to 80,995, showing a decrease of no less than 03 in the decennial period, or 9·2 per cent. of the ole population; the county having at present fewer habitants than at the commencement of this century, en the population was 81,277, and in 1831, 100,173. om that time a gradual decrease has taken place, and hough the general condition of the people who have t emigrated has improved, yet at the present time the m-houses are only of middling excellence, and the ellings of the peasantry are the poorest huts. There no manufactures of importance, except the iron foun- es at Burnawe and Islay. There is a good herring hery, in which many vessels are employed at Inverary d Campbelltown. Salmon and fine trout are taken in ch Awe. Campbelltown is famed for its whisky, and s five distilleries. Except the three boroughs, Inverary, mpbelltown, and Oban, and the favourite Glasgow tering-place, Dunoon, there are no towns of impor- nce in the county, and the people live for the most rt in small fishing villages. More than a third of the pulation are islanders. The Gaelic language is that ost commonly spoken. There is not a railroad in the unty, nor a weekly market, and but one savings-bank.— rgyle constitutes a synod, which includes six presby- ries, with forty-one parochial charges, thirteen parlia- entary churches, four chapels of ease, and nine missions the Royal Bounty. The Free Church also has a synod Argyle, comprising four presbyteries with thirty-four urches and fifteen preaching stations. The Episcopal urch of Scotland has a bishop of Argyle and the Isles, o has within his diocese sixteen churches and chapels ease. The United Presbyterians have four chapels, the formed Presbyterians one, the Congregational Union Scotland seven, and the Roman Catholics six places of rship within the county.—Of its history there is little tell. It was the seat of several lordships in the middle es. The northern parts were under the McDougalls Lorn, the southern under the McDonalds, Lords the Isles. There were several other ruling clans. heir power was gradually reduced as the kingly power creased, and their domains passed by marriage or nquest to the Stuarts. From them Argyle came to e Campbells. The McDonalds made an unsuccessful ttempt to retain Cantire in the 17th century.—Among e antiquities of Argyleshire, the ruins of Iona hold e first place. [See IONA.] There are some fine remains of monastery in the island of Oronsay, which lies at the uthern end of Colonsay. The principal old castles are ose of Dunstaffnage, in the district of Ardchattan, at e mouth of Loch Etive [See ARDCHATTAN]; Dunoon, seat the Argyles; Dunolly, seat of the McDougalls, near ban harbour; Ardtornish, on the Sound of Mull; and veral others. Cairns, Danish forts, and Druidical circles stones, exist in several places. There are some singu- r caves in the parishes of Lochgoilhead and Strachur.— he chief means of communication are the steamboats, hich visit nearly all the lochs and the islands. When is mode of conveyance was in its infancy, it was gene- lly supposed that the little wealth, bold shores, and attered population of the county, kept it without the rcle in which its adoption was to become beneficial. It me, however, to be attempted, and there is not now a ch, bay, or inlet, but holds a daily, or at least a weekly, mmunication with the city of Glasgow and the Low- nds. By this means farmers are encouraged to fatten ock for the southern markets, and thus to improve their rms; so that in the last ten years the value of land has sen 20 per cent., and the condition of the agricultural pulation is improving, though they are still extremely or, for the most part living on fish and oatmeal. The rinan canal, which crosses the northern part of Cantire, om Loch Fyne to Loch Crinan, saves a voyage of 120 iles round the Mull. The Caledonian canal, which connects the Moray Frith with Loch Linnhe, extends a few miles into this county. The principal road from the south, after passing along the western side of Loch Lomond, enters Argyleshire at the head of Loch Fyne, and proceeds to Inverary, Dalmally, and Oban. Another road enters from Perthshire by Dalmally, thence to Tyndrum, King's House, and Glencoe on Loch Leven. From Inverary a road runs southward through Loch-gilphead. There are also several good roads crossing the county from east to west, and leading towards Fort-William, Stirling, Dumbarton, and other places of importance.

ARGYLE DISTRICT, one of the six subdivisions of the co. of Argyle, Scotland, bounded on the N. by Inverness-shire, on the E. by Perthshire and Loch Fyne, on the S. by Cantire and Knapdale District, and on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean; containing the pars. of Ardnamurchan, part of Sunart, Craignish, Inishail, Inverary, and Glenary, part of Kilmallie, Kilmartin, Kilmichael Glassary, South Knapdale, and the quoad sacra pars. of Aharacle, Strontian, Ballachulish, and Lochgilphead.

ARKLOW BARONY, one of the eight bars. of the co. of Wicklow, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland. It is situated in the south-eastern corner of the county, and is bounded on the N. by the bar. of Newcastle, on the E. by St. George's Channel, on the S. by the co. of Wexford, and on the W. by the bar. of Ballinacor. It contains the county town Wicklow, and the pars. of Arklow, Ballentemple, Castlemacadam, Dunganstown, Ennereilly, Kilbride, Killahurler, Kilpoole, Rodeross, and parts of Drumkay, Glenealy, Inch, and Kilcommon; and comprises an area of about 67,357 acres.

ARKLOW, a par., market town, and seaport, in the bar. of Arklow, in the co. of Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 15 miles to the S. of Wicklow, and 50 miles from Dublin. It is situated on the coast of St. George's Channel, at the mouth of the river Ovoca, not far from Croghan Hill. It is a very ancient place, and has been a fishing station from the earliest times. The castle and town were granted in the reign of King John to Theobald Fitzwalter, lord butler of Ireland. A monastery was founded here by Fitzwalter, for Cistercian monks from the abbey of Furness. The neighbourhood of this town was the scene of a battle between the Irish and the English in 1281, in which the latter were victorious, and gained possession of the town. It was burnt, with several other towns and villages, in 1316, by the O'Tooles, and other Irish chiefs. The castle fell into their hands in 1331, but it was soon retaken by Lord de Birmingham. During the civil war it was garrisoned for the king till 1649, when it was assaulted by Oliver Cromwell, and entirely destroyed. Arklow was the scene of an engagement, in 1798, between the rebels and the English under General Needham, in which the former were defeated.—The town stands on sloping ground on the southern bank of the river, which is crossed by a bridge of nineteen arches. According to the census of 1861, it contains 922 inhabited houses, with a population of 4,670. Of these, 3,883 are Roman Catholics, 757 belong to the Established Church, 9 are Presbyterians, and 21 Methodists. The surrounding country abounds in rich and beautiful scenery. A little to the north the Ovoca flows in a winding course through a valley of great beauty, which bears the same name as the river. Near the coast, and in the valleys, the soil is rich, and contains good marl.—The town is divided into the Upper and Lower Towns, the former consisting of one good street, the latter of poor fishermen's huts. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the fishery and a small coasting trade. The port is subordinate to Dublin, and has about 250 vessels belonging to it. The harbour is only capable of admitting vessels of small size. Off the coast is a shoal called Arklow Bank, the position of which is marked out by a buoy at the northern, and a floating light at the southern end. It is 10 miles long, and the light is visible at a distance of nine miles. Arklow Bay lies between this bank and the coast. Infantry barracks are established on the site of the castle. There are coastguard and police stations, and petty sessions for the barony are held weekly. A dispensary, a fever hospital, and a savings-bank, have been established. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare, val. with the perpet. curs. of Killalmerler and Kilgorman, £206, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, which was erected in 1823, is in the perpendicular style. There is a large Roman Catholic chapel, and a small one belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. There are several public and private schools. Towards the close of the 18th century, considerable excitement was caused by the discovery of gold in a stream at Croghan hill. A great number of persons resorted to the place, and in a few weeks a quantity of the precious metal was found, which sold for £10,000. The works were destroyed during the rebellion in 1798; and after renewed search and critical investigations, in 1801, they were finally abandoned. Shelton Abbey, the seat of the Earl of Wicklow, on the north bank of the Ovoca, is a striking object in the scenery around Arklow. It is situated in the parish of Kilbride. The chief residences are Glenart, which belongs to the Earl of Carysfort, Ballyrane, Lumberton, and Emma Vale. The market is held on Thursday. Fairs take place on the 11th January, the 22nd March, the 19th April, the 14th May, the 28th June, the 9th August, the 25th September, and the 15th November.

ARKSEY, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N. of Doncaster. It is situated on the river Don, and is united with Bentley. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £113, in the patron of Sir W. R. C. Cooke, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. See BENTLEY-WITH-ARKSEY.

ARMAGH, an inland co. in the prov. of Ulster, reland; bounded on the N. by Lough Neagh, on the E. by the co. of Down, on the S. by the co. of Louth, nd on the W. by the cos. of Tyrone and Monaghan, rom the former of which it is separated by the river lackwater. It lies between 54° 3′ and 54° 31′ north atitude, and between 6° 14′ and 6° 50′ west longiude. It extends in length from N. to S. 32 miles, nd its greatest breadth is 22 miles, comprising an area f 328,076 acres, of which 310,134 are land, and 7,941 water. On the north, it has a coast-line of 6 miles on the lough. It was constituted a county n 1586 by Sir John Perrott, then Lord Deputy of reland. Under his arrangement, the greater part of the rovince of Ulster was distributed into seven counties, f which this was one. The district had formerly beonged to the several families of Clantrassil, O'Nial, I'Cahan, and O'Hanlon. The county is subdivided into he following eight baronies:—Armagh, Tiranny, East O'Neilland, West O'Neilland, Upper Fews, Lower Fews, Upper Orior, and Lower Orior. It contains 22 parishes, vith portions of several others, comprising within its imits 41,297 inhabited houses, with a population in 1861 f 189,382. Besides the city and borough of Armagh, which is the county town, and seat of the primacy of reland, it has eight market towns:—Lurgan, Newown-Hamilton, Markethill, Portadown, Crossmaglen, Newry, Tandcragee, and Middleton. The local governnent is entrusted to a lieutenant and custos, a high heriff, 19 deputy lieutenants, 60 magistrates, and the usual county officers. Previous to the union, it returned ix representatives to the Irish parliament—two for the ounty, two for the borough of Armagh, and two for the orough of Charlemont. It now sends three members—wo for the county, and one for the borough of Armagh, Charlemont having been disfranchised at the union.—The surface of the county is generally hilly and irregular. The most level district is that in the north nd north-west, bordering on Lough Neagh and the Blackwater. The hills in that district are almost wholly nder cultivation. Vicar's Cairn, situated in the centre f the county, and one of the principal elevations in the orthern half, does not rise above a height of 820 feet. There are some tracts of bog and marsh along the shores f the lough. The fertility of the soil, the undulation of the surface, and the well-wooded estates, make the aspect of the northern half of the county very pleasing and beautiful. Towards the south, the ground is much more irregular, and the hills rise into mountains. The principal ranges are the Fews, divided into Upper and Lower, and running mostly in a direction from south-east to north-west. Armagh Breague has an elevation of 1,200 feet, and Newry Mountain of 1,385 feet. Further to the south, and not far from the borders of Louth, is Slieve Gullion, the loftiest mountain in the county, and the loftiest but one in the province of Ulster; it is a granite peak rising to the height of 1,893 feet, having a lake on its summit, and commanding a magnificent prospect as far as the bay of Dundalk. There are many varieties of rock in the county—granite at Slieve Gullion, in the Newry mountains, and the Fathom hills; mica slate abounds in the district round Cam Lough; greywacke slate in the centre of the county; white limestone in the west; red sandstone near Lough Neagh, and trap rocks in blocks in various parts. The limestone becomes reddish and of a better quality near the town of Armagh. Lead ore has been found in several parts, and a mine was formerly opened at Keady. Some traces of iron and other metals have been discovered. The climate of Armagh is more genial than that of the other counties in the province. The soil, except in the rugged south, is fertile. There is much good meadow land, especially along the banks of the Blackwater and the Bann. The soil is very rich in the valleys among the hills. Wheat is grown extensively in the north and north-western districts; oats and potatoes are the principal crops elsewhere. The farms are mostly small, and spade husbandry is common. Much flax is grown, and apples are largely cultivated. The methods of farming have been improved, and the modern implements brought into use. A good deal of butter is made for exportation, from cows which graze on the banks of the rivers and on the common lands; but the scientific grazing of cattle and the pasturage of sheep are almost entirely neglected, while both goats and pigs are carefully tended. The latter, indeed, are often thoroughly domesticated. Small horses are also bred, to convey the numerous itinerant vendors of linen and other merchandise from cabin to cabin, and to the various fairs and markets which they frequent.—There are no large lakes in this county; Camlough and Lough Clay are the only two worth naming. The former is situated in a mountainous district a little to the north of Slieve Gullion; the latter is in the western part of the county, near Keady—it is the source of one branch of the river Callan. The Blackwater and the Bann are the chief rivers. The former flows along the north-western border of the county, from near Killyleagh northward, and falls into Lough Neagh. It receives the waters of the Callan, the sources of which are in the central districts, a little below Charlemont. The river Tall joins the Callan above Charlemont. The Bann, which rises in the county of Down, enters Armagh above Portadown, where it is joined by the Newry canal and the river Cushir: flowing thence in a north-westerly direction, it falls into Lough Neagh, about 3 miles to the E. of the mouth of the Blackwater. There are many smaller streams. The only island in the county is Coney Island, situated on Lough Neagh, between the mouths of the Blackwater and the Bann. On the eastern side of the county is the Newry canal, which was constructed to connect Carlingford Bay with Lough Neagh. It extends from the Newry Water to the point where the Bann becomes navigable. On the north-western side is the Ulster canal, the course of which is parallel with that of the Blackwater, with which river it unites near Charlemont. By this canal Lough Erne is brought into connection with Lough Neagh.—The main branch of industry in Armagh is the linen manufacture. Formerly there was a considerable woollen trade carried on, but at present no woollen goods are made except for home use. Some cotton goods and unions are made, and there are several flax mills. There are salmon fisheries at the mouths of the Bann and the Blackwater. The county has several interesting remains of antiquity. In the south-east is the Dane's Cast, a dyke or line of fortification near Poyntz Pass, and extending into the county of Down. Near Armagh are the ruins of Eamania, or Navaurath, a fortress and seat of the kings of Ulster, and the Vicar's Cairn. On the Callan river is the traditional burial-place of one of the O'Nials, marked by a tumulus. Cairn Bann is near Newry. Ruins of castles exist in several places, and near Poyntz Pass are Tyrone's ditches. Numerous weapons and decorations have been found—spears, axes, swords, collars, rings, amulets, &c. The city of Armagh has some interesting ecclesiastical remains. The principal seats in the county of Armagh are the following:—Gosford Castle, the seat of Earl Gosford; Tanderagee Castle, that of the Duke of Manchester; Roxboro' Castle, of the Earl of Charlemont; Castle Hill, of Lord Caledon; Brownlow House, of Lord Lurgan; Tanderagee, of Count de Salis; Castle Dillon, of Molyneux, Bart.; Tynan Abbey, of Sir James Matthew Stronge, Bart.; Churchill, of Verner, Bart.; Drumbanagher, Forkhill, Carnagh, Culloville, Lissadian, &c.—The Dublin and Coleraine railway enters Armagh at Newry, whence it is continued in a parallel direction with the Newry canal to Portadown. A branch line from Portadown runs to Dungannon, in Tyrone. The Ulster railway enters from Belfast at Portadown, and is continued by Armagh to Monaghan. The principal roads are the following:—from Dundalk by Newry, Market Hill, to Armagh and Charlemont; from Dundalk by Newtown-Hamilton, to Armagh; from Monaghan, crossing the county in a north-easterly direction, by Middletown, Armagh, Portadown, to Lurgan.

ARMAGH BARONY, one of the eight subdivisions of the co. of Armagh, in the prov. of Ulster, Ireland, bounded on the E. by the bars. of O'Neilland West and Lower Fews, on the S. by the co. of Monaghan, and on the W. and N.W. by Turenny bar. and the co. of Tyrone. It contains the pars. of Blackwatertown, Loughgall, parts of Eglesh, Derrynoose, Grange, Keady, and Lisnadil.

ARMAGH, a par., city, and market-town in the bars. of Armagh and O'Neilland West, in the co. of Armagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 81 miles by road, or 98 miles by railway, to the N.W. of Dublin. It is a parliamentary borough, the county town, and the seat of the primacy of Ireland. It is situated near the centre of the county on the river Callan, and is a station on the Ulster railway. It was originally called by a name which signified "hill of saillows;" its present name, contracted from Ard-magh, signifies "high place," or "high field."—The city boasts of a very high antiquity, and had an ecclesiastical origin. It was founded in the middle of the 5th century, by St. Patrick, who also established here a monastery of the Augustine order. This house received considerable endowments from the kings, and became very wealthy. A college was connected with it, to which immense numbers of students resorted, and from which learned men went forth to all parts of Europe. The students at one period numbered 7,000. So much importance was attached to the course of study pursued and the privileges enjoyed here, that in the 12th century a synodal decree was passed that no one should teach theology who had not learnt it at the College of Armagh. The city at an early period became distinguished as the chief city in Ireland. One historian in the 9th century names it the "seat of empire." During the 7th and 8th centuries it was three times destroyed by fire. In 830 the Danes stormed and took the city, and afterwards destroyed it. Thenceforward, for two centuries and a half, the story of the place is almost entirely made up of Danish inroads and violence and native insurrections. In 1004, the town came into the possession of the famous Brian Boru, whose remains, with those of his son, were interred here. It was taken by Edward Bruce in 1315. The insurgent, Shane O'Neil, having retired to Armagh before Lord Sussex, in 1557, the town was again nearly destroyed by the lord lieutenant. O'Neil attacked the city again in 1566, and did not spare even the cathedral. In 1601 Lord Mountjoy recovered it from the O'Nials and placed a strong garrison in it. Sir Phelim O'Neal had possession of the place a short time in 1641. It was garrisoned by the Earl of Tyrconnel for James II., retaken by Lord Blayney, and soon lost again. James remained a short time here on his way from the siege of Derry. In 1690 it was taken by Duke Schomberg. Armagh received a charter of incorporation from James I. in 1613, which, after being superseded by another granted by James II., was restored by William III. The style of the corporation was, the "sovereign, free burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Ardmagh," under which the local government was till lately carried on. The borough returned two members to the Irish parliament from the reign of James I. till the Union; it has since sent one member to the Imperial parliament. A chief police station is established in Armagh, and the assizes and quarter sessions are held here. Petty sessions are held by the county magistrates weekly. Armagh is the seat of a Poor-law Union.—The city is situated on the slope of a hill, on the winding bank of the river Callan. The houses are handsome, many being built of the beautiful limestone found in the neighbourhood. The approaches through the surrounding country are very pleasant. The principal object in the city is the cathedral, standing in a central position, to which many of the streets converge. The town is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water. An elegant market-house was erected by Archbishop Stuart. There is a public library, founded and endowed by Primate Robinson; who also erected a handsome building for the library, an observatory, and the archiepiscopal palace, with a chapel near it. The Tontine buildings include an assembly-room, news-room, savings-bank, and other apartments. There is a public walk called the Mall, which was formed by subscription on land formerly part of the town commons. At the north end of this walk is the sessions-house, which was erected in 1809, and at the south end is the county gaol. The linen-hall, which is open for sales on Tuesdays was erected by Leonard Dobbin, Esq., a member for the borough. There are tanneries, flour-mills, two distilleries, gas works, waterworks, barracks for 200 men, five banks, a county lunatic asylum, an ale brewery, &c. Two newspapers are published, the Ulster Gazette, and the Armagh Guardian.—The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. with the perpet. curs. of Armagh Breagne, Killylea, and others, £1,152, in the patron. of the primate. The original cathedral church, founded by St. Patrick in 445, perished in 836, when the city was destroyed by the Danes. It is not known when the present church was built. It is chiefly in the early English style, and was restored in 1675 by Archbishop Margetson. The length of the building is 183 feet, and its breadth across the transepts 119 feet. It stands on Druimsailech hill, the site of the first cathedral. A tower was erected by Primate Robinson, and a more thorough restoration was carried out by Mr. Cottingham at the expense of Primate Beresford. Several interesting ancient details have been brought to light which had long been concealed; among them are, a sculpture of St. Patrick, with shamrocks above it, and one of St. Peter. There are some fine monuments in the cathedral; one by Ryshrach, to Dean Drelincourt; one to Primate Robinson, by Bacon; one to Primate Stuart, by Chantry, and several others. A new and handsome church has been erected near the cathedral. It is dedicated to St. Mark. The living is a perpet. cur. Among the primates have been Usher, Bramhall, and Headly. There are chapels belonging to the Presbyterians, Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. There is a free endowed grammar school, the buildings of which were erected by Primate Robinson in 1774. The charter school was founded in 1738, and has received various endowments from time to time. Another school was founded and endowed in 1819, by Primate Stuart; for 105 boys and 84 girls. There are a national and several other schools in the parish. One of the Wesleyan chapels stands near the spot where John Wesley frequently used to preach. The branch provincial bank occupies the site of the monastery of St. Columba. One of the Presbyterian chapels was built of the remains of the monastery of SS. Peter and Paul. On the slope of the hill on which the cathedral stands is the county infirmary, built of limestone, and finished in 1774. There is a fever hospital a short distance from the city. The observatory, which is erected on a hill 100 feet in height, has two domes and a residence for the astronomers. In the palace grounds, which extend over 800 acres, are remains of the ancient abbey, and an obelisk to the memory of the Duke of Northumberland. A Roman Catholic cathedral has been erected in the city. Two miles from Armagh is Eamania, the ancient residence of the kings of Ulster. Adjoining it is Crieve Roe, said to be the seat of an ancient knightly order, called "Men of the Red Branch." Not far from these is Navau Fort. Many weapons and military relics have been found near these places. A mound on the banks of the Callan marks the burial place of "Nial of the hundred battles." Vicar's Cairn is a very large pile of loose stones on a lofty hill 4 miles from the town. Armagh gives the title of Earl to the king of Hanover.

ARMAGH BREAGUE, a par. in the bars. of Armagh and Lower Fews, in the co. of Armagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.E. of Keady, and 7¼ from Armagh. It is in a mountainous district, Armagh Breague Hill rising to the height of 1,200 feet. The linen manufacture is carried on, and there is a large bleach green. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £55, in the patron. of the rectors of Armagh and Keady. The river Callan takes its rise from a lough in this parish. There is a meridian arch belonging to the Armagh observatory on one of the hills.

ARMATHWAITE, a chplry. in the par. of Hesketh-in-the-Forest, Leath ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 10 miles to the N. of Penrith. The river Eden flows by the village on the E., and is crossed by a stone bridge of four arches. In the neighbourhood are Baron Wood and Cooms Fell. The modern mansion, Armathwaite castle, stands on the site of an ancient fort, on a lofty rock by the river, and was for some time the seat of the Skeltons, one of whom was John Skelton, the satirical poet. On an eminence near Tarn Wadling, a lake covering an area of one hundred acres, are the remains of Castle Hewin. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £50, in the patron. of the trustees of R. S. Milbourne, Esq., formerly of Armathwaite Castle.

ARMIDALE, a small fishing vil. in the co. of Sutherland, Scotland, 2 miles to the W. of Strathy. It is situated on the northern coast of the county, and has a safe harbour near Armidale head.

ARMIN, a chplry. in the par. of Snaith, in the wap. of Osgoldcross, West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the N.E. of Snaith. It is situated on the banks of the river Aire, near its junction with the Ouse. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of York, val. £74, in the patron. of the Earl of Beverley, and N. E. Yarburgh, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. David, and had formerly a chantry.

ARMINGFORD HUNDRED, in the co. of Cambridge, is bounded on the N. by Longslow and Wetherley hunds., on the E. by Triplow hund., on the S. by Hertfordshire hund., and on the W. by Bedfordshire. It contains the following pars.:—Abingdon-in-the-Clay, Bassingbourn, Croydon-cum-Clapton, Guilden-Morden, East Hatley, Littlington, Melbourne, Meldreth, Shingay, Steeple-Morden, Tadlow, Wendy, Whaddon, and part of Royston. It comprises an area of about 28,771 acres.

ARMINGHALL, or ARMERINGHALL, a par. in the hund. of Henstead, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the S.E. of Norwich. It is situated on a branch of the river Yare, and not far from the Eastern Union railway. It was part of the possessions of the priory of Norwich. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £80, in the patron. of the dean and chapter, who are impropriators of the great tithes. It has lately been augmented with £600 of royal bounty. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is in the early English style of architecture. The register dates from 1570. There is a school with a small endowment. The manor house, erected in 1600, is now a farmhouse; it has a fine porch, said to have been brought from Carrow Abbey. Formerly a small chapel stood at Belhawe, but it has long since fallen to ruin.

ARMITAGE, a par. united with Handsacre, in the southern div. of the hund. of Offlow, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles to the N.W. of Lichfield, 3¼ from Rugeley, and 12¼ from Stafford. The village of Armitage, anciently Hermitage, is pleasantly situated on the river Trent and the Grand Trunk canal. It is a station on the Trent Valley section of the London and North Western railway. The canal passes through a cavern here. There are two earthen pot and sanitary pipe manufactories, which employ a great part of the population; also a brewery; the remainder are employed in agriculture and rearing of cattle, a great part of the land being rich pasture. Part of the vil. of Brereton, and the hmlt. of Handsacre, are included in this par. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £100, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is a handsome stone structure, in the Norman style of architecture, with a Gothic chancel and Norman doorway, which was preserved with the ancient tower when the rest of the church was rebuilt, in 1850. It is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and stands upon a rocky eminence, commanding an extensive view over the vale of Trent and the distant forest of Charnwood. The Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have chapels here; the latter is a commodious building, recently erected by Thomas Birch, Esq., and is cased with stone. There is also a national school. Hawkesyard Park, the seat of Josiah Spode, Esq., J.P., is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, and has extensive prospects over the country. The house is a handsome Gothic mansion, forming a square with an embattled pediment and four turrets at the corners, crowned by cupolas. The other residences are Armitage Lodge, and Lee Hall. J. N. Lane, Esq., is lord of the manor.

ARMITAGE BRIDGE, a chplry. in the par. of Almondbury, and wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, not far from Huddersfield. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £150, in the patron. of the vicar.

ARMLEY, a chplry. in the par. of St. Peter, and lib. of the borough of Leeds, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the W. of Leeds. It is pleasantly situated in the valley of the Aire, and is a station on the Leeds, Bradford, and Halifax branch of the Great Northern railway. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through the chapelry, and is carried through a cutting in the old Danish camp on Giant's hill. The inhabitants are employed in the cloth manufacture, and in the fulling mills. There are also cotton and corn mills. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £204, in the patron. of the Vicar of Leeds. The chapel, which was built in the reign of Charles I., is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. A lunatic asylum has been established. The principal residence is Armley House, which has an Ionic portico, and stands on a hill overlooking the river. It was designed by Smirke, and the grounds were laid out by Repton.

ARMOY, or ARDMOY, a par. in the bar. of Carey, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Ballycastle, which is its post town. It is situated on the eastern side of the river Bush, a small stream, called the Wellwater, flowing through the parish, and falling into the Bush. The district is hilly, but fertile; it contains Knocklayd, the loftiest hill in the county. There are quarries of white limestone and basalt. Gneiss, porphyry, and mica slate are also obtained in small quantities. The crystals called Irish diamonds are found on Knocklayd. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £232, in the patron. of the bishop. The Presbyterians have a chapel here. Part of an ancient round tower stands in the churchyard; it is 36 feet high. Fairs for the sale of horses, cattle, corn, &c., are held on the 5th January, the 25th February, the 29th March, the 25th May, the 16th August, the 14th November, and the 26th December.

ARMSCOTT, a hmlt. in the par. of Tredington, Upper div. of the hund. of Oswaldslow, in the co. of Worcester, but lying detached in Warwickshire, 2 miles to the N.W. of Shipton-on-Stour. It lies on the west bank of the river Stour, not far from a branch of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton railway.

ARMSTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Polebrook and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Northampton, 3 miles to the S.E. of Oundle. The Northampton and Peterborough branch of the London and North Western railway passes near it.

ARMTHORPE, a par. in the southern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N.E. of Doncaster. It contains the hmlt. of Nutwell. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of York, val. £366, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, which is small and has no tower, is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a school endowed by Ann Holmes, in 1689, with a small rent-charge, which has been augmented by an endowment of Sir Geo. Cooke.

ARNCLIFFE, a par. partly in the eastern, partly in the western, div. of the wap. of Staincliffe, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 9 miles to the N.E. of Settle. Skipton is its post town. The par. comprises the whole valley of the Skirfare, a branch of the river Wharfe, and part also of Wharfdale. The district includes some of the highest ground in England, and its scenery is wild and variously beautiful. The par. contains the chplries. of Halton Gill and Hubberholme, and the tnshps. of Buckden, Hawkeswick, and Litton. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £36, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. In addition to the parish church, there are two district churches, one at Halton Gill, and the other at Hubberholme, the livings of which are both perpet. curs., val. £80 each, in the gift of the vicar. High up among the hills near Arncliffe, is a remarkable hollow, called Doukbottom Cove, surrounded by wild cliffs, and entered by an oblong opening overhung with ivy and fern.

ARNCLIFFE INGLEBY. See INGLEBY ARNCLIFFE, Yorkshire.

ARNCOTT, a chplry. in the par. of Ambrosden, hund. of Bullington, but detached and locally in the hund. of Ploughley, in the co. of Oxford, 3 miles to the S.E. of Bicester. It is situated on the river Ray. Arncott Wood is on high ground, commanding a good prospect.

ARNE, a par. in the hund. of Hasilon, Blandford div. of the co. of Dorset, 3 miles to the E. of Wareham. The village is situated on a small peninsula in Poole harbour, midway between Wareham and Brownsea Island. A barrow on the hill at the end of a bank stretching into the harbour has served as a beacon. The living is a perpet. cur., united with the rect. of Holy Trinity parish, Wareham.

ARNESBY, a par. in the hund. of Guthlaxton, in the co. of Leicester, 8 miles to the S.E. of Leicester. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £119, in the patron. of J. S. Sherwin, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a chapel belonging to the Particular Baptists. The parochial charities amount to £57, including a small endowment for education. Robert Hall, the great preacher, was born in this village, in 1764, where his father was a Baptist minister. Stocking weaving is carried on here, and employs a hundred frames.

ARNGASK, a par. chiefly in the Cupar district of the co. of Fife, partly also in the cos. of Perth and Kinross, Scotland, 5 miles to the N. of Kinross, its post town. It is situated on the Farg Water, at the eastern extremity of the Ochill hills, and contains the vils. of Damhead and Duncrivie. The predominant rock in the district is trap, and the soil is of various kinds, much of it good. The living, val. £179, is in the presb. of Perth, and in the patron. of Mrs. Wardlaw and the Laird of Fordels. The ancient church of Arngask was given to the monastery of Cambuskenneth, in the year 1281. It remained in connection with that establishment till 1606, when the abbacy was made a temporal lordship, and this church and many others were declared the parish kirks of their localities. It contains also a Free church and an endowed school.

ARNISORT, a par. in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, now joined to Duirinish.

ARNOLD, a par. in the north. div. of the hund. of Broxtowe North, in the co. of Nottingham, 4 miles to the N. of Nottingham, its post town. It lies near the Nottingham and Mansfield branch of the Midland railway. The principal occupation of the village is the manufacture of hosiery, in which about 1,400 frames are employed. Cotton and worsted spinning are carried on in neighbouring mills. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £310, in the patron. of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, which is in the perpendicular style and has a tower, is dedicated to St. Mary. The General and Particular Baptists and the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels in the village. There is a school, endowed by Daniel Chadwick, and other benefactors, with a revenue of £23, and several charities for poor widows. There are four lodges of Odd Fellows, besides five benefit societies and a Cottage Garden Society. Arnold Grove, Arnot Hill, and Sherwood Lodge are the principal residences. This village is the birthplace of the painter, R. Bonington (1801).

ARNOLD, a tnshp. in the pars. of Swine and Long Riston, wap. of Holderness, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles from Beverley.

ARNPRIOR, a vil. in the par. of Kippen, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 10 miles to the W. of Stirling. Arnprior Castle was the seat of Buchanan, called the "King of Kippen," by whom James V. was entertained there.

ARNTULLY, a small vil. in the par. of Kinclaven, in the co. of Perth, Scotland. It is 8 miles N. of Perth. The inhabitants are employed in linen weaving.

ARNWOOD, a tythg. in the par. of Hordle, and hund. of Upper Christchurch, Upper Lymington div. of the co. of Southampton, 2 miles from Lymington.

ARNYFOUL, a vil. in the par. of Glamis, in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 5 miles from Forfar.

AROS, a postal vil. on a bay on the coast of the Isle of Mull, in the co. of Argyle, Scotland, about 20 miles to the N.W. of Oban. A small stream from Loch Erisa here joins the Sound of Mull. There is a ferry to the mainland. The ruins of Aros Castle, which was a seat of the Macdonalds, still exist.

ARRAM, a hmlt. in the par. of Atwick, wap. of Holderness, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles from Hornsey.

ARRAM, a hmlt. in the par. of Leckenfield, and wap. of Harthill, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N. of Beverley.

ARRAN, an island which constitutes the greater part of the co. of Bute, Scotland. It lies off the coast of Ayrshire in the bay formed and enclosed on the W by the long narrow peninsula of Cantire, in Argyleshire. The Frith of Clyde, on the E., separates the island from the coast of Ayr, and Kilbrannan Sound, on the W., separates it from the coast of Argyle. Its extreme length from N. to S. is 26 miles; its average breadth from E. to W. 10 miles. It contains the pars. of Kilbride and Kilmory. Off the eastern coast lies the small island of Lamlash, or Holy Isle, which makes an excellent harbour of Lamlash Bay. Arran is in circuit about 65 miles, and comprises an area of 165 square miles. Its form is nearly oval. The whole surface of the island is mountainous, the greatest elevations and the grandest scenery being in the northern part. Goatfell is the highest point, and its height is variously estimated at from 2,865 to 2,945 feet. From its summit, which has no vegetation except a few lichens, is a magnificent prospect, extending to the coast districts of Ayrshire, the islands, peninsulas, and hills of Argyleshire, and the coast of Ireland. The upper part of Goatfell consists of granite; lower down are mica, slate, and red sandstone. Granite boulders are scattered about near its summit. Its Gaelic name signifies "wind mountain." Other hills are Kiddoe, Bennish, and Benbearan. The island has a great variety of rocks; but the most common is red sandstone. Steep cliffs are seen at some points of the coast, which is, however, generally, but slightly, elevated. Holy Isle has cliffs of columnar basalt, at some points 1,000 feet high. On the north coast there is a mass of sandstone which serves as a seamark, and has acquired the name of the "Cock of Arran." Off the south coast is a small island, called Pladda, on which there are two lights, one at a height of 77, the other of 130 feet. A small lake, Loch Tana, lies high up among the hills in the north. Several small streams run down from the interior of the island, through glens of extraordinary beauty, to the sea. The climate of the island is mild, and it attracts numerous visitors in summer time. Only a small part of it is capable of cultivation. The inhabitants are mostly employed in the herring fishery. The Duke of Hamilton is chief heritor, whose seat is Brodick Castle on the eastern coast. The island formerly belonged to the Macdonalds, lords of the isles, and was covered with woods, the haunts of the red deer, wild boar and other wild animals. There are many remains of antiquity: ruins of a castle at Loch Ranza in the north, and of another in the south; of a monastery in Holy Island, besides cairns, forts, and obelisks in various places. On the western coast is King's Cove, 114 feet in length, interesting as the retreat of Robert Bruce. There is a road across the island and another round it, and constant communication is kept up by steamers with Ayr, Ardrossan, and Glasgow. After the Duke of Hamilton, the Marquis of Bute, Hon. Mrs. Westenra, and Mr. Fullarton are the largest proprietors.

ARRAN ISLES, three islands, each a separate par., forming the bar. of Arran, in the co. of Galway, and prov. of Connaught, Ireland. They are situated in the Atlantic Ocean at the entrance to the bay of Galway. They extend in a line from N.W. to S.E. about 12 miles, and comprise an area of 11,288 acres. Their names are Inishmore or Arranmore, Inishmaan, and Inishere. The surface is hilly, and slopes upward from the bay toward the ocean: the cliffs facing the south-west rising in some parts to the height of 200 feet. Agriculture is in a rude state, and most of the people are engaged in fishing. The coracle, or boat of wicker-work, covered with skins, is still in use here. There are two vils. in Inishmore, Killeany and Kilronan, the former of which has the only good harbour in that island. A pier has been erected. The living of the parish of Inishmore is a vic. in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, val. with the rect. of Ballynakill, £263. There are marble quarries on this island; and its rocky coast, in which there are many caves, is haunted by crowds of puffins. A lighthouse was erected in 1817, with a light at an elevation of nearly 500 feet above the sea, and visible at a distance of 28 miles. The livings of the other two parishes are vics. also united with the rectory of Ballynakill. But whatever charms of natural beauty these islands possess, those charms are surpassed in fascinating power over the imagination by the remarkable relics of antiquity existing here. Several fortresses, circular in form, and constructed of loose masses of stone, remain to testify the mechanical power of tribes that have long vanished, and whose name is known but to few. The largest of these fortresses is Dun Arngus, situated on the north-western coast of Inishmore, 220 feet above the sea. The remains of churches and other religious houses are numerous. Some of these are found within the walls of the fortresses. Inishmaan has a church of the 7th century entire except its roof. Its dimensions are singularly small, and its walls enormously thick. Its length inside is 16½ feet, which is less than three times the thickness of its two end walls. There is one stone, three feet in thickness, which extends over the full breadth of the building 18 feet. Inishmore was early occupied by many who sought religious retirement, and was called Arran of the Saints. Their huts and oratories still stand, after a thousand years. The Gore family take from these islands the title of Earl of Arran.

ARRAS, a tnshp. in the par. of Market Weighton, and wap. of Harthill, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles from Market Weighton.

ARRATHORNE, or ARROWTHORNE, a tnshp. in the par. of Brompton Patrick, and wap. of East Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the N.E. of Leyburn.

ARRETON, a par. in the lib. of East Medina, in the Isle of Wight and co. of Southampton, 3 miles to the S.E. of Newport, its post town, and 8 S.W. of Ryde. The vil., which consists of a long straggling street and some widely scattered farms, is situated on the south side of a lofty down, on which are some large barrows, where Roman armour has been lately discovered. The hmlt. of Biddlesford is included in this par. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £220, in the patron. of J. Fleming, Esq. The church, which was one of those given to the Abbey of Lyra, in Normandy, by William Fitz-Osborne, contains a brass of the year 1430, and is dedicated to St. George. In the churchyard is the grave of the "Dairyman's Daughter," of Legh Richmond's well-known story. There is an endowment, founded in 1688, by John Mann, for the bringing up and apprenticing of poor orphans. It amounts to £37 per annum. There are other charities amounting to £27 per annum. In 1852 a district church was built at Haven Street, which is a hmlt., 4 miles N. of Arreton.

ARRINGTON, or ERMINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Wetherley, in the co. of Cambridge, 6 miles to the N.W. of Royston railway station, and 10 S.W. of Cambridge. It is situated on the old British way, Ermine Street, a little to the north of the bridge over the river Cam. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £69, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, who are impropriators of the great tithes. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a plain ancient structure, built upon a mound in the centre of the parish. The register of marriages and burials dates from 1538, and the register of baptisms, 12 years later. Petty sessions are held in the village. The par. contains 1,388 acres, the sole property of the Earl of Hardwicke.

ARROCHAR, or ARROQUHAR, a par. with a postal vil., in the co. of Dumbarton, Scotland. It includes the par. of Tarbet, and is situated at the foot of Ben Lomond, between Loch Lomond and Loch Long. It is a hilly and pastoral district, with some woods, and is watered by the rivers Douglas, Falloch, and Inverglass. It was formerly called the land of the Macfarlanes, to whom it chiefly belonged. The living, val. £245, is in the presb. of Dumbarton, and in the patron. of Sir J. Colquhoun, of Luss. The hill Benvoirlich, 6 miles to the N.W. of Tarbet, has an elevation of 3,180 feet. The par. extends over an area of 31,011 acres.

ARROW, a tnshp. in the par. of Woodchurch, in the lower div. of the hund. of Wirrall, in the co. palatine of Chester, 3 miles from Birkenhead.

ARROW is a par. and suburb of Alcester, in the hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 1 mile from Alcester, its post town. It is situated on the river Arrow, which works several mills, and contains the hmlt. of Oversley. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £248, in the patron. of the Marquis of Hertford. The church, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is ancient and has a tower, which was rebuilt in 1760. Ragley Hall, a mansion erected by Lord Conway, about 1750, is the seat of the Marquis of Hertford: it is a magnificent pile, three stories high, with four faces of great architectural beauty, and contains a dining hall of 60 feet by 40, together with a library of 30,000 volumes, and many ancient paintings by Rubens, Vandyke, and others. It is at present unoccupied, and is open for the inspection of visitors on every day except Sundays.

ARROWTHORNE, Yorkshire. See ARRATHORNE.

ARSCOTT, a tnshp. in the par. of Pontesbury, Pontesbury div. of the hund. of Ford, in the co. of Salop, 6 miles to the S.W. of Shrewsbury.

ARTAINE, or ARTANE, a par. in the bar. of Corlock, in the co. of Dublin, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Dublin. A castle formerly stood here, the seat of the Donellans, in which John Alan, Archbishop of Dublin, was brought before Lord Fitzgerald, as a prisoner, and slain on the spot (1534). During the civil war this castle was taken and garrisoned by the royalists. It was pulled down in 1825, and a modern mansion was built on its site. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the rect. of Finglas, in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare. The church is an ivy-covered ruin. In the churchyard are tombs of the Hollywoods, who held the manor of Artaine for ages, and one of whom was John Hollywood, a mathematician and philosopher of the 13th century. The principal seats are Artaine Castle, Elm Park, Artaine House, &c.

ARTHINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Addle, wap. of Skyrack, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the E. of Otley. It is situated in the beautiful valley of the Wharfe, and is a station on the North Eastern railway. Early in the reign of Henry II. Piers de Ardyngton founded in this place a small Cluniac nunnery. Its value at the Dissolution was £19. No remains of it exist. It was granted in 1542 to Archbishop Cranmer. The hall, built on the site of the nunnery in the 17th century, is now a farmhouse. Arthington Hall is the principal residence.

ARTHINGWORTH, a par. in the hund. of Rothwell, in the co. of Northampton, 4 miles to the W. of Rothwell. Northampton is its post town. It is watered by a branch of the river Nen. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £323, in the patron. of the Rev. H. R. Rokeby. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parochial charities, including Marriott's endowed school, amount to £39. Arthingworth Hall is the seat of L. Rokeby, Esq. This village is a meet for the Pytchely hounds.

ARTHURET, a par. in Eskdale ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 1 mile to the S. of Longtown, and 9 N. of Carlisle. The par., which is 7 miles long by 4 broad, is situated on the river Esk, on the borders of Scotland, and comprises the tnshps. of Longtown, Brackenhill, Lyneside, and Netherby. It was at a small chapel in this parish that a commission of the two nations met in 1343 to fix their boundary line. Solway Moss was the scene of a battle between the Scots and English in 1542, in which the former were defeated. The Scots were led by Oliver Sinclair, and the English by Sir Thomas Wharton, Warden of the Marches. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £847, in the patron. of Sir F. U. Graham, Bart. The church, rebuilt in 1609, is dedicated to St. Michael, and is in the Gothic style of architecture. Among the graves in the churchyard is that of Archibald Armstrong, court jester to James I. and Charles I. It is marked by a small cross. There is an endowed school, founded in 1754, by Lady Widdrington, and having now an income of £40. Netherby Hall was the seat of the late Sir James Graham, Bart. Kirk-Andrews formed part of this parish till the reign of Charles I. Part of Easton is still included in it.

ARTHURLEE CROSS and ARTHURLEE WEST, vils. in the par. of Neilston, in the co. of Renfrew, Scotland, 1 mile from Neilston.

ARTHUR'S CHAIR. See BRECKNOCKSHIRE.

ARTHUR'S SEAT. See EDINBURGH.

ARTHUR'S STONE. There are several of these memorials of the mythical British hero and king, which will be noticed under the places where they occur.

ARTHURSTOWN, or KING'S BAY, a vil. in the par. of St. James, bar. of Shelburne, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 9 miles to the S. of New Ross. It is situated on Waterford harbour, a little below the confluence of the three rivers, Barrow, Suir, and Nore. It is a chief police and coastguard station. The place was chiefly built by Arthur, first Lord Templemore, its proprietor, from whom it takes its name. It is the port to Waterford, and has a convenient quay. The inhabitants are employed in fishing and the coasting trade, exporting corn, pigs, butter, &c., and importing coal and slates.

ARTIC, Hertfordshire. See HALTWICK.

ARTICLAVE, a vil. in the bar. of Coleraine, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 5 miles from Coleraine. Downhill, the principal residence, is the seat of Sir H. H. Bruce, Bart.

ARTINGTON, a tythg. in the par. of St. Nicholas, hund. of Woking, in the co. of Surrey, 1 mile from Guildford. It is situated on the river Wey.

ARTLEBURY, a tnshp. in the par. of Wonfield, in the co. of Salop, not far from Bridgnorth.

ARTOMISH, a castle on the west coast of Morven, Argyleshire, Scotland. It is now in ruins, and was formerly a fortress belonging to the Macdonalds.

ARTRAMONT, or ARDTRAMONT, a par. in the bar. of Shelmalier, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N. of Wexford. It is situated on the bank of the river Slaney, where the small stream Sow falls into it. The scenery of the neighbourhood is very pleasant and diversified. The soil is fertile, and there are quarries of sandstone. The living is a rect. included in the union of Ardcolme, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. The church is a ruin. Artramont House, the seat of G. le Hunt, Esq., is situated on a wooded hill, with views over the country and the harbour. On the north side of the grounds is Eden Vale, a beautiful glen. There are several picturesque cascades. The parish contains the ruins of a castle, and some traces of a Danish fort.

ARTREA, or ARDTREA, a par. partly in the bar. of Loughinsholin, in the co. of Londonderry, and partly in the bar. of Dungannon, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.E. of Magheratell. It is situated on the western shores of Lough Neagh and Lough Beg, near the foot of the lofty mountain of Slieve Gullion, and is intersected by the river Ballinderry. It comprises the chplries. of Moneymore and Goodschapel; the former being a town of considerable importance. The Drapers' and Salters' Companies hold large estates in the parish. Many conflicts took place here during the rebellion in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It was also the scene of some of the transactions in the civil war in the reign of Charles I. In 1688 a battle was fought near Ardtrea Bridge, between the forces of James II. and those of William III., in which the latter, headed by Lord Blayney, obtained the victory. The country is for the most part fertile and well cultivated, with considerable tracts of bog. There is abundance of limestone and good building stone. Linen weaving and bleaching form a large part of the occupations of the people. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £732, in the patron. of the Provost and Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin. The church, which stands near the site of a former one, was built in 1830. It is in the perpendicular style of architecture. The district church is Woodschapel. The Presbyterians have two chapels here, and there are several schools. The chief residences are—Spring Hill, the seat of W. Lenox Conyngham, Esq.; Ardtrea House, seat of the Rev. Dr. Bailie; Lake View, and Warwick Lodge. The par. has an area of 20,963 acres, of which about 2,460 are covered with water.

ARUNDEL RAPE, one of the six divs. of the co. of Sussex, bounded on the N. by the co. of Surrey, on the E. by Bramber rape, on the S. by the English Channel, and on the W. by Chichester rape. It contains the following six hunds:—Arundel, Avisford, Bury, Poling, Rotherbridge, and West Easwrith. It covers an area of 132,800 acres.

ARUNDEL HUNDRED, one of the six hunds. of Arundel rape, in the co. of Sussex, having the same limits as the par. of the same name.

ARUNDEL, a par. in, and co-extensive with, the hund. of Arundel, in Arundel rape, in the co. of Sussex. It is a market-town, and municipal and parliamentary borough, a bonding port, and a station on the Brighton and South Coast railway, situated on the navigable river Arun, 5 miles to the N. of the port of Little Hampton, 10 miles to the E. of Chichester, and 70 miles from London by railway, or 55½ miles by Epsom and Dorking. Its name indicates its situation in the "dale" of the "Arun." It is a very ancient place, and its castle was bequeathed by Alfred the Great to his nephew Adhelm. After the Conquest, it came into the possession of Roger de Montgomery, who rebuilt it. In 1097, it was held a short time by William II. Robert de Belême having rebelled against Henry I., the castle was besieged and taken by the king's forces. It was here that Adeliza, the widow of Henry I., entertained Queen Maud in 1139. The castle came afterwards to the Fitzalans, and from them, by marriage, to the Howard family, who still hold it. It was the object of several assaults during the civil war of the 17th century, being taken by Waller and garrisoned for the parliament, retaken by the royalists under Lord Hopton, and soon after by Waller. It was on this last occasion that the eminent divine, Chillingworth, was made prisoner. The building sustained great injury from these assaults, and lay in ruins till the commencement of the present century. It is at present the chief palace of his grace the Duke of Norfolk, who is hereditary Earl Marshal, and is held by him under a peculiar tenure, being the only earldom by tenure yet remaining. It was much improved by the late Duke of Norfolk, and is now a magnificent residence. It is situated on the summit of the hill on the slope of which the town stands. The prospect from it is wide and beautiful, over the level landscape, the sea, and the Isle of Wight. It is one of the finest examples of a baronial residence in the kingdom. Of the ancient building, all that remains is the keep, the entrance gateway, and parts of the walls. The keep, or Bevis Tower, is circular, and has a central dungeon reached by a staircase. The northern and western sides of the fortress are defended by a fosse. The restoration was made as much as possible in conformity with the style of the old remains. The interior is finished and decorated in the most splendid style. The Barons' Hall, modelled after Westminster and other famous halls, has a roof of chestnut wood, stained windows with family portraits, and on the end window a view of the signing of the Great Charter, executed by Backler. The library, which is 120 feet in length and 30 feet in breadth, resembles a Gothic aisle. In the chapel Roman Catholic service is performed. The castle is surrounded by a park of great extent, with noble woods, and scenery of varied beauty. The park alone comprises 1,145 acres, and contains many hundreds of deer. By the generosity of the duke the public are admitted, and in the summer months it is much frequented by visitors. The possession of this castle gives the title of earl without creation: it is the only place, except, perhaps, the castle of Abergavenny, that does so.—The town is generally well built, and has a pleasant aspect. It is on both sides of the river, which is crossed by a stone bridge of three arches. The river is navigable up to the town for vessels of 150 tons burden; those of larger size unlade at Little Hampton, 4½ miles distant, at the mouth of the Arun. About fifty vessels belong to the port, and they are chiefly employed in the coasting trade. The principal exports are timber, corn, bark, &c.; the imports, coal, fruit, &c. In 1813, a canal was constructed, connecting the Arun with the river Wey, a feeder of the Thames; and in 1828 was opened the Portsmouth and Arun canal. Its length from the Arun to Chichester harbour is 12 miles, and it passes Barnham, Merston, and Donnington, having in its course four locks, and a fall of 21 feet.—Arundel is a borough by prescription. Its first charter of incorporation was granted by Queen Elizabeth. Under the Reform Act it is governed by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, with the style of the "mayor and burgesses of the borough of Arundel;" and its parliamentary and municipal boundaries are co-extensive. The town had the privilege of returning two members to parliament as early as the reign of Edward I., which it continued to exercise till the Reform Act. It now returns one member. The mayor is returning officer, and judge at the court leet. The revenue of the borough is about £380, and its population, according to the census of 1861, 2,488, against 2,748 in 1851, showing a decrease of 260 in the decennial period; the number of inhabited houses had also fallen from 552 to 529. Petty sessions are held, and polling for the county takes place here. The town is the seat of a County Court district.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £199, in the patron. of the Earl of Albemarle. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It is a large cruciform structure, in the perpendicular style, with a low tower at the centre. The chancel, which belongs to the Duke of Norfolk, contains in its north aisle, formerly the Lady Chapel, many ancient and interesting monuments. There are several brasses, the earliest being of the year 1382, and a stained portrait of an archbishop. The church, which belonged at first to an alien priory, was made collegiate in the reign of Richard II. Some buildings near the church have been converted into a Roman Catholic chapel. The remains of a hospital, or Maison Dieu, founded by Richard Fitzalan, now serve as a malt-house. Near the bridge is the ruined chapel of the ancient priory. There are slight traces of a Black Friary, founded in the reign of Edward II. There is a theatre, a savings-bank, and an elegant townhall, erected by the Duke of Norfolk, to whom most of the parish belongs. The river is noted for the grey mullets which frequent it in summer. It belongs to the duke. Markets are held on Monday and Saturday, and a cattle market every second Monday in each month. Fairs take place on the 14th May, the 21st August, the 25th September, and the 17th December, principally for pedlary.

ARUNDELL MILLS, a vil. in the bar. of Ibane and Barryroe, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 2 miles from Clonakilty.

ARUNDELL SAMPFORD. See SAMPFORD ARUNDELL.

ARVAGH, a vil. in the par. of Killashandra, and bar. of Tullyhanco, in the co. of Cavan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 10 miles to the S.W. of Cavan. It is situated on the borders of the co. of Longford, on Lough Garty and other small lakes, not far from the hill of Bruce. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. £92, in the patron. of the incumbent. The church is modern. There is a police-station, and a market is held on Friday. Earl Gosford is the proprietor of the place. There are two chapels and several schools. Fairs are held in every month except February, July, and October.

ARVANS, ST., a par. partly in the upper div. of the hund. of Caldicott, partly in the upper div. of the hund. of Ragland, in the co. of Monmouth, 2 miles to the N.W. of Chepstow. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Wye, which bounds the parish on the N.E., and contains the hmlt. of Portcasseg. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £53, in the patron. of the Duke of Beaufort. There are ruins of two chapels, which were dedicated to SS. Kingsmark and Lawrence. To the E. of St. Arvans is Piercefield Park, formerly the seat of Valentine Morris, Esq. The grounds, which lie at a considerable elevation above the river, extend in length 3 miles, and embrace a charming variety of scenery, hill, vale, wood, and water. A precipice bounds them on the S.W., and to the N. is Wyndcliff Hill, towering far above the park. In the house are four pieces of Gobelin tapestry, which belonged, it is said, to Louis XVI. The views from different parts of the grounds are very fine over the Wye and the Severn, and the hills of Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire.

ARWERTON, Suffolk. See ERWARTON.

ARYHOLME, a tnshp. joined with Howthorpe, in the par. of Hovingham, wap. of Ryedale, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles to the N.W. of New Malton.

ASAPH, ST., a par., city, and seat of a bishopric, chiefly in the Rhuddlan div. of the hund. of Rhuddlan, in the co. of Flint, but partly also in the hunds. of Isdulas and Yale, in the co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 15 miles to the N.W. of Flint, and 208 miles from London. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Elwy and Clwyd, and contains the tnshps. of Bryngolin (in which the cathedral stands), Talar, Meriadog, and ten others. The story of the place begins at a very early period, and the first fact related is the erection of a church by St. Kentigern, in the 6th century. It was built of wood, on a spot between the Elwy and Clwyd. From this origin came its first name Llan Elwy. Kentigern also founded here a monastery, which grew into importance. The present name of the city is said to have been given it in honour of St. Asaph, a native of the country, who succeeded the founder in his sacred charge, and whose remains were interred in the church. Little is known of the history of the place for the next five centuries. The monks were cast out of the monastery about the close of the 8th century. The city was much injured during the conflict between the Normans and the Welsh. In 1282 the cathedral and the dwellings of the clergy were burnt down by the English; the cathedral was again burnt by Owain Glyndwr about 1400; and after eighty years was rebuilt by Bishop Redman.—The situation of St. Asaph is highly picturesque. The upper part of the city is built on a hill at the opening of the beautiful vale of Clwyd, between the Elwy and the Clwyd, which meet a little below. The cathedral occupies and adorns the summit of the hill, at the base of which stands the parish church. The surrounding landscape is rich with groves and woods. There is a bridge of five arches over the Elwy, and a handsome new one over the Clwyd. The streets are paved and the houses well built, though mostly small. Under the Reform Act, St. Asaph is one of the contributory boroughs to Flint, in returning one member to parliament. It is also the seat of a Poor-law Union, and a County Court district.—The living is a vic. in the dioc. of St. Asaph, val. £179, in the patron. of the bishop. The parish church is dedicated to SS. Asaph and Kentigern. It is small, has no tower, and is supposed to have been built about 1524. In the churchyard are some curious old tombs, made of stone and shaped like coffins. There is also a district church at Bodelwydden, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £200, in the gift of Sir H. Williams, Bart. The cathedral is a cruciform building in the perpendicular style, with a low square tower at the centre. It is 179 feet in length, and 108 feet in breadth through the transepts. The height of the tower is 93 feet. At the east end is a window copied from one in Tintern Abbey. There is an altar-tomb of the Bishop Davydd ab Owen, who died in 1512; and in the churchyard is the tomb of Bishop Barrow, an ancestor of the great Isaac Barrow. There is also a white marble monument to Dean Shipley. Among the prelates who have held this see are William Morgan, who took part in the first Welsh translation of the Bible; Parry, who shared the same work; William Beveridge, a great orientalist; Thomas Tanner, the antiquary, and Horsley. The episcopal palace and the deanery have been recently rebuilt. There are places of worship for the Independents, and Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists. There is a free grammar-school, founded by Bishop Hughes, and endowed by Mrs. Elizabeth Williams. Almshouses for eight widows were endowed by Bishop Barrow. There are many minor charities, which, with the school and the almshouses, make a total of £179.—The parish contains many seats of the gentry: among them are Pengwerm, the seat of Lord Mostyn; Kinmel, of Lord Dinorben; Bodelwyddan, of Sir J. Williams, Bart.; Cevn, &c. St. Asaph gives the title of Viscount to Earl Ashburnham. The market is held on Saturday. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, the 15th July, the 19th August, the 16th October, the 2nd November, and the 26th December.

ASBY, a par. containing the vils. of Great and Little Asby, in East ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, 5 miles to the S. of Appleby, and 8 miles E. from the Shap station of the Lancaster and Carlisle railway. A branch of the river Eden flows through the parish, which includes the tnshps. of Asby Coatsforth, Little Asby, and Asby Winderwath, and the hmlt. of Asby Overgrange. The country is hilly, and a little to the south of the parish are Crosby-Garret and Horton fells. At Castlefolds the ground has an elevation of 1,700 feet. There is at Asby Gill a cavern called Pate Hole, 1,000 yards deep. There is abundance of limestone in the parish, and a copper mine is opened and worked. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £205, in the patron. of Miss Hill. The parish church, which stands in the township of Asby Winderwath, is an ancient structure with a low square tower, containing an antique clock, remarkable for its simple construction, and is dedicated to St. Peter. At Little Asby there was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. Leonard, with which a chantry was connected. The hamlet of Asby Overgrange was at one time a possession of the abbey of Byland. A free school was founded here in 1688 by George Smith, the endowment of which was augmented by Dr. Thomas Smith, bishop of Carlisle; its present revenue is £41. The old school-house having been destroyed by fire, it was rebuilt in 1853 by subscription. St. Helen's almshouse for four widows was established in 1812, and has an endowment of £28 per annum arising from land purchased by the trustees. The other charities amount to about £17 per annum. Opposite the almshouses is St. Helen's well, a strong spring throwing up a considerable body of water, at which miraculous cures are said to have been wrought. Asby Hall is the principal residence.

ASCOG, a district in the par. of Kingarth, in the Isle of Bute, Scotland, about 1½ mile from Rothesay. It has a church and a post office.

ASCOT, a par. joined to Winkfield, in the hund. of Ripplesmere, in the co. of Berks, 4 miles to the S.E. of Windsor. It is a station on the South Western railway, and is principally known as the site of a racecourse. This course was formed by William Duke of Cumberland; it is nearly 2 miles in circuit, and has a grandstand, extensive range of stables and coach-houses, a weighing-house, and other accommodations. The races take place in the month of July, and are especially patronised by the sovereign and the nobility.

ASCOTE, a hmlt. in the par. of Pattishall, hund. of Towcester, in the co. of Northampton, 3 miles from Towcester. It is not far from Watling Street.

The vil. of Ash Magna is situated on the road from Whitchurch to Market Drayton. The church of Our Saviour is a neat brick and stone building, erected in 1836. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £140, in the patron. of the rector of Whitchurch. There is a national school. Ash House and Ash Grove are the principal residences.

ASH-NEAR-SANDWICH, a par. and vil. in the hund. of Wingham, lathe of St. Augustine, in the co. of Kent, 3 miles to the W. of Sandwich, and 64 from London. A branch of the river Stour flows along the north border of the par., and the hmlt. of Richborough is included in it. There are several corn mills and a brewery. The living is a vic.* with the perpet. cur. of Trinity, in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £250, in the gift of the archbishop. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a handsome cruciform Gothic edifice, of the early part of the 13th century. The tower, which is a landmark, rises from the centre of the building and is supported by four elegant arches. At the side of the chancel is a private chapel, containing some fine brasses and monuments. A chapel of ease has also been erected at Westmarsh, 2 miles distant. The Independents have a neat chapel. There is an endowed school for 25 boys and 25 girls, founded by Eleanor and Anne Cartwright, the revenue of which is about £90. A school-house was afterwards erected by Elizabeth Godfrey, on condition that ten additional pupils of each sex should share the instruction of the school; the number has since been extended to 50. There are other charities amounting to about £47 a year. In the hamlet of Richborough are the remarkable ruins of Richborough Castle, the Roman Rutupium. [See Richborough.] Hops are cultivated in the district. Fairs are held on the 21st May and the 29th September. Guilton Town is a hmlt. on the W. of Ash, on the London and Sandwich road.

ASHATCH, a vil. in the co. of Salop, 3 miles from Ludlow.

ASHBORNE, or ASHBURNE, a market town and par., chiefly in the hund. of Wirksworth, partly in the hunds. of Appletree and Morleston, and Litchurch, in the co. of Derby, 10 miles to the S.W. of Wirksworth, and 139 miles from London by road, or 146¾ by rail. It is connected with the North Staffordshire railway by a short branch line to Rocester. The par. is situated in Dovedale, and comprises the chplries. of Alsop-le-Dale, Clifton and Hulland, the hmlts. of Sturston and Yeldersley, and the libs. of Newton Grange and Offcote-Underwood. The Henmore, a small stream, divides the town into two parts, the southern of which is called Compton. At the Conquest, Ashbourne was a royal manor, and its name in Domesday Book is Ersesburn. It formed part of the Duchy of Lancaster from the reign of Edward I. to the reign of Charles I., by whom it was sold with other estates in the duchy. It was the scene of a battle during the civil war, and was captured by the forces of the parliament in 1644. It was retaken, and visited by Charles I. in 1645. One hundred years after, the Pretender, Charles Edward Stuart, with several officers, remained in the town a night, taking possession of the Manor house.—The town stands on the eastern side of the river Dove, in a deep valley embosomed in green hills, and rich in grand and beautiful scenery. Thorp Cloud is the most prominent hill in the neighbourhood, but there are many other lofty and grotesque masses of rock in the dale, bearing such fanciful names as "My Lady's Chair," the "Twelve Apostles," &c. The houses are nearly all built of red brick, the streets are paved, and lighted with gas, and there is a good supply of water. At the south-western extremity of the town is the railway station, and at the N.E. is an open space forming the market-place. The principal occupations are the cotton and lace manufacture, malting and cheese-making. Iron is obtained at Thorp Cloud Hill.—The numerous fairs held here form an important part of the business of the place. There is a reading and news-room, a savings-bank, and a house of correction, erected in 1844, containing 4 cells. Petty sessions are held every Saturday, and polling for the southern division of the county takes place here. The town is the seat of a County Court district and a Poor-law Union, which embraces 61 parishes. The new union workhouse, which was completed in 1856, stands on an elevated spot called Church Banks. The town is not incorporated, but is governed under a recent Act of Parliament by the churchwardens and overseers.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. with the rect. of Mapleton St. Mary, £304, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. It was erected in 1241, by Hugh de Patishall, Bishop of Coventry, and is a large structure in the form of a cross, with a square tower surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire, ribbed with ball flower mouldings, and rising to the height of 212 feet. This spire, which is remarkably elegant, is known as the "Pride of the Peak," and contains an ancient sanctus bell, in addition to the peal of eight bells in the tower. The church is mostly in the early English style, and has many monuments of the Cockaines, Bradburns, and Boothbys. The marble tomb of Penelope, only child of Sir Brooke and Dame Susanna Boothby is much admired. It was executed by Banks, in 1791. The church was restored in 1845. There are besides three district churches—one at the village of Alsop-le-Dale, another at Hulland, and a third at Clifton; the latter is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and was erected in 1845. The livings of all are perpet. curs. of small value. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Lady Huntingdon's Connexion have places of worship in the town. A free grammar school was founded here by Sir Thomas Cockaine, William Bradburn, and others, in 1585, the present revenue of which is £214. There are free schools for 30 boys and 30 girls, established and endowed by Mr. Spalden, in 1710, with £10 a year each. To the same benefactor the town owes its almshouses for four widows of clergymen, and ten almshouses for poor persons, with an income of £222 per annum. There are also almshouses founded and endowed by R. Owfield, John Cooper, Mr. Pegg, and others. The parochial charities amount altogether to £943.—Ashbourne Hall, the ancient seat of the Cockaines and Boothbys, is now the residence of Captain Holland, R.N. Ashbourne Green Hall and Ashbourne Grove are the other principal residences. The cottage in which Moore was residing at the time of the composition of "Lalla Rookh" is not far from Ashbourne. There is a stone bridge over the Dove. The river is noted for its excellent trout and grayling. The market is held on Saturday. Fairs are held for the sale of horses, cattle, and wares of many kinds, on the first Tuesday in January, the 13th February, the second Monday in March, the 3rd April, the last Thursday in April, the 21st May, the 5th July, the 16th August, the 20th September, the third Monday in September, the 29th November, and the 15th December. There is a large sale of cheese at the fair in March and on the third Monday in September, and of wool at the July fair. The steeple-chase takes place the first week in March.

ASHBOURNE, a vil. in the par. of Killegland, bar. of Ratoath, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the E. of Dunsinanglin. A castle formerly stood here, of which there are some remains. Here is a police station and a racecourse. Fairs are held on the 6th January, the 16th April, the 21st May, the 29th July, and the 31st October. Newbarn is the principal residence.

ASHBRITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Milverton, in the co. of Somerset, 6 miles to the W. of Wellington. It is situated near the Western canal, and contains the tythg. of Greenham. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £450, in the patron. of J. Quicke, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A fair is held on the 25th February.

ASHBROOK. See AMPNEY ST. MARY, Gloucestershire.

ASHBROOK, a small par. in the co. of Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland. Flower, Viscount Ashbrook takes his title from this place, and has a seat, Castle Durrow, here.

ASHBURNHAM, a par. in the hund. of Foxearle, and rape of Hastings, in the co. of Sussex, 4 miles to the W. of Battle, its post town. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. with the rect. of Penhurst £307, in the patron. of the Earl of Ashburnham. The church is dedicated to St. James. It contains some fine monuments in the chancel of the Ashburnham family. Relics of Charles I., consisting of his watch, given to John Ashburnham on the scaffold, his shirt and drawers, and the sheet that covered his body, are preserved in the vestry. Ashburnham Place, the seat of the Earl, is a spacious modern hall in a fine park, on the coast of Pevensey Bay. It contains some valuable pictures by Vandyke, Lely, and other artists. This parish gives the title of earl and baron to the family of the same name.

ASHBURTON, a par., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough in the southern div. of the hund of Teignbridge, in the co. of Devon, 18 miles to the S.W. of Exeter, and 192 miles from London by road, or 221 by rail. The river Yeo flows through the town, and the South Devon railway passes within 7 miles of it, and has a station at Newton. It is a very ancient place, having been a Roman settlement, and belonged to the crown at the Conquest. It was afterwards conferred on the See of Exeter. In 1310, a grant of a weekly market and an annual fair was procured for the town by Bishop Stapleton. By a charter of Edward III., granted in 1328, Ashburton was constituted a stannary town. In the civil war it was held first by the royalists, but was afterwards taken by Fairfax. The town, which is well paved, and lighted with gas, is situated about a mile from the river Dart, in the midst of a rich mineral district, and is within the bounds of the Duchy of Cornwall. It was formerly the seat of the Stannary Court. The principal streets are North, South, East, and West Streets. The houses are well built, some of stone, and are roofed with slate, which is quarried in the neighbourhood.—It is a borough by prescription, but not under the Municipal Corporation Act, and is governed by a portreeve, bailiff, constable, and other officers. It returned two representatives to parliament, once in the reign of Edward I., and again in the reign of Henry IV. Its ancient privilege was restored in 1640, and exercised thenceforward till the Reform Bill; since which it has returned one representative. The portreeve is returning officer. The bounds of the borough and of the parish are co-extensive, including 6,936 acres, and a population of 3,062, according to the census of 1861, against 3,432 in 1851, showing a decrease of 370 in the decennial period, principally owing to emigration.—The manufacture of serge for the East India Company, which was the principal branch of industry, and employed 600 looms, is still carried on, but to a much smaller extent than formerly. The value of the yearly produce of these looms was estimated at £100,000. The tin and copper mines, formerly celebrated, are still worked. There are fulling-mills, and mills for spinning yarn, two blanket manufactories, two curriers, and a market garden.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. with the curs. of Bickington and Buckland-in-the-Moor, £639, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, which was collegiate, is dedicated to St. Andrew. It is a cruciform building, with a central tower 94 feet high, in the perpendicular style. The chancel has several stalls. Among the tombs of the Dunnings is that of John Dunning, the great lawyer, who took the title of Baron Ashburton. He was a native of this town (1731), and died in 1783. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans have chapels here. There is a free grammar school, which was founded by William Blundell, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and endowed by several persons subsequently. The ancient chantry of St. Lawrence which adjoins the church has been used as the schoolhouse since the Reformation. The grammar school has connected with it two scholarships and an exhibition at Exeter College, Oxford. Its revenue is £60. In the free school, endowed in 1754 by the members for the borough, Lord Middleton and John Harris, Esq., 100 children are instructed. It has a revenue of £115. In 1805, Mary Dunning founded a school for ten girls. The charities of this parish amount altogether to £382. A new market-house has been erected in place of the old one, which had fallen to decay. This town was the birthplace of Gifford, editor of the "Quarterly Review," and of Dr. Ireland, Dean of Westminster. A market for wool and yarn is held on Tuesday, one for corn and provisions on Saturday. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in March and June, and the first Tuesdays in August and November, for horses and sheep.

ASHBURY, a par. in the hund. of Shrivenham, in the co. of Berks, 7 miles to the S.W. of Farringdon. Shrivenham is its post town. It is situated near the Great Western railway, and contains the tythgs. of Idstone and Odstone, and the hmlt. of Kingstone-Winslow. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £375, in the patron. of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are charities amounting to £14 per annum. The famous White Horse Hill, so named from the figure of a horse formed by a broad cutting in the chalk, is near Ashbury. The Roman Ikneild Street, also called Ridge Way, runs near the village. And in the neighbourhood are Wayland Smith's cave, and the remains of a camp of Alfred the Great.

ASHBURY, a par. in the hund. of Black Torrington, in the co. of Devon, 5 miles to the N.W. of Okehampton. Hatherleigh is its post town. A branch of the river Torridge runs through it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £96, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The principal residence is Ashbury House.

ASHBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Litton Cheney, hund. of Uggscombe, in the co. of Dorset, 8 miles from Dorchester.

ASHBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Bottesford, eastern div. of the wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the N.W. of Brigg.

ASHBY, or ASHBY-WITH-OBY, a par. in the western div. of the hund. of Flegg, in the co. of Norfolk, 11 miles to the N.E. of Norwich. Ade is its post town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with those of Oby and Thirne, which are annexed to it, £690, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHBY, a par. in the hund. of Loddon, in the co. of Norfolk, 8 miles to the S.E. of Norwich, its post town, and 3 S.W. of Buckenham railway station. The living is a rect. annexed to that of Carleton St. Peter, in the dioc. of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The register dates from 1620. The tithes have been commuted for £176 per annum. A new rectory house was built in 1858.

ASHBY, a par. in the hund. of Mutford, in the co. of Suffolk, 5 miles to the N.W. of Lowestoft, its post town. The river Waveney flows near it on the W., and Fritton Decoy lies to the N. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £214, in the patron. of Sir S. M. Peto. The church, which is thatched, and has a circular tower with octangular top, is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHBY, CANONS, a par. in the hund. of Green's Norton, in the co. of Northampton, 8 miles to the N.W. of Towcester. Banbury is its post town. It is situated on the river Cherwell, and includes the hmlt. of Adstone. This place takes its name from a priory of Black Canons which was founded here about the time of King John by Stephen de Leye. At the Dissolution it had a revenue of £127 19*s.*, and was given to Sir F. Bryan. The chapel of the monastery still remains, and is used as the parish church. It is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains several monuments of the Drydens. The living is a discharged cur. in the dioc. of Peterborough and patron. of Sir E. L. Dryden, Bart. Canons Ashby House is the seat of the Drydens. It has one room, 30 by 20 feet, floored and panelled with oak from a single tree which grew on the estate.

ASHBY, CASTLE, a par. in the hund. of Wymersley, in the co. of Northampton, 7 miles to the E. of Northampton, its post town. It lies near the Northampton and Peterborough railway, and a little to the S. of the river Nen. It includes the hmlt. of Chadstone. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £238, in the patron. of the Marquis of Northampton. The church, which stands in the park, is very ancient. It has a porch in the Norman style, a brass of the year 1401, and the monument of a crusader. It is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. Castle Ashby House is the seat of the Marquis of Northampton. The older part of the mansion, which encloses a quadrangle, was erected by Henry, Lord Compton, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The more modern parts were built under the direction of Inigo Jones. There is a good collection of pictures in the hall, including some interesting portraits; among them are two curious portraits, painted on board, of John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, and Margaret his wife; and one of the Rev. Edward Lye, antiquary, and author of an Anglo-Saxon and Gothic Dictionary (1772). The library contains some valuable old books. The approach to the hall is by a fine avenue, nearly 3 miles long. The park was planned by Brown.

ASHBY, COLD, a par. in the hund. of Guilsborough, in the co. of Northampton, 11 miles to the N.W. of Northampton. Welford is its post town. It is situated near the Union canal. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £230, in the patron. of the Rev. W. Mousley, vicar. The church contains a monument to Sir John Langham, Bart. (1671), and is dedicated to St. Dennis. The free school was founded and endowed in 1710 by William Wickes, and further endowed, in 1736, by Richard Eward. Its present income is £23. The parochial charities amount altogether to £43. This village was the birthplace (1543) of Richard Knolles, author of "The History of the Turks." The Pytchley hounds meet here.

ASHBY-CUM-FENBY, a par. in the wap. of Bradley Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the S. of Great Grimsby, its post town. It is situated on the Wolds. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £310, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is an almshouse with an endowment of £30 a year.

ASHBY-DE-LA-LAUNDE, a par. in the wap. of Flaxwell, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the N. of Sleaford, its post town. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £299, in the patron. of J. W. King, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Hybald. There are charities amounting to £9. The principal residence is Ashby Launde House, the seat of the King family. It was erected in 1595.

ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, a par. and market-town in the hund. of West Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 14 miles to the S. of Derby, and 115 miles from London by road, or 123¼ by rail. It is situated on the Leicester and Burton branch of the Midland railway, which has a station here, and about 3 miles to the N.E. of the Ashby canal. It comprises the chplries. of Woodville and Blackfordby, and the village of Moira. The old form of the name of this parish was Asce-bi, or Esseby, and is probably derived from asc, "ash," and the Danish bye, "dwelling." The addition de la Zouch it took from the family of that name, into whose possession the manor came in the reign of Henry III., and who held it to the end of the 14th century. In the reign of Edward IV.,

Sir William Hastings, who was created Baron Hastings of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, erected a castle here. In this place he was beheaded by Richard III. Mary Queen of Scots was some time imprisoned here, in the custody of the Earl of Huntingdon. In 1603, the castle was visited by Anne, the queen of James I., and Prince Henry, and in 1617 by the king himself. It was garrisoned for Charles I., who was entertained there in 1645; and after a siege of several months it was taken by Fairfax. It was subsequently surrendered to Colonel Needham, and was dismantled, according to the order of the House of Commons, in 1648.—The town, which is well paved, and lighted with gas, stands in a pleasant valley, through which runs the small river Mease, on the borders of Derbyshire. It consists of one principal street and several others parallel to it. The principal employments are the manufacture of stockings, hats, and bricks, and the smelting of iron ore, which is obtained in the Wolds. There is also an extensive manufactory for bookbinders' leather, &c. The Ivanhoe Baths, erected by the Marquis of Hastings, in 1820, is a handsome edifice, of the Ionic order of architecture, well fitted up for the accommodation of invalids. The water of the baths is supplied by springs in the neighbouring collieries; it contains much salt and some bromine, and is useful in cases of rheumatism, scrofula, &c. The Royal Hotel, which adjoins the baths, is a handsome building in the same style of architecture, and is fitted up expressly for the accommodation of families visiting the baths. The town contains a theatre, union workhouse for 300 inmates, reading-room, parochial library, gas-works, bank, and several good lodging-houses. There is a bridge over the Mease, and extensive waterworks, constructed in 1854, for the supply of the town. Petty sessions are held here. It is the seat of a county court and the head of a union. It is governed by a constable and two headboroughs, chosen annually in October, and a local Board of Health. This parish is the largest in the shire, and has mines of coal, lead, ironstone, and limestone; Moira colliery, which is very extensive, is situated 3½ miles to the W. of the town. At the adjoining hamlet of Woodville, fire-clay is found, from which earthenware and fire bricks are made.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £417, in the patron. of the Marquis of Hastings. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. It is a large and handsome edifice of stone, with chapels on each side of the chancel, and a peal of 8 bells. In one of the chapels are the tombs of the Hastings family, and monuments to the Earls of Huntingdon. Here is the tomb of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, founder of a religious sect named after her. Her bust, by Rysbrack, is placed on the tomb of the earl. The church possesses a curious instrument, called a "finger pillory," in which the fingers of disorderly persons might be ingeniously fitted and squeezed; it is placed on two posts under the organ gallery. At the west end of the town is a handsome district church, in the early English style, called Trinity chapel, which was built in 1838. The living, val. £180, is in the patron. of the vicar. There is also another district church at the village of Woodville. The Independents, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, Baptists, and the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, have places of worship here. The Independent chapel is a building of some pretensions, founded in 1675, and rebuilt in 1825 at the cost of £2,000. There is a free grammar school, which was founded by the Earl of Huntingdon in 1567, having a revenue of £840. There are connected with it, and the school at Derby, ten exhibitions at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. It has five masters, two classical, and three English. There is a blue coat school, established in 1669 by Isaac Dawson, and a green coat school, endowed by Alderman Newton; the former having an endowment of £50, the latter of £36. An endowment of £50 a year, by the Rev. Simeon Ash, is applied partly to apprenticing poor boys and partly to the relief of the poor. The parochial charities amount altogether to £1,076.—The town is connected with the canal by a tram railroad. The canal, which is on a level and without a single lock, is nearly thirty miles in length: extending from Moira, in the par. of Ashby, through Market Bosworth and Hickley, to the Coventry canal, near Nuneaton. There are extensive remains of the ancient castle on the south side of the town. It was surrounded by three parks, one of which was ten miles in circuit. The building was partly of brick and partly of stone, and had two fine towers. An apartment among the ruins is still called Mary Queen of Scots' room. Ashby House, a seat of the Marquis of Hastings, stands on the site of the castle. The neighbouring Wolds contain abundance of ironstone, and there is a coal-field extending over an area of about 160 square miles. The Marquis is the owner of the pits opened at Moira, Swadlincote, Oakthorpe, and Donnisthorpe. Bishop Hall was a native of this town, a pupil at the grammar school, and subsequently a master there. He was born in 1574. Dr. John Bainbridge, mathematician, was born here in 1582. The market is held on Saturday, principally for grain and agricultural produce. Fairs are held on Shrove Tuesday, Easter Tuesday, Whit Tuesday, and the 10th of November, for the sale of horses and cattle, and a statute fair for hiring servants on the last Monday in September.

ASHBY EAST, or ASHBY-BY-PARTNEY, a par. in the Wold div. of the wap. of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 2 miles to the E. of Spilsby, its post town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £157, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

ASHBY-FOLVILLE, a par. in the eastern div. of the hund. of East Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 6 miles to the S.W. of Melton Mowbray, its post town, and 5 E. of Syston railway station. It is situated on a branch of the river Wreke, and includes the chplry. of Barsby. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £140, in the patron. of the Rev. W. Acworth. The church, which is in the decorated English style, is dedicated to St. Mary. There is an almshouse, founded in 1673, by Francis, Lord Carrington, and endowed with an estate in Lincolnshire producing about £200 per annum. It was designed for the benefit of seven poor men of this and two other parishes. A new national school has lately been built, and is supported by subscription. Edward Cheney, Esq., is lord of the manor.

ASHBY MAGNA, a par. in the hund. of Guthlaxton, in the co. of Leicester, 4 miles to the N.E. of Lutterworth, its post town. It lies on a pleasant slope not far from the Midland railway. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £200, in the patron. of the Earl of Aylesford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHBY-MEARS, a par. in the hund. of Hansford-shoe, in the co. of Northampton, 3 miles to the S.W. of Wellingborough. Northampton is its post town. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £235, in the patron. of Mrs. M. Newby's Trustees. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Ashby-Mears House is the principal residence.

ASHBY PARVA, a par. in the hund. of Guthlaxton, in the co. of Leicester, 3 miles to the N. of Lutterworth, its post town. It is situated on high ground, about a mile from Ullesthorpe station, on the Midland railway. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £260, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, which is ancient, is dedicated to St. Peter. There are almshouses for 8 poor women, founded and endowed in 1832 by Lucy Goodacre and Sarah Bowyer. Each inmate receives £11 10s. a year. A free school for 8 boys and another for 10 girls were established by the same persons. There are several other charities.

ASHBY-PUERORUM, a par. in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the N.E. of Horncastle. Spilsby is its post town. It is situated on the Wolds, and comprises the hmlt. of Stainsby and the ext. par. lib. of Holbeck. The addition to the name of the parish was made in consequence of the gift of an estate here to the choristers of Lincoln cathedral. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £118, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church, which is old, is dedicated to St. Andrew. Roman relics have been discovered in the neighbourhood of the church.

ASHBY ST. LEGERS, a par. in the hund. of Fawsley, in the co. of Northampton, 4 miles to the N. of Daventry. Rugby is its post town. It is situated near the borders of Warwickshire and the London and North Western railway. The Roman road, Watling Street, runs on the western side of the parish, and the Grand Junction and Oxford canals pass within a short distance east and west of it. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £130, in the patron. of Lady Senhouse. The church is dedicated to St. Leodegar, or Ledger, and is in the perpendicular style of architecture. It contains a beautifully ornamented screen, a rood loft, several piscinas, and tombs with brasses of the Catesby family. The ancient seat of the Catesbys was in this parish. Among them were William Catesby, the favourite of Richard III., the "Cat" of the well-known rhyme, and Robert Catesby, the associate of Guy Faux in the Gunpowder Plot. Ashby Legers Manor House is the seat of Lady Senhouse. Ashby Lodge, which has a collection of pictures by old masters, and is surrounded by beautiful grounds, is the seat of G. H. Arnold, Esq. This village is a meet for the Pytchley hounds.

ASHBY, WEST, a par. in the soke of Horncastle, parts of Lincoln, in the co. of Lincoln, 2 miles to the N.E. of Horncastle, its post town. It contains the hmlts. of Farthorpe and Middlethorpe. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £54, in the patron. of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Ashby Thorpe House is the principal residence.

ASHCHURCH, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. of Tewkesbury, in the co. of Gloucester, 2 miles to the N.E. of Tewkesbury, its post town. It lies on the borders of Worcestershire, and comprises the tythgs. of Aston-upon-Carron, Fiddington-with-Natton, Northway-with-Newton, and Pamington. It is a station on the Bristol and Birmingham section of the Midland Counties railway. The river Carron flows through the parish. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £270, in the patron. of the Rev. J. Askew, incumbent. The church is chiefly in the perpendicular style, with a tower, and has a Norman porch. It is dedicated to St. Nicholas. This parish has a mineral spring of similar character to the Cheltenham waters.

The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £909, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The parochial charities, including a small endowment for a free school, amount to £21. On the eastern borders of this parish are four barrows of a pyramidal form, called Bartlow Hills, conjectured by some to be the burial-places of those who fell at the battle of Assandune, which was fought in 1016 between Canute and Edmund Ironside. Chains and stone coffins have been discovered within one of them, and Roman coins are found near them. This battle is referred by others to Ashingdon. Ashdon Park is the seat of the Pipers.

ASHE, a tythg. in the par. of Netherbury, in the hund. of Beaminster Forum, in the co. of Dorset, 1 mile from Beaminster. The living is a perpet. cur. united with the vic. of Netherbury, in the dioc. of Salisbury.

ASHE, a tythg. in the par. of Stourpain, in the hund. of Pimperne, in the co. of Dorset, 3 miles to the N.W. of Blandford. It is watered by the river Stour.

ASHE, a par. in the hund. of Overton, Kingsclere div. of the co. of Southampton, 5 miles to the E. of Whitchurch, its post town. The South Western railway runs near it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £410, in the patron. of W. H. Beach, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The principal residences are Ashe Park and Oakley Hall; at the former of which the Vine hounds meet.

ASHELDHAM, a par. in the hund. of Dengie, in the co. of Essex, 9 miles to the S.E. of Maldon. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £339, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There are traces of an old intrenchment.

ASHELWORTH, Gloucestershire. See ASHLEWORTH.

ASHEN, a par. in the hund. of Hinckford, in the co. of Essex, 2 miles to the S.W. of Clare. Sudbury is its post town. It is situated on the borders of Suffolk, on the south bank of the river Stour. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £300, in the patron. of the Duchy of Lancaster. It is said that an Augustine priory existed here in the reign of Edward II. Ashen House is the principal residence.

ASHENDON HUNDRED, one of the eight subdivisions of the co. of Buckingham, situated in the western part of the co., and bounded on the N. by Buckingham hund., on the E. by Cottesloe hund., on the S.E. by Aylesbury hund., and on the W. and S.W. by Oxfordshire. It contains the following pars.:—Ashendon, Aston-Sandford, Boarstall, Brill, Chearsley, Chilton, East Claydon, Middle Claydon, Crendon, Dorton, Grandborough, Grendon-under-Wood, Hogshaw, Illmer, or Illmire, Ludgershall, Fleet Marston, North Marston, Oakley, Oving, Pitchcott, Quainton, Quarrendon, Shabbington, Towersey, Waddesdon, Upper Winchendon, Nether Winchendon, Wootton-under-Wood, and Worminghall, with parts of the pars. of Beckley, Dinton, Ickford, and Kingsey. The hund. has an area of 66,670 acres.

ASHENDON, a par. in the hund. of Ashendon, in the co. of Buckingham, 8 miles to the W. of Aylesbury. Thame is its post-town. Pollicot is a hmlt. of this par. In the middle of the 7th century, the partition of the kingdom of Wessex by Kenwealh and Cuthred was arranged at Æscesdune, the king conceding to his nephew 300 hides of land, and in 871 it was the scene of a battle, in which the Danes were defeated by Ethelred I. and Alfred. Much doubt exists as to the site of this battle: Dr. Kennet contends for Ashendon; but Gough identifies it with Ashdown Park, near East Ilsley, and he is followed by Benjamin Thorpe, the editor of the "Saxon Chronicle;" while Bishop Gibson assigns it to Aston Tirold, in Berkshire. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. with that of Dorton, £106, in the patron. of Christ Church College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains an ancient monument with the effigy of a Crusader, who was probably a Stafford, of the family to which the manor of Pollicot belonged. Petty sessions are held in the village.

ASHERIDGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Chesham and hund. of Burnham, in the co. of Buckingham, 2 miles from Chesham.

ASHFIELD, a vil. in the par. of Killersherdinny, bar. of Tullygarvey, in the co. of Cavan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the W. of Cootehill. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, val. £109, in the patron. of the incumbent. Ashfield Lodge, the seat of the Clements, is situated on a hill at the foot of which the river Cootehill flows.

ASHFIELD, a tnshp. united with Rutton, in the par. of Priors Ditton, Wenlock lib., in the co. of Salop, 7 miles from Much Wenlock.

ASHFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Thredling, in the co. of Suffolk, 3 miles to the E. of Debenham, its post town, and 12 N. of Ipswich. It contains the chplry. of Thorpe. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £53, in the patron. of Lord Henniker, who is also lord of the manor, and impropriator of the great tithes, which have been commuted for £465 per annum. The church, after having been in ruins for more than a century, was rebuilt of brick in 1853, by Lord Henniker, at a cost of £2000. Previously Thorpe Chapel, erected in 1739, supplied the place of the parish church; but since the opening of the new church the chapel has been pulled down, the tower only being left standing to serve as a cemetery chapel.

ASHFIELD, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Blackbourn, in the co. of Suffolk, 7 miles to the N.W. of Stowmarket, 2 N. of Elmswell railway station, and 6 from Ixworth, its post town. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £54, in the patron. of Lord Thurlow. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small brick building, with tower. There is an endowment, founded in 1620 by Nicholas Fyrmage, for the maintenance of a weekly lecture in the parish church, and for the benefit of the poor. Its present amount is nearly £100 per annum. There are some other small charities. Ashfield Lodge, a neat brick mansion, is the seat of Lord Thurlow, who is chief proprietor and lord of the manor. This was the birthplace of Lord Chancellor Thurlow (1732), and his brother the bishop of Durham, whose father held the living of Ashfield.

ASHFORD, a tnshp. and chplry. in the par. of Bakewell, hund. of High Peak, in the co. of Derby, 2 miles to the N.W. of Bakewell. It is situated in a district of great beauty in the valley of the Wye, and was anciently part of the demesnes of the crown. Marble of very fine quality, of black and grey colour, is found in the neighbourhood. It lies in beds of from 3 to 9 inches in thickness, at a depth of about 40 feet below the surface. It is sawn and polished at the works which were established here in 1748, and which were the first of the kind in England. The stocking manufacture is also carried on here, and employs about a hundred frames. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £102, in the patron. of the vicar of Bakewell. The church has been rebuilt, but an ancient porch is preserved, on which are some curious sculptures, supposed to represent the animals which dwelt in the Peak forest. A castle formerly stood here, in which the earls of Kent, and afterwards the earls of Westmoreland, resided; nothing remains of it but the moat. At Finnhead are remains of a Saxon encampment, or Roman station, and two barrows. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists. Also a Unitarian chapel, erected by William Bagshaw, called "the Apostle of the Peak." Ashford Hall, a fine seat on the banks of the Wye, belonging to the dukes of Devonshire, is at present the seat of the Hon. G. H. Cavendish, M.P. The other residences are Church Dale, a mansion of recent construction; Thornbridge, and the Rookery, situated on the banks of the Wye, in which trout and grayling abound. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor.

ASHFORD, a par. in the hund. of Braunton, in the co. of Devon, 2 miles to the N.W. of Barnstaple, its post-town. It is bounded on the S. by the navigable river Taw Torr). The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £110, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a new stone building in the early decorated Gothic style of architecture, with a tower and spire, and was rebuilt in 1854 at a cost of £500. The Baptists have a chapel, and there is a national school. Ashford House is the principal residence.

ASHFORD, a par. and market-town in the hund. of Chart and Longbridge, lathe of Scray, in the co. of Kent, 14 miles from Canterbury, 20 miles to the S.E. of Maidstone, and 53 miles by road from London, or 67 miles by the South Eastern railway, on which it is a chief station. It is also the point of junction with the Canterbury and Hastings branch railways. It is situated in a pleasant and fertile district on the Essbe, or Essbet, the west branch of the river Stour; the town being built on a gentle eminence overlooking the Weald. The name of this place in Domesday Book is Estefort, and it belonged at that period to Hugo de Montford. It passed subsequently to the family of the Asshetesfords, and through other houses in succession, till it became part of the endowment of St. Stephen's Chapel, Westminster. In the reign of Edward VI., it was granted to Sir Anthony Aucher, Knt. Since the close of the 17th century the estates have become separated by sale and otherwise.—The town is well built, paved, and lighted. The High Street is about half a mile in length, and the shops of handsome appearance. A new market-house has been erected, with townhall and assembly rooms. There are two banks, a savings-bank, and two mechanics' institutes, with large libraries. Besides the buildings which have been erected near the railway station, a new town is growing up on the south side of Ashford, the property of the South Eastern railway company. It was named Alfred, but is commonly spoken of as Newtown. A small part of Newtown is not included in the parish of Ashford, being situated within the limits of Willesborough. Here are the extensive works of the company, erected at a cost of £100,000, and including an engine shed, repairing shop, boiler and wheel shops, smithy, carriage house, &c. The engine shed is 200 feet in length, the repairing shop nearly 400 feet, the carriage house about 650 feet. The machinery is worked by two engines. There are gasworks and waterworks, and a handsome school-house, which is used also as a church. The works give occupation to about a thousand persons, consisting of the population of Newtown, and many of the inhabitants of Ashford. At a short distance from the church is a new cemetery, with two chapels. The river is crossed by a stone bridge of one arch. Linen weaving is carried on in the town, and the cattle markets, which are held at short intervals, are among the largest in the county. Ashford is the seat of a County Court district and a Poor-law Union. Polling for the county takes place here, and petty sessions are held once a month.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £460, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a large and handsome building, in the form of a cross, in the perpendicular style, with a lofty tower at the intersection of the transepts. The tower was erected in the reign of Edward IV., by Sir John Fogge, who restored the church and founded a college. The college building has been modernised, and now serves as the vicarage. The tomb of Sir John Fogge is near the altar. It had brasses of himself and his two wives; but they are lost or mutilated. In front of the altar-steps is a brass of Elizabeth, Countess of Athol, who died in 1375. A small chapel on the south side of the church contains three fine marble monuments of the Smyths of Westenhanger, former owners of the manor of Ashford. There is an octagonal font sculptured with roses and blank shields. There are chapels belonging to the Society of Friends, Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, the Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Independents. The free grammar school, which was founded by Sir Norton Knatchbull in 1636, has an endowment of £30 per annum. The national school, for 90 boys, has an endowment of £20 a year, bequeathed by Dr. Thomas Turner in 1702. The revenue of the church lands is £184. The charities of the parish mount altogether to £309. The custom of gavelkind prevails in the manor. Ashford is the birth-place of several distinguished men. Richard Glover, the antiquary, was born here in 1542. His nephew, Thomas Milles, also a native, was eminent as a herald and genealogist. Here, too, was born, in 1616, Dr. John Wallis, the mathematician; his father being vicar of Ashford. The market is held on Tuesday and Saturday. On the first and third Tuesday of each month the cattle market is held, which is considered one of the largest in the county; numbers of sheep and bullocks being brought from Romsey Marsh. Fairs take place on the 17th May, the 9th September, and the 12th and 24th October, for horses, cattle, and pedlary. There are races once a year. Ashford gives the title of baron to the Keppels, Earls of Albemarle.

ASHFORD, a hmlt. in the par. of Killeedy, bar. of Glenquin, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 6 miles to the S. of Newcastle.

ASHFORD, a par. in the hund. of Spelthorne, in the co. of Middlesex, 2 miles to the E. of Staines. It is a station on the Richmond and Staines branch of the South Western railway, and is situated in a highly cultivated and wooded district. It was formerly a possession of Westminster Abbey, and afterwards a part of the honour of Hampton. Before the lands were enclosed, reviews were frequently held here. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of London, val. £136, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, which is dedicated to St. Matthew, was erected in 1858. There is a Welsh charity school for 200 children, founded in 1857. The building is of stone, in the Elizabethan style of architecture. There are several seats of the nobility and gentry; among which are those of the Duke of Argyll and Lord Kinnoul, Clock House, Ashford Lodge, Ford House, &c.

ASHFORD, a hmlt. in the par. of Ilton, hund. of Abdick and Balstone, in the co. of Somerset, 2 miles from Ilminster.

ASHFORD, a hmlt. in the par. of Rathnew, bar. of Newcastle, in the co. of Wicklow, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 7 miles to the N.E. of Rathdrum. It is situated in a pleasant and fertile country, on the south bank of the river Varty. Rossana, the residence of the Tighes, is in the same parish. Fairs are held on the 27th April, the 24th June, the 8th September, and the 16th December.

ASHFORD-BOWDLER, a par. in the hund. of Lower Munslow, in the co. of Salop, 3 miles to the S.E. of Ludlow. The river Teme runs through it. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £55, in the patron. of C. Walker, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. Andrew. The principal residences are Ashford-Bowdler Court and Ashford-Bowdler Hall.

ASHFORD-CARBONELL, a par. in the hunds. of Stottesden and Munslow, in the co. of Salop, 3 miles to the S. of Ludlow. The living is a rect. annexed to the rect. of Little Hereford, in the dioc. of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHFORDBY, or ASFORDBY, a par. in the eastern div. of the hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 3 miles to the W. of Melton-Mowbray. It is situated on the river Wreak, which connects it with the Leicester and Melton-Mowbray navigation. It is now a station on the Syston and Peterborough branch of the Midland Counties railway. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £455, in the patron. of the Rev. A. Burnaby, who is rector, patron, and lord of the manor. The church, which is dedicated to All Saints, has a square tower surmounted by a spire, and was repaired in 1847. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels here. There is also a small endowed school founded in 1769, by Morris Cam; and a village school, built in 1843 by the rector, at a cost of £400. Some of the inhabitants of the village are employed in stocking-weaving. There is a bridge over the Wreak. The Hall is a handsome modern mansion in the Italian style.

ASHFURLONG, a vil. in the par. of Sutton Colefield, hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick, nearly 2 miles from Sutton Colefield. Ashfurlong Hall is the principal residence.

ASHGILL, a hmlt. in the par. of Coverham, western div. of the wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the S.W. of Middleham.

ASHILL, a par. in the hund. of Wayland, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles N.W. of Walton, and 6 miles to the S.E. of Swaffham railway station. It was anciently the estate of the Hastings family, who held it by the singular tenure of serving the king's linen at the coronation. It is situated on a hill near the river Stoke, and commands an extensive prospect. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £850, in the patron. of the Rev. B. Edwards, incumbent. The church, which is chiefly in the perpendicular style, with a flint tower, is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a national school, established in 1821, and rebuilt in 1848. There are 30 acres of fuel allotment in the parish, besides other allotments; and the charities amount to £36.

ASHILL, a par. in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, in the co. of Somerset, 6 miles to the N. of Chard. Taunton is its post town. The Chard Canal passes near it. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £98, in the patron. of the Prebendary of Ashill, in Wells Cathedral. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In the reign of Edward II., a charter for a weekly market on Wednesday was obtained by Thomas de Multon, then lord of the manor; also for fairs on three Saints' days. A fair is now held on Easter Monday. There is a chalybeate spring, called Skipperham Well, the water of which is considered useful in scorbutic affections.

ASHINGDON, a par. in the hund. of Rochford, in the co. of Essex, 2 miles to the N. of Rochford. Its Saxon name was Assandune, and it is generally considered to be the scene of the great battle between Canute and Edmund Ironside, in 1016, in which the latter was defeated. The camp of the victor is believed to have been fixed at the neighbouring village of Canewdon. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £254, in the patron. of Rev. J. Nottidge. The church, from which there is a fine prospect, is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a charity school with a small endowment.

ASHINGTON, a tnshp. united with the tnshp. of Sheepwash, in the par. of Bothal, Morpeth ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 3 miles to the E. of Morpeth. It is situated near the sea-coast, on the river Wandsbeck.

ASHINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Stone, in the co. of Somerset, 3 miles to the N. of Yeovil. Ilchester is its post town. It lies on the banks of the river Yeo, not far from the borders of Dorsetshire. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £162, in the patron. of the Rev. J. Nottidge. The church is dedicated to St. Vincent. There is an endowment of £3 per annum for the instruction of five boys at the Marston Magna school, founded by Sir J. St. Barbe.

ASHINGTON, a par. in the hund. of West Grinstead, rape of Bramber, in the co. of Sussex, 5 miles to the N.W. of Steyning. Hurstperpoint is its post town. It includes the chplry. of Buncton. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. with the perpet. cur.* of Buncton, £289, in the patron. of the Duke of Norfolk. The tithes have been commuted for £288 per annum. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. There is a chapel of ease at Buncton, which is open only six times a year for divine service; this has been the custom from time immemorial. The village is a meet for Mr. Napper's hounds. Fairs are held on the 29th June and the 21st July, for the sale of cattle and for hiring servants.

ASHKIRK, a par. and postal vil. partly in the co. of Roxburgh, and partly in the co. of Selkirk, Scotland, 3 miles to the S. of Selkirk. It is situated in a fertile and hilly district on the Ale Water, and was formerly the seat of the Bishops of Glasgow. The living, val. £206, is in the presbytery of Selkirk, and in the patron. of the Earl of Minto. The par. extends over an area of about 18 square miles.

ASHLEWORTH, or ASHELWORTH, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Berkeley, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles to the N.W. of Gloucester. It is situated on the north-western bank of the river Severn, which is navigable here. It contains the hmlts. of Longridge, Knight's Green, and several others. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £280, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, which has a tower and spire, is mostly in the perpendicular style, and is dedicated to St. Andrew. Near it is the manor-house, portions of which are very ancient; and the parsonage, a good example of a timbered residence, now occupied as a farmhouse. The parochial charities, including some parish lands, amount to £33. There is a large common in this parish.

ASHLEY, a par. in the hund. of Cheveley, in the co. of Cambridge, 3½ miles to the E. of Newmarket, and 63 from London. It includes the hmlt. of Silverley. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ely, val. with the vic.* of Silverley, £150, in the patron. of the Hon. W. R. J. North. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was built in 1845. There is a national school. The Hon. W. H. North is lord of the manor.

ASHLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Bowdon, and hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the S. of Altrincham. The river Bollin runs near it. Ashley Hall is the principal residence. It was the seat of the Asshetons, and has a collection of portraits of county gentlemen who resolved not to aid the Pretender.

ASHLEY, a par. in the hund. of Buddlesgate, in the co. of Southampton, 3 miles to the S.E. of Stockbridge, its post town. The Andover canal passes near it on the W., and the South Western railway on the E. It is 7 miles from the Winchester station. ASHOVER, a par. in the hunds. of Scarsdale and Wirksworth, in the co. of Derby, 6 miles to the S.W. of Chesterfield, 3 W. from Stretton railway station, and 18 N. of Derby. It is situated in a deep valley on the river Amber, and comprises the vil. of Ashover and the hmlts. of Dethwick-Lea and Holloway. The Midland Counties railway passes near it, and has a station at Stretton. Ashover was at one time a market-town, and it had a church as early as the period of the Conquest. The district contains some ironstone and millstone, and small quantities of coal and lead have also been found. The stocking manufacture and the working of lace furnish employment to some of the inhabitants. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £600, in the patron. of the Rev. Jos. Nodder, rural dean of Ashover, and the present incumbent. The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is an ancient building, having been erected in 1419, with a fine spire rising out of a square embattled tower, and contains a curious old font with twenty small compartments round it, each enclosing a figure in a devotional attitude. These figures are embossed in lead. The church contains also some brasses, and several tombs of the Babington family, whose seat was at Dethwick. Of this family was Anthony Babington, who was executed in 1586, for conspiracy against Queen Elizabeth. In the chancel is a fine Gothic obituary window of stained glass, for the Nodder family, inserted in 1845. There is also a district church at Dethwick, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £93, in the gift of T. Hallowes, Esq. There is a small free school, founded in 1703, and endowed in 1819 with £21 per annum; also a girls' school, built of gritstone, at the cost of the rector, in 1840. Near the church is the rectory, a spacious building surrounded by pleasure grounds. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels here. This parish is within the honour of Tutbury, and the jurisdiction of the small debts' court, held there once a fortnight. There are two curious stones on Ashover Common; one a rocking-stone, measuring 26 feet in circumference, and called Robin Hood's Mark; another, called the Turning-stone, about 9 feet high, and somewhat resembling the figure of a man. Overton Hall, a pleasant old residence, embosomed in ancient trees and lofty hills, belonged at one time to Sir Joseph Banks, the eminent naturalist and companion of Captain Cook, in his famous voyage round the world. Fairs for the sale of cattle are held here on the 25th April, the 15th October, and the 23rd November.

ASHOW, a par. in the Kenilworth div. of the hund. of Knightlow, in the co. of Warwick, 4 miles to the N.E. of Warwick. Kenilworth is its post town. It is situated on the banks of the river Avon, and was formerly part of the possessions of the abbey of Stoneleigh. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £295, in the patron. of Lord Leigh, of Stoneleigh. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

ASHPERTON, a chplry. and par. in the hund. of Rudlow, in the co. of Hereford, 5 miles to the N.W. of Ledbury. The river Frome runs a little to the north of the parish. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the vic. of Stretton-Grandison, in the dioc. of Hereford. The chapel is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There are charities amounting to £54 per annum. Here was the ancient seat of the Grandisons.

ASHPRINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Coleridge, in the co. of Devon, 2½ miles to the S.E. of Totness, its post town, 7 N.W. of Dartmouth, and 10 S.W. of Torquay. It is situated on a gentle slope at the confluence of the river Harebourn with the Dart, and near the South Devon railway. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £539, in the patron. of the Rev. G. T. Carwithen, the incumbent. The church, dedicated to St. David, is a fine old structure, in the perpendicular style of architecture, and was entirely repaired in 1844, at the cost of £1,000. A handsome parochial school was built in 1847, by R. Durant, Esq., of Sharpham House, who is lord of the manor and chief proprietor of the soil. There is also an almshouse and some small charities. Ashprington House is the residence of Gen. Sir G. Adams; and Pensford House is an ancient mansion on the banks of the river Harebourn. The parish is watered by three rivers, the Dart, Harebourn, and Washbourn, and contains the hamlets of Pensford, Yeatson, Washbourn, and a part of Tuckerhay.

ASHREIGNEY, or RING'S ASH, a par. in the hund. of North Tawton and Winkley, in the co. of Devon, 4 miles to the W. of Chumleigh, its post town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £335, in the patron. of the Rev. J. T. Johnson. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a school endowed by Mrs. Pyncombe with £10 a year.

ASHSHENESS, in the Shetland Islands, Scotland, was formerly a separate par., but is now united with Northmaven.

ASHTEAD, a par. in the second div. of the hund. of Copthorne, in the co. of Surrey, 2 miles to the S.W. of Epsom. It is a station on the Epsom and Leatherhead branch of the South Western railway, and is situated in a district of great natural beauty. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £499, in the patron. of the heirs of the late Hon. F. G. Howard. The church stands in the park, and is dedicated to St. Giles. It contains monuments of the Howards. An almshouse for six widows was founded and endowed by Lady Fielding, with £32 per annum. There is an endowed charity school, and another school established and supported by the Howards. Ashtead Park, the seat of the Howard family, is a beautiful and well-wooded estate. Charles II. was frequently entertained here by Sir Robert Howard. The present mansion is a modern building on the site of the original one. Ashtead has a mineral spring of similar properties to that of Epsom.

ASHTED, a suburb of Birmingham, a chplry. in the par. of Aston, hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick. Here are the Vauxhall pleasure gardens, and the horse barracks, established in 1793. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £210, in the gift of trustees. The church is dedicated to St. James.

ASHTON, or ASHTON-HAYES, a tnshp. in the par. of Tarvin, and hund. of Eddisbury, in the co. palatine of Chester, 6 miles to the N.E. of Chester. It lies not far from Delamere Forest. The living is a perpet. cur., val. £160, in the dioc. of Chester, and in the gift of W. Atkinson, Esq.

ASHTON, a tnshp. and par. containing two vils. called the Upper and Lower Town, in the hund. of Exminster, in the co. of Devon, 3½ miles to the N.W. of Chudleigh, its post town, and 8 S.W. of Exeter. It is situated in a hilly and wooded country, on a branch of the river Teign, over which is a picturesque old stone bridge, built in 1604, and the view on either side is very charming. There are several manganese mines in the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £230, in the patron. of the Rev. G. Ware. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and contains a rood-loft and a screen of wood, beautifully carved. A national school has recently been erected. An almshouse here is endowed with £4 a year, the gift of John Stooke, in 1691, and there is a small sum bequeathed by Jane Shepherd, for the instruction of two children. The parish has an area of 1,709 acres, the sole property of Viscount Exmouth, who is lord of the manor, except only the glebe lands and one field called Chudleigh Scrimscratt, which tradition reports was lost at a game of cards by the former possessor of the manor, Sir Geo. Chudleigh. Barton in this parish was the original seat of the Chudleigh family, who were lords of the manor from 1320 to 1745, when Sir James Chudleigh was killed at Ostend, and the baronetcy became extinct.

ASHTON, a tythg. in the par. of Bishop's Waltham, and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Southampton, 1 mile from Bishop's Waltham.

ASHTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Eye, and hund. of Wolphy, in the co. of Hereford, 4 miles to the N.E. of Leominster. It is united with the tnshp. of Moreton, and lies near the canal.

ASHTON, a tnshp. united with Stodday, in the par. of Lancaster, hund. of Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 3 miles to the S. of Lancaster. It is situated on the Preston canal and the river Lune, and the Preston railway runs near it. Ashton Hall is the seat of the Duke of Hamilton. It is an ancient hall, standing in a fine park on the banks of the Lune, and having a prospect over Morecambe Bay. Ashton House is the seat of Sir J. Walmsley.

ASHTON, or ASHTON-ON-RIBBLE, a tnshp. in the par. of Preston, and hund. of Amounderness, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles to the W. of Preston. It is united with the tnshp. of Lea. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £106, in the patron. of the Vicar of Preston. Ashton Bank is the principal residence.

ASHTON, a par. in the hund. of Cleley, in the co. of Northampton, 6 miles to the S. of Northampton. Roade is its post town. The London and North-Western railway passes through the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £275, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, which contains two altar tombs and a monument of a knight, is dedicated to St. Michael. The parochial charities amount to £20. The inhabitants of Ashton have a right of common in the neighbouring forest of Salcey.

ASHTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Oundle and hund. of Polebrook, in the co. of Northampton, 1 mile from Oundle. The Peterborough railway and the river Nen pass within a short distance of this hamlet.

ASHTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Ufford and lib. of Peterborough, in the co. of Northampton, 5 miles to the S.E. of Stamford. Ashton Wold in this hmlt. is a meet for the Fitzwilliam hounds.

ASHTON, COLD, Gloucestershire. See COLD ASHTON.

ASHTON-GIFFORD, a tnshp. in the par. of Codford St. Peter, hund. of Heytesbury, in the co. of Wilts, 2 miles to the S.E. of Heytesbury. The river Wiley runs through this township. It was formerly the estate of the Giffords of Brimsfield.

ASHTON GREEN, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Parr, and par. of Prescott, hund. of Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles from St. Helens.

ASHTON-IN-MACKERFIELD, or ASHTON-LE-WILLOWS, a tnshp. in the par. of Winwick and hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles to the N.W. of Newton. Wigan is its post town. It contains the hmlts. of Ashton Heath, Downall Green, and several others. The Wigan and Newton railway passes near the village on the east. There are in the surrounding district many collieries, potteries, and cotton-mills, in which most of the population are employed. The manufacture of locks, screws, nails, tools, &c., are also carried on here. There are two benefices, a rect.* val. £550, in the patron. of the Earl of Derby, and a vic.* val. £245, in the gift of the Rector of Ashton; both in the dioc. of Chester. The church of the latter is dedicated to St. Thomas, that of the former to the Holy Trinity. The Roman Catholics, Unitarians, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, Quakers, and Independents, have chapels here. The charitable endowments amount to £130 a year. There are two schools belonging to the Church of England, and one to the Roman Catholics.

ASHTON KEYNES, a par. and tnshp. in the hund. of Highworth, in the co. of Wilts, 4 miles to the W. of Cricklade, its post town, 3 N. of Minety station on the Cheltenham railway, and 88 from London. It is pleasantly situated on the river Isis, or Thames, not far from the borders of Gloucestershire, and includes the chplry. of Leigh. The river, which flows on one side of the street, is crossed by numerous bridges leading to the several houses, which give the place a picturesque appearance. There are remains of four ancient stone crosses, and part of the monastery surrounded by a moat, and now converted into a farmhouse. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £325, in the patron. of J. Pitt, Esq. The church, an ancient edifice, is dedicated to the Holy Cross. There are also two dissenting chapels. The parochial charities amount to £119, including the endowment of a free school for boys and girls. Ashton Keynes House is the principal residence.

ASHTON, LONG, a par. in the hund. of Hartcliffe-with-Bedminster, in the co. of Somerset, 2 miles to the S.W. of Bristol. It is situated in a wooded valley of great beauty, on the river Avon, which separates it from Gloucestershire, and at the foot of the Dundry hills. The village occupies the slope of Ashton Hill, and from the road which passes through it there are charming views of the valley, the river, Bristol, Clifton, and the scattered villages in Gloucestershire. In this par. are comprised the hmlts. of Bower-Ashton, Kingcott, Providence, Yanleigh and Rownham. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £450, in the patron. of W. G. Langton, Esq., and Sir J. Smyth, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints. It was built in 1390, and contains a very fine canopied tomb, with effigies of Sir Richard Choke and his lady. The tomb is of stone, decorated profusely with Gothic tracery. The chancel is separated from the nave and aisles by a fine screen, carved and gilt. There are charitable endowments amounting to £156 a year, including a sum of £10 bequeathed by Anne Smith, in 1760, for a school, and an additional £4 by John Stanton, in 1822. Ashton Court, the original seat of the Lyons, is an old mansion, with a modern front, extending 143 feet in length. The new front was erected by Inigo Jones. One of the apartments, 90 feet long and 20 broad, is hung with portraits. There are ruins of another mansion, called the Lower Court, near the village. At the east end of Barrow Common, where the hill terminates abruptly, are the remains of two Roman camps, one called Burwalls, in the form of a triangle, the other Stokeleigh, of an oval form. Roman coins have been frequently dug up in the neighbourhood. Part of the land here is laid out in orchards and fruit gardens, the produce of which is sold in the Bristol market. The Bedminster union house is in this parish.

ASHTON STEEPLE, a tnshp., par., and large vil., in the hund. and div. of Whorwellsdown, in the co. of Wilts, 4 miles to the N.E. of Westbury, the same E. of Trowbridge, its post town, and 9 S.E. of Devizes. It lies a little to the S. of the Kennet and Avon canal, and contains the chplries. of West Ashton and Semington, and the tythgs. of Hinton and Littleton. It was formerly a market town, and the surrounding district was a common. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. with the perpet. cur. of Semington, £852, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. The church is a large edifice, in the perpendicular style, partly erected in 1480. It has a battlemented tower, which was formerly surmounted with a lofty spire. From this spire, which was destroyed by a storm in 1670, the parish took the addition to its name. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In addition to the parish church there is a district church at the village of West Ashton. There are a Primitive Methodist chapel and a National school. There is a small endowment for educational purposes. Petty sessions are held here, and a fair takes place on the 18th September. The par. contains 6,789 acres, chiefly the property of Walter Long, Esq., M.P., lord of the manor, who resides at Rood Ashton House, a handsome Gothic mansion, a little west of the village.

ASHTON-UNDER-HILL, a par. in the hund. of Tibaldstone, in the co. of Gloucester, 5 miles to the S.W. of Evesham, its post town. It lies in a fair valley bounded on the N. by Bredon Hill, nearly 1,000 feet high, and commanding fine views over Gloucester, Cheltenham, and Tewkesbury. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the vic. of Beckford, in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Barbara.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE, a par. and market town, parliamentary and municipal borough, in the hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 6 miles to the E. of Manchester, 60 miles from Lancaster, and 194 from London. It is a station on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, the London and North Western, and the Lancashire and Yorkshire railways. Although the name of this place does not occur in Domesday Book, it is mentioned in other ancient records, and appears to have been given by the Conqueror, with other manors in this part of the country, to Roger de Poicton. At a later period it belonged to the family of the Asshetons, several of whom were distinguished men. One of them was Sir John de Assheton, a statesman of great ability, and held in high honour by Edward III. About the commencement of the 16th century the manor passed to the Booths, one of whom was created Baron Delamere by Charles II., and his son was created Earl of Warrington, by William and Mary. In the middle of the 18th century the manor came, by marriage, to the Earl of Stamford, whose descendants still hold it. The parish derives its present importance and prosperity chiefly from the cotton manufacture, which was introduced towards the close of the 18th century. It is situated in a hilly district, with several rivers flowing through fertile nd well-wooded villages, and contains within it imporint elements of manufacturing prosperity, abundance of oal, plenty of water, and clay for brick-making. The own stands on the northern bank of the river Tame.

t is well built, with spacious streets, good shops, and everal handsome mansions. There is a good supply of vater, and the streets are lighted with gas. The town-all, which was built in 1840, is of stone, and of the Corinthian order of architecture. It comprises police ffices, committee-rooms, court-rooms, and a large hall or public purposes. It is situated in the market-square, spacious and convenient place given by the Earl of tamford. There are three banks, one a local, and two ranch banks, and a savings-bank. The Mechanics' nstitute and the Church of England Institute have braries, reading-rooms, and classes for instruction.
There are now about 180 cotton manufactories in the arish, in which above 10,000 persons are employed.
The collieries give occupation to about 2,000 persons.
Other important branches of industry are those of ironounding, silk-weaving, hat-making, &c. The numerous treets of the parish are said to equal a length of 14 niles. Ashton was made a borough by the Reform Act, n 1832, and returns one member to parliament. It be-ame a municipal borough under a charter granted in September, 1847, by which it was divided into 4 wards, nd is governed by a mayor, 8 aldermen, and 24 coun-illors, with the style of the "mayor, aldermen, and orough of Ashton." The boundaries of the parlianentary and municipal boroughs are not conterminous, he latter being the more extensive; accordingly, the nunicipal borough comprises 6,665 houses inhabited by population of 34,894, while the parliamentary has only
,478 houses with a population of 33,925, against 29,791
n 1851, showing an increase of 4,134 in the decennial eriod. There are 4 divisions of the parish which have been recognised from time immemorial: — Ashton, Audenshaw, Knott Lanes, and Hartshead. For local urposes there are many subdivisions. In the Knott Lanes district is the village of Lees; in Hartshead, the orough of Staleybridge, and the growing villages of Mossley and Mossley Bottoms. Polling for the county akes place here, and petty sessions are held. A union workhouse, large enough for 500 poor, was erected in 1850. There are now three churches and eight chapels of ease comprised in Ashton: — St. Michael's, St. Peter's, and Christ Church. The original parish church, dedicated to St. Michael, was built before the close of the 13th century. The present structure is almost entirely new; the tower and one side of the church being rebuilt in 1821, and the other side being rebuilt, and the whole fabric completely restored, in 1844. It is in the perpendicular style, richly ornamented with carved oak and brass work, and having a beautiful stained east window. The living is a rect.* val. £900, in the dioc. of Manchester, and in the patron. of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington. St. Peter's church, erected in 1821, is in the decorated style, having a handsome embattled tower and a circular east window of stained glass. The living is a perpet. cur., val. £150, in the patron. of the rector of Ashton. Christ Church, erected in 1847, is a cruciform building. The living is a perpet.
cur.,* val. £150, in the patron. alternately of the crown and the Bishop of Manchester. The eight chapels of ease, or district churches, as most of them have lately become, are named after their respective districts, Audenshaw, Bardsley, Hurst, Leesfield, Lees or Hey, Mossley, Staleybridge, also called Old St. George's, Staleybridge New St. George's. These will be described under their several headings. There are three places of worship of the Methodist New Connexion; two each for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Roman Catholics; and one each for Independent and Primitive Methodists and Israelites. The charitable endowments for education and relief of the poor amount to £92 per annum. The old Manor Hall, seat of the Asshetons, is the most ancient building in the parish. It stands near St. Michael's church, and was certainly in existence before 1380. No traces of its fortifications remain. The field in front of it, called Gallows Meadow, was the place of summary execution by the feudal lords, who had power of life and death over their serfs. Railway trains now run across this meadow, and warehouses are built on it. Not far from the Old Hall are the old corn mills of the manor. A curious ceremony of unknown origin, called "the riding of the black lad," is still observed here. On Easter Monday the figure of a man in black armour is carried on horseback through the streets, taken down at the Old Cross and shot at. Some suppose the black lad to be a tyrannous Sir Rauf de Assheton, whose name is commemorated in a rude rhyme still familiar to the common people. According to a less popular opinion, the custom was designed to celebrate the valour of Thomas de Assheton, who, at Neville's Cross, in 1346, captured the royal Scotch banner.
The Huddersfield canal, part of the inland line connecting the Irish Sea with the German Ocean, passes through Ashton. Two other canals, one 8 miles, the other 6 miles in length, connect the town with Manchester. There are branch canals to Stockport and Oldham.
There is an extensive moss or quaking bog near the town, in which whole oaks and fir trees are found deposited. The bed of moss is ten feet thick, and rests on a loamy soil capable of cultivation. It is under process of drainage and reclamation by the lord of the manor.
Ashton supports a newspaper, called the Weekly Reporter, and two magazines. It is the seat of a County Court and a Poor-law Union. The market is held on Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on the 23rd
March, the 29th April, the 15th July, and the 11th November.

ASHTON-UPON-MERSEY, a par. in the hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, 3 miles to the N. of Altrincham. Manchester is its post town. It is situated on the river Mersey, which is here navigable, and the Bridgwater canal, which joins that river here.
It comprises the two tnshps. of Ashton-upon-Mersey and Sale. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £608, in the patron. of the Rev. C. B. Sowerby, the incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.
The Unitarians, Calvinists, and Wesleyans have chapels here.

ASHTON, WEST, a tythg. in the par of Ashton Steeple, hund. of Whorwellsdown, in the co. of Wilts, 2 miles from Ashton Steeple. The living is a perpet.
cur. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £200, in the gift of W. Long, Esq., M.P., and lord of the manor, who resides at Ashton Rood, a splendid Gothic mansion, situated in this tything. The church, dedicated to St.
John, is a neat modern structure, containing a stone pulpit, and a beautiful carved lectern. There is a National school and a middle school for girls, founded and supported by the incumbent.

ASHURST, a par. in the hund. of Washlingstone, lathe of Aylesford, in the co. of Kent, 4 miles to the W. of Tonbridge Wells, its post town. The river Medway flows through it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £207, in the patron. of the Dowager Lady Amherst. The church is small; but it attracted pilgrims in the middle ages by the fame of the wonder-working rood it was so fortunate as to possess. Ashurst Park is the principal residence.

ASHURST, a hmlt. in the par. of East Grinstead, and hund. of the same name, rape of Pevensey, in the co. of Sussex, not far from East Grinstead.

ASHURST, or ASHURST-NEAR-STEYNING, a par. in the hund. of West Grinstead, rape of Bramber, in the co. of Sussex, 3 miles to the N. of Steyning.
Hurstperpoint is its post town. It is situated on the river Adur, which is navigable here. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £268, in the patron.
of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford.

ASHWATER, a par. in the hund. of Black Torrington, in the co. of Devon, 6 miles to the S.E. of Hols-worthy, its post town. It is watered by the river Carey.
There are quarries of good freestone in the neighbourhood. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £569, in the gift of the Rev. T. Melhuish, the incumbent. The church, which contains several interesting monuments of the Careys, and a square font, is dedicated to St. Peter. Fairs are held here on the first Tuesday in May, and the first Monday after the 1st August.

ASHWELL, a par. in the hund. of Odsey, in the co. of Hertford, 4 miles to the N.E. of Baldock, its post town, and 7 S.W. of Royston. It is a station on the Hitchin and Cambridge branch of the Eastern Counties railway. It is a very ancient place, and is mentioned as a borough in Domesday Book, under the name of Escewelle. It was a royal demesne in the Saxon period, and was granted to the abbots of Westminster, who held a market here before the Conquest. Camden gives a pleasant account of its situation at the source of the river Rhee, and derives its name from the spring and the ashes which overhung the bank from which it rises. There is an extensive earthwork in the parish, called Arbury Banks, covering an area of 12 acres, and enclosed by a rampart. From the discovery of Roman coins, urns, and other relics here, Camden supposed the place to be of Roman origin. The Roman way, called Ikneild Street, passes near Ashworth. The present town consists of several streets of scattered houses, built on the slope of the chalk hills, in the extreme north of the country, close to the sources of the river Rhee. There are some stone quarries in the neighbourhood. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £513, in the patron. of the bishop. The vicar's tithes have been commuted at £690 18*s.* 2*d.*, and the lay impropriator's at £750. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, has been rebuilt. It has a tower and spire 175 feet in height, and contains some tombs of the Sumners. Several brasses formerly existing on these tombs have disappeared. Ralph Cudworth, the metaphysician, held the vicarage of Ashwell at the time of his death in 1688. There are charitable endowments amounting to £72, including £17, the endowment of the Merchant Taylors' school. The market is held on Thursday for corn and cattle. Fairs are held on the second Thursday in July for wool and stock, and first Thursday in November for stock only.

ASHWELL, a par. in the hund. of Alstoe, in the co. of Rutland, its post town, 3 miles to the N. of Oakham, and 10 S.E. of Melton Mowbray. It is a station on the Peterborough and Syston branch of the Midland Counties railway, and is situated on a branch of the river Wreak, near the Oakham and Melton Mowbray canal, which passes on the east side of the village. Ashwell is a place of great antiquity, and belonged in the Saxon times to Earl Harold. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £401, in the patron. of Viscount Downe, who is also lord of the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome structure, with three painted windows,—the one in the east by O'Connor, the others by M. Sorente. The church was entirely restored in 1851, under the direction of the architect Butterfield, and possesses several ancient monuments of interest. On one of them is the effigy of a mailed knight, carved in oak; on a second, the figure of a priest; and on the third, a brass with an inscription in memory of Johannes Vernam, and Rosa, his wife. The latter has the date of 20th January, 1480. A village school and several model cottages were erected here in 1851 by Viscount Downe.

ASHWELLTHORPE, a par. in the hund. of Depwade, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the S.E. of Wymondham, its post town. It is situated on a branch of the river Yare, and was held at an early period by the Thorpe family, and subsequently by the Bourchiers. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with that of Wreningham, which is annexed to it, £643, in the patron. of Lord Berners. The church is dedicated to All Saints, and contains monuments of the old families. The figures of Sir Edmund de Thorp and his wife are of alabaster, under a canopy of wood. There is a small fuel allotment, awarded in 1814. This village was the birthplace (1469) of Sir John Bourchier, the translator of Froissart's Chronicles.

ASHWICK, a par. in the hund. of Kilmersdon, in the co. of Somerset, 3 miles to the N.E. of Shepton Mallet; Bath is its post town. It is situated on the Fosse Way, and includes the hmlt. of Oakhill. Coal mines are worked here, and there is an extensive brewery. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £113, in the patron. of the Vicar of Kilmersdon. The church is dedicated to St. James. There are chapels belonging to the Presbyterians and Wesleyan Methodists. The parochial charities, including an endowment of £5 to a school, amount to £13 a year. Ashwick Grove is the principal residence. Masbury Castle, a Roman camp with a double rampart, is near the Fosse Way, south-westward of the village.

ASHWICKEN, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge Lynn, in the co. of Norfolk, 5 miles to the N.E. of Lynn-Regis. It lies near the East Anglian railway. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with that of Leziate, which is annexed to it, £520, in the patron. of the Rev. J. Freeman, the incumbent. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

ASHWOOD, a hmlt. in the par. of King's Swinford, northern div. of the hund. of Seisdon, in the co. of Stafford, 4 miles to the N.W. of Stourbridge. It lies on the eastern bank of the river Stour, not far from the line of the Oxford and Worcester railway. The Stafford and Birmingham canal also passes the hmlt. in a parallel course with the river. On Ashwood Heath, no longer a common, are remains of a Roman camp, to which is given the singular name of "Wolverhampton Churchyard."

ASHWORTH, a chplry. in the par. of Middleton, and hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 3 miles to the W. of Rochdale, its post town. A small stream, a branch of the river Roch, runs through it. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £119, in the patron. of Lord Egerton.

ASKAIG, PORT, a harbour on the north-east coast of the island of Islay, one of the Hebrides, Scotland, 11 miles from Bowmore. There were formerly lead mines near it.

ASKE, a tnshp. in the par. of Easby, western div. of the wap. of Gilling, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N. of Richmond. In this tnshp. is Aske Hall, the seat of the Earl of Zetland; it stands in a beautiful park, on elevated ground commanding fine prospects.

ASKEATON, a par. and market town in the bar. of Lower Connello, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 16 miles to the S.W. of Limerick by road, or 20 miles by the Limerick and Foynes railway, on which it is a station, and 135 miles from Dublin. It is situated in a pleasant country, on the river Deel, near its junction with the Shannon. This place was founded by the Fitzgeralds, Earls of Desmond, and became an important place at an early period. They had a fine castle here, which, after holding out the longest against the royal forces, was captured in 1580 by Sir George Carew, part of it being blown up by the garrison on retiring. In 1420, a Franciscan monastery was established here by James, Earl of Desmond, which was one of the most magnificent ecclesiastical edifices in the island. Under a charter granted by James I., in 1613, Askeaton was incorporated, and from that time till the Union, the borough returned two representatives to the Irish parliament. Of the £15,000 which was awarded on the ceasing of this privilege, £13,700 was paid to the Earl of Carrick and Lord Massey. Askeaton is no longer a corporation. It is a police-station, and has a court of petty sessions once a fortnight. The district is hilly, and the lands under cultivation. Good limestone is quarried in abundance, and copper ore is found, but no mine is opened. There is a salmon fishery on the Deel, and a small export trade in grain and flour. The river is navigable, and has convenient quays. The town is built on both sides of the Deel, which is crossed by an old bridge of five arches. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, val. with the rect. of Lismakeery, and the vic. of Iverus, £391, in the patron. of Sir M. Blackiston, Bart., to whom the manor belongs. The church, which is in decay, was part of an establishment of the Knights Templars, founded here at the close of the 13th century. Not far from the church, westward, are the ruins of the ancient castle occupying the summit of a rock in the river, and near them the large and graceful banqueting-house, in a state of nearly perfect preservation. The extensive and beautiful remains of the abbey, which was built of the grey marble of the district, are on the east side of the Deel, close to the river. The cloisters surround a quadrangle, and are well preserved. A thorn-tree of venerable age grows in the quadrangle. Coins, bracelets, chalices, and other relics have been found in the neighbourhood. There are many seats of the gentry near Askeaton; among them are Inchirourk More, Shannon View, Castle Hewson, &c. The market day is Tuesday. Fairs are held on the 30th July and the 9th October, for the sale of cattle, &c.

ASKERN, a tnshp. in the par. of Campsall, and wap. of Osgoldcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles to the N. of Doncaster, its post town. It is a station on the Great Northern, and the Lancashire and Yorkshire railways. There is a sulphureous spring near Askern Pool. This place is said to have been the scene of a conflict between the Britons and Saxons, in which Hengist was defeated and slain by Ambrosius. The living is a perpet. cur.* united with that of Fenwick, val. £100, in the patron. of the Archbishop of York.

ASKERSWELL, a par. in the hund. of Eggerton, Bridport div. of the co. of Dorset, 4 miles to the E. of Bridport, its post town. It is pleasantly situated in a valley, through which flows Asker Brook, a branch of the river Brit. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £160, in the patron. of the Rev. Dr. J. Cox. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was entirely rebuilt in 1858, with the exception of the tower. The charitable endowments amount to £6.

ASKERTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Lanercost, Eskdale ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 6 miles to the N.E. of Brampton. The Cambock, a branch of the river Irthing, runs through the tnshp. A small castle was erected here for protection against the borderers, at which Lord Dacre, Warden of the Marches in the reign of Henry VIII., resided. It is still in existence as a farmhouse. There was also a church, named after the stream Kirk Cambec, but it was destroyed by the Scots.

ASKETT, a hmlt. in the par. of Monks' Risborough, and hund. of Aylesbury, in the co. of Buckingham, 1 mile from Prince's Risborough.

ASKEW, Yorkshire. See AISKEW.

ASKHAM, a par. in the hund. of Bassetlaw, in the co. of Nottingham, 2 miles from Tuxford, its post town, and a station on the Great Northern railway. It contains the hmlt. of Rockley. Part of the land is laid out in hop grounds. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the vic. of East Drayton, in the dioc. of Lincoln. Here are almshouses for six poor widows, with an endowment of £22 per annum.

ASKHAM, a par., tnshp., and pleasant vil. in West ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, 5 miles to the S. of Penrith, its post town. It is situated on the river Lowther, and contains the tnshp. of Helton. The Preston and Carlisle railway passes near it, and has a station at Clifton, 2 miles W. of the village. Limestone is obtained in this parish. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £180, in the patron. of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, which has several old monuments, and a stone coffin bearing the date 1346, is dedicated to St. Peter; it was rebuilt in 1832, by the late Earl of Lonsdale. Here is an endowed school, with an income of £12, and some other charities. Askham Hall, an oblong turreted mansion with a tower, was formerly the seat of the Earls of Lonsdale, to whom the manor of Askham belongs. It was built in 1574, and is at present the rectory-house for Lowther, occupied by the Ven. Dr. William Jackson, archdeacon of Carlisle and rector of Lowther.

ASKHAM-BRYAN, a par. in the ainsty of the city of York, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the W. of York, its post town. The North Midland railway passes near it. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of York, val. £120, in the patron. of H. Croft, Esq. The church, part of which was built in the 11th century, is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There are charitable endowments amounting to £34, of which £10 is for the support of a free school. This village is a meet for the Ainsty hounds.

ASKHAM-RICHARD, a par. in the ainsty of the city of York, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 1 mile from Askham-Bryan. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £200, in the gift of the Rev. C. J. Denton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are charities amounting to £17. Askham Hall is the principal residence.

ASKRIGG, a market town and chplry. in the par. of Aysgarth, western div. of the wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 50 miles to the N.W. of York, and 246 miles from London by road, or 284 by railway. It occupies a hill on the north bank of the river Ure, near the head of Wesley Dale. The surrounding moorland district abounds in fine scenery and picturesque waterfalls. Mill Gill Force, half a mile from the town, has a fall of 60 feet, and Whitfield Force, a little higher up, has a fall of 100 feet. Newbiggin, Nappa, and Woodhall, are hmlts. included in this par. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £100, in the patron. of the Vicar of Aysgarth. The ancient church, which is dedicated to St. Oswald, has been recently restored. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school of Yorebridge was founded and endowed in the latter part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by Anthony Besson. It has a revenue of £65 a year. There are almshouses for six poor widows of this tnshp. and Low Abbotside, each of whom receives £10 per annum. This charity was founded by Christopher Alderson, in 1807. Thursday is the market day, and fairs are held, principally for the sale of cattle, on the 11th May, the first Thursday in June, the 11th and 12th July, and the 28th October.

ASKWITH, or ASQUITH, a tnshp. in the par. of Weston, and wap. of Claro, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N.W. of Otley. The village is in a pleasant situation on the river Wharfe. Snowden is a hmlt. of this tnshp.

ASLACKBY, or ASLABY, a par. in the wap. of Aveland, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 2 miles to the S. of Falkingham, its post town. Graby and Milthorpe are hmlts. of this par. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £453, in the patron. of R. F. Barstow, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. In the reign of Richard I., a preceptory of the Knights Templars was founded here, which subsequently passed to the Knights Hospitallers. Of the building there still remains an embattled square tower, which adjoins the farmhouse called Temple Farm. A castle also once existed in this parish, but no traces are left of it except the earthworks on the west side. Not far from the village is Aslackby High Park.

ASLACKOE, or ASLACOE, WAPENTAKE, one of the twelve waps. comprised in the parts of Lindsey, or north div. of the co. of Lincoln, bounded on the N. by the wap. of Manley, on the E. by the wap. of Walshcroft, on the S.E. and S. by the wap. of Lawress, and on the W. by the waps. of Well and Corringham. It is divided into East Aslacoe and West Aslacoe, and contains the following pars.:—in the eastern division, Caenby, East and West Firsby, Glentham, Hackthorn, Cold Hanworth, Normanby, Bishop's Norton, Owmby, Saxby, Snitterby, and Spridlington; and in the western division, Blyborough, Cammeringham, Coates, Fillingham, Glentworth, Harpswell, Hemswell, Ingham, and Willoughton. The wap. comprises an area of 46,240 acres.

ASLACTON, a par. in the hund. of Depwade, in the co. of Norfolk, 7 miles to the S.E. of Attleborough, and 2 N.W. of Tivetshall railway station. Long Stratton is its post town. It is situated on a branch of the river Yare, and many of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of bombazines. The living is a perpet. cur.

in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £58, in the patron. of the Rev. T. G. Cartier, Esq. The church, which has several monuments of the Knyvets and Wilsons, is dedicated to St. Michael. It underwent a thorough repair in 1849. The register dates from 1558. Here are a National school, established in 1851, and a Wesleyan chapel, built in 1844. There is a fuel allotment of about 18 acres in this parish. Aslacton was the birthplace of Sir William Le Neve, Clarencieux king-at-arms, and a learned antiquary, who died in 1661. The manor formerly belonged to the family of which he was a distinguished member.

ASLACTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Whatton, hund. of Bingham, in the co. of Nottingham, 2 miles to the E. of Bingham, and 12 E. of Nottingham. It is a station on the Ambergate railway, and the river Smite runs through the tnshp. The chapel, which was dedicated to St. John of Beverley, is dilapidated. The matter of greatest interest in connection with this place is that here, in 1489, Archbishop Cranmer, the great leader in the Reformation of the Church of England, was born. On the site of the manor-house, which was the seat of the Cranmer family, now stands the farmhouse of Mr. Joseph Green. Aslacton Abbey and Aslacton Field House are the principal residences in the neighbourhood.

ASPALL, a par. in the hund. of Hartismere, in the co. of Suffolk, 1 mile from Debenham, its post town. It lies near the source of the river Deben. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £149, in the patron. of Mrs. Chevallier. The free school has an endowment by the Rev. John Metcalf (1612) of £60 per annum.

ASPALL STONEHAM. See STONEHAM ASPALL.

ASPATRIA, a par. and market town in Allerdale ward, below Derwent, in the co. of Cumberland, 8 miles to the S.W. of Wigton, and 9 miles to the N. of Cockermouth. Carlisle is its post town. It is situated on the river Ellen, in a hilly country not far from the sea-coast. Here is a station of the Maryport and Carlisle railway, which intersects the village. Included in the parish are the several tnshps. of Aspatria with Brayton, Hayton with Melay, and Outerside with Allerby, and the small hmlt. of Prospect. Its name, which is remarkable, is supposed to be a corruption of Gospatrick, the family name of the Earl of Dunbar, to whom the manor formerly belonged. There are coalmines and sandstone quarries in the neighbourhood, and a small brewery and saw-mills in the village, which is nearly a mile in length, though irregularly built. It contains several good houses and shops, and is situated on the main road between Maryport and Carlisle. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £249, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Kentigern, was rebuilt in 1848. It is a handsome stone edifice, in the early English style, with a fine Norman doorway on the south side, which formed part of the ancient building. The chancel is richly decorated. It contains an ancient Norman font, which has been carefully preserved, and in the Hayton Chapel are monuments of the Musgraves. Tombs of the Lawsons of Brayton Hall are in the church and churchyard; and in the latter is a pillar stone to one of the Oughtersides. There is a commodious chapel, belonging to the Independents, built in 1827; and National and village schools. The charities amount to about £23 10*s.* per annum. Near the village, at Beacon Hill, is a barrow, on opening which, in 1790, a chest, or kistvaen, formed of large stones was found. It contained a human skeleton measuring 7 feet from the head to the ankle bone, a sword and dagger, with silver ornaments, and several other relics. Some of the stones were rudely sculptured, chiefly with crosses inclosed in circles. The market is held on Thursday. Brayton Hall is the seat of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., who is lord of the manor.

ASPEDEN, or ASPENDEN, a par. in the hund. of Edlenstree, in the co. of Hertford, close to Buntingford, its post town. It lies on the west side of the river Rib, and contains part of Buntingford. It is mentioned in Domesday Book under the name Absesdene. The manor has been held by the several families of the Jocelyns, the Cliffords, the Freemans, and the Bolderos. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £357, in the patron. of the Countess of Mexborough. The small church stands in the Hall Park, and is dedicated to St. Mary. There are monuments of the Freemans and the Cliffords. On the tomb of Sir Robert Clyfford, who died in the reign of Henry VII., are brasses of the knight and his lady in the attitude of prayer. There is a school, endowed by Mrs. Cater in 1704, and by the Freemans at an earlier period, which has a revenue of £17. An almshouse was founded and endowed in 1684 by Dr. Seth Ward, bishop of Salisbury, whose parents are interred in the churchyard of Aspeden. Aspeden Hall is the principal seat.

ASPLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Eccleshall, and hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 3 miles from Eccleshall. The London and North Western railway passes near it.

ASPLEY, Warwickshire. See ARDLEY.

ASPLEY-GUISE, a par. in the hund. of Manshead, in the co. of Bedford, 2 miles to the N. of Woburn, its post town. It is situated in a hilly and pleasant country on the borders of Buckinghamshire. Fuller's earth was formerly obtained here; but the ancient pit has long been disused, and is now adorned with fine trees. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £325, in the patron. of the Duke of Bedford. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph. There is an altar tomb in the chancel with the figure of a knight, and a brass of one of the Guises, to whom the manor belonged, and who had their seat here. Aspley Wood, which is the property of the Duke of Bedford, is one of the finest pieces of woodland now in England. Aspley-Guise House and Aspley House are the principal residences.

ASPS, THE, a vil. in the par. of Bishop's Tachbrook, hunds. of Kington and Knightlow, in the co. of Warwick, 1 mile from Warwick.

ASPULL, a tnshp. in the par. of Wigan, hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 3 miles to the N.E. of Wigan. The population are employed in the cotton manufactories and the collieries. There is a small educational endowment.

ASQUITH, Yorkshire. See ASKWITH.

ASSELBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Howden, and wap. of Howdenshire, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the W. of Howden. It lies on the north side of the river Ouse, not far from the Hull railway.

ASSENDON, or UPPER ASSENDON, a hmlt. in the par. of Pirton and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Oxford, 3 miles to the N.W. of Henley-upon-Thames. Here is an almshouse, founded in the reign of James I. by Sir Francis Stonor, and endowed with £5 per annum. In this hamlet is a spring which flows only after rainy weather.

ASSERBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Bilsby and hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 2 miles from Alford.

ASSEY, or ATHSEY, a par. in the bar. of Lower Deece, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Navan. It is situated in a fertile district on the river Boyne. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Meath, val., with the rect. of Balsoon, £116, in the patron. of the crown. The church is in decay.

ASSINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Babergh, in the co. of Suffolk, 5 miles to the S.E. of Sudbury, its post town, and 4 N.E. of Bares. It is watered by a branch of the river Stour. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £448, with 51 acres of glebe, in the patron. of J. Gurdon, Esq., to whom the manor belongs. The church, which possesses a brass of 1450, with figures of a knight and his lady, is dedicated to St. Edmund. The tithes were commuted, in 1837, for the yearly moduses of £447 17*s.* 10*d.* to the vicar, and of £361 15*s.* 3*d* to the impropriator. There is a small bequest, by John Gurdon, Esq., for the support of the National school. Assington Hall is an ancient mansion, surrounded by a park of 60 acres.

ASSYNT, a par. of 90 miles in circumference, in the co. of Sutherland, Scotland, lying on the coast of the Minch, between Loch Ardvar and Kyle Scow on the N., and Loch Enard on the S. It extends in length from the point of Storr, in the N.W., to Cromall, in the S.E., 36 miles; and in breadth, at the widest part, 18 miles. It is one of the wildest and most mountainous districts in Scotland, and has almost innumerable lochs. The loftiest mountain is Benmore, on the southern border of the parish. It has an elevation of 3,200 feet above the sea. Others are Cuniack, or Queenaig, north of Loch Assynt, a ridge terminating in a small peak by the lake; Snilven, or Sugar Loaf, to the south of Loch Inver, &c. The largest lake is Loch Assynt, occupying nearly the centre of the parish. It is a freshwater lake, containing abundance of trout, and extending in length nearly 7 miles, and in breadth about 1 mile. Camloch is the next largest lake, and lies in the southern, which is the highest, part of the parish. Close to it is Urgil loch; on the west coast, Inver loch; and scattered over the parish, especially the western half, a multitude of others too numerous to name. The coast is rugged and dangerous, with many indentations and small islands. There are several caves, both on the coast and inland. Limestone is abundant in the parish: in one place it appears in a huge abrupt ridge, nearly 200 feet high and extending for a mile and a half. Marble is quarried at Ichnadamph, and some slate spar is procured. Fishing is the chief occupation of the inhabitants, who live mostly near the coast. Sheep farming is also carried on extensively. The parish belonged in ancient times to the thanes of Sutherland, subsequently to the McLeods, and now to the Duke of Sutherland. The living is in the presb. of Dornoch, of the val. of £158, and in the patron. of the Duke of Sutherland. The church stands at the east end of Loch Assynt. There are also two Free churches. The people speak the Gaelic language almost universally. On the shore of Loch Assynt, near its eastern end, are the ruins of Ardvrack Castle, which is considered to have been the seat of the McLeods, and to have been built near the close of the 16th century. It was by a member of this family that the Marquis of Montrose, who took refuge in Assynt, was betrayed, in the reign of Charles I. On the coast at Clachtoll are some remains of a druidical temple. There is a building near the church, supposed to be part of an ancient place of worship. Lochinver is the principal village. The parish contains two post offices, one near the church, and the other at the village of Lochinver.

ASTBURY, a par. in the hunds. of Northwich and Macclesfield, in the co. palatine of Chester, 1 mile from Congleton its post town. It lies near the Macclesfield canal, on the borders of Staffordshire, and comprises the market town of Congleton, and the following tnshps.:—Newbold Astbury, Buglawton, Davenport, Hulme Walfield, Moreton, Odd Rode, Radnor, Smallwood, Somerford Booths, and Somerford. Mow Cop, or Mole Cop Hill, which rises to the height of 1,090 feet, is partly in this parish, and partly within the limits of Staffordshire. Limestone and coal are obtained here, and the silk and cotton manufactures are carried on to a large extent. There are above forty factories, which, with the collieries and limeworks, furnish the chief employment for the population. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, with the perpet. cur. of Hulme Walfield, val. £2,240, in the patron. of Lord Crewe. The church, which is a handsome building in the perpendicular style, has a spire and a finely carved roof, executed in 1616, by Richard Lowndes. It contains also a screen, roodloft, stained windows, and several interesting monuments of the Moretons and Bellots. In the churchyard are some very old tombs of the Breretons. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. In addition to the parish church, there are nine district churches and chapels of ease in this extensive parish, named after their districts, Buglawton, Congleton, Congleton St. James's, Congleton St. Stephen's, Eaton, Mossley, Odd Rode, Smallwood, and Somerford chapel. The whole of these, except the last, are perpet. curs., and will be described under their several headings. There are charitable endowments amounting to £263, of which sum £177 is the produce of Holford's bequest for education, relief of the poor, &c. Little Moreton Hall, situated in the tnshp. of Odd Rode, was formerly the seat of the Breretons, since of the Moretons. It is an interesting example of a timbered mansion, and is richly ornamented; a moat surrounds it, and the entrance is by a stone bridge. The house is in good preservation, and appears, from an inscription over one of the oriel windows, to have been built, at least in part, in 1559. Some portions are evidently of earlier date. The parish of Astbury extends over an area of 19,602 acres, and contains nearly the same number of inhabitants.

ASTELYN'S, a hmlt. in the par. of High Ongar, in the hund. and union of Ongar, in the co. of Essex. It is situated on the road to Chelmsford, not far from the river Roding. This hamlet is remarkable for its ancient seat, now a farm, in which, according to tradition, Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, took shelter when fleeing from the wrath of Queen Elizabeth.

ASTEL, a vil. in the bar. of Iraghticonnor, co. of Kerry and prov. of Munster, Ireland, not far from Ballylongford.

ASTERBY, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the N. of Horncastle, its post town. It is situated on the Wolds, not far from the river Bain. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £210, in the gift of T. Southwell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There are several small charities, among which is a bequest by Anthony Ascham for education. Asterby Grange is about 2 miles from the village.

ASTERLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Pontesbury, in the Pontesbury div. of the hund. of Ford, in the co. of Salop, 8 miles to the S.W. of Shrewsbury. The river Rhea runs near it.

ASTERLEY FARM, an ext. par. lib. in the par. of Kiddington, hunds. of Chadlington and Wootton, in the co. of Oxford, 4 miles from Woodstock. It constituted a separate parish till the year 1291, when it was incorporated with Kiddington. Traces of its old church, mansion, and other buildings still exist at Chapelbroke field.

ASTERTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Norbury, and hund. of Purslow, in the co. of Salop, 4 miles from Church Stretton. It is situated on the range of the Longmont, or Long Mynd Hills.

ASTHALL, a par. in the hund. of Bampton, in the co. of Oxford, 5 miles to the W. of Witney. Burford is its post town. It is situated in Wychwood forest, on the river Windrush, and comprises the hmlt. of Asthall Leigh. At the period of the Norman survey, the manor of Asthall was held by Roger de Ivri. It is called Esthale in Domesday Book. The old way called Akeman Street runs through this parish, and was carried across the Windrush. Bordering on this way is a large and lofty mound called Asthall Barrow, which is conjectured to be the burial-place and monument of some military chief. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Oxford, of the val. of £100, in the gift of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. In the north aisle is a stone coffin, which is said to hold the remains of Alice Corbett, mistress of Henry I. There are small endowments, by Sir George Fettiplace, for instructing girls and apprenticing boys, and some other charities. Asthall House, an old manorial residence, was formerly the seat of the Fettiplaces, to whom the manor belonged in the 17th century. The manor was purchased in 1688 by Sir Edmund Fettiplace, of Lord Lumley. The mansion is now a farmhouse.

ASTHORPE, an ext. par. lib. in the par. of Marsworth, and hund. of Cottisloe, in the co. of Buckingham, 5 miles to the E. of Aylesbury. It is united with the lib. of Long Marstone.

ASTHORPE, a hmlt. in the par. of Willoughby, Wold div. of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the S. of Alford.

ASTLEY, or EAST LEIGH, a chplry. in the par. of Leigh, hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 3 miles to the E. of Leigh. It is a station on the North Western railway; and the Leigh branch of the Bridgwater canal, which joins the Leeds and Liverpool canal at Wigan, passes near the village. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Manchester, of the val. of £250, in the patron. of the Vicar of Leigh. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen, and occupies the site of a more ancient one. There is an endowment founded by Adam Mort in 1630, for the instruction of children in this and other townships. There is also a free school, with an endowment of £26 a year, and several other charities, amounting altogether to £150. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the fustian manufacture. In 1849, a highly interesting and successful experiment was made here of extinguishing a fire in one of the mines, by Mr. Gurney's method of forcing a current of artificial "choke-damp" through the mine.

ASTLEY, a chplry. in the par. of St. Mary, in the lib. of Shrewsbury and co. of Salop, 5 miles from Shrewsbury. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the yearly val. of £56, in the gift of the corporation of Shrewsbury.

ASTLEY, a par. in the hund. of Knightlow, in the co. of Warwick, 4 miles to the S.W. of Nuneaton, its post town. The village is situated on a hill in a pleasant and wooded district. In the reign of King John, the manor belonged to the Astleys, from whom it came, in the reign of Henry V., to the Greys of Ruthin. It is now held by the Newdegates, who came into possession of it in the 18th century. A castle was erected here at a very early period, part of the walls of which still remain. It was once the abode of Henry Grey, Marquis of Dorset. The present structure is probably of the age of Queen Mary. It is surrounded by a moat, and the entrance is by a stone bridge, through a pointed arch. The aspect of the mansion and of the ruins is rendered beautiful and impressive by a luxuriant growth of ivy. In one of the apartments is preserved a curious and interesting, though rudely-executed portrait of the Duke of Suffolk, father of the Lady Jane Grey. It presents him in a high-crowned hat, with a ruff and peaked beard. The castle is now the seat of Viscount Lifford. In the neighbourhood of the village are the Duke's Farm and Astley Hall, both ancient houses. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £60, in the patron. of C. N. Newdegate, Esq., M.P., whose seat is Arbury Hall, 2 miles from Astley. The present church is part of a much more extensive structure, which was erected in the reign of Edward III. by Lord Thomas de Astley, who first founded a chantry, and then converted it into a college. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was cruciform, and had a very lofty spire, which, serving as a landmark through the forest region, was named poetically "the lanthorn of Arden." It fell at the commencement of the 17th century. Part of the building was demolished in the reign of Queen Mary; the western part and many of the ancient monuments perished in 1607. Part of a tower and the choir, now forming the body of the church, are all that remain of the ancient venerable pile. There are sixteen stalls, with figures of saints and scrolls inscribed with Scripture sentences. Two monuments with effigies remain. There is a charity school, chiefly supported by the Newdegates. The school-house and the house for the master are very ancient buildings.

ASTLEY, or ASTLEY ABBOTTS, a par. in the hund. of Lower Doddingtree, in the co. of Worcester, 2 miles to the S.W. of Stourport, 9 N. of Worcester, and 5 S.W. of Hartlebury railway station. Bewdley is its post town. It is situated in a fertile country, partly laid out in hop grounds, on the western bank of the river Severn. An alien priory, of the Benedictine order, was established here in 1160 by Ralph de Todeni. After several changes of ownership, it was granted by Henry VIII., at the Dissolution, to Sir Ralph Sadleir, known to historical students by his compilation of the State papers. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £623, in the patron. of Cookes' Trustees. The tithes are commuted at £750. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, stands on a hill, and is interesting as an example of Saxon architecture, the pillars and arches being supposed to be earlier than the Conquest. It contains some ancient monuments, a Saxon font, and remains of stained glass. A lecture-room has recently been presented to the village by the liberality of Thomas Zachary, Esq. There is also a free school, with an income from an endowment of £20 year. There are other small charities. The paper manufacture is carried on here. Astley Cliffs is a lofty rock, close to the Severn at Redstone ferry, in which, at an early date, a hermitage was cut, consisting of a chapel and other rooms, adorned with paintings and priestly sentences. It was visited for purposes of devotion by noble and even royal persons. It has since done service as a poor man's dwelling, and is now a licensed alehouse! The priest and annalist, Layaman, was a native of Astley. Glasshampton is a very old seat.

The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £233, in the gift of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a school with a small endowment, and several other small charities.

ASTON-UPON-CARRON, a tythg. in the par. of Ashchurch, lower div. of the hund. of Tewkesbury, in the co. of Gloucester, 3 miles to the E. of Tewkesbury. It lies on the border of Worcestershire, not far from the Birmingham and Gloucester railway.

ASTON-UPON-TRENT, a par. in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, in the co. of Derby, 6 miles to the S.E. of Derby, its post town. It is situated on the northern side of the river Trent and the Grand Trunk canal, which runs nearly parallel with the river. Shardlow is a chplry., and Far or Great Wilne a tnshp., of this par. Aston had formerly the rank of a market town. The principal business of the place is the corn trade. Some of the inhabitants are employed in the potteries. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val., with the cur. of Shardlow annexed to it, of £1,030, in the patron. of E. A. Holden, Esq. In the church, which is dedicated to All Saints, are several monuments to the Holdens and Shuttleworths. There are charitable endowments amounting to £22 per annum. The principal residences are Aston Hall, the seat of the Holdens, and Aston Lodge.

ASTON UPTHORPE, a chplry. in the par. of Blewberry, in the hund. of Morton, and co. of Berks, 4 miles to the S. of Wallingford. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the vic. of Blewberry, in the dioc. of Salisbury. This place is said to have been the scene of the battle in 659, in which the King of Wessex was defeated by Wulfere, son of Penda, and his dominions annexed to Mercia.

ASTON WHEATON, Staffordshire. See WHEATON ASTON.

ASTON WHITELADY, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. of Oswaldslow, in the co. of Worcester, 5 miles to the S.E. of Worcester. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes near it. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £226, in the patron. of R. Berkeley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A nunnery of the Celestine order was founded here at an early period. Bishop Lloyd, in 1713, endowed the charity school founded by him at Worcester, with an estate in this parish. From this circumstance it is sometimes called Aston Episcopi. In this village Oliver Cromwell had his head-quarters before his great victory of Worcester.

ASTRAD, a tnshp. in the par. of Llandyrnog, hund. of Ruthin, in the co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 1 mile from Denbigh. Astrad Hall is the chief residence.

ASTROP, a hmlt. chiefly in the par. of King's Sutton, but partly in the par. of Newbottle, in the hund. of Sutton, and co. of Northampton, 5 miles to the W. of Brackley. It is situated on the eastern side of the river Cherwell, close to the borders of Oxfordshire. Here is a mineral spring, called Astrop Wells, which was discovered in 1664, and became a popular remedy for diseases of the skin. Aston Hall, the seat of the Willes, was erected about 1750.

ASTWELL, a hmlt. chiefly in the par. of Wappenham, but partly in the par. of Syresham, in the hund. of Sutton, and co. of Northampton, 6 miles to the S.W. of Towcester. At Astwell Farm there are ruins of the old manorial residence and the chapel. The manor has been held successively by the Billing, Lovett, and Ferrer families, and now belongs to the Duke of Buckingham. This hamlet is a meet for Lord Southampton's hounds.

ASTWICK, a par. in the hund. of Biggleswade, in the co. of Bedford, 4 miles to the S.E. of Biggleswade, its post town. It is situated on a branch of the river Ivel, on the borders of Hertfordshire. An ancient Roman road, entering the county from Hertfordshire, passes near this place. The living is a rect. united with the vic. of Arlsey, in the dioc. of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Guthlac.

ASTWICK, Yorkshire. See AUSTWICKE.

ASTWOOD-BANK is a large and pleasant vil. in the par. of Feckenham, in the co. of Worcester, 2 miles N.E. of Feckenham, 3 S. from Redditch railway station, and 17 N.E. from Worcester. There are several needle factories in the village, affording employment to a large portion of the inhabitants. The Baptists have a spacious chapel here, erected at the cost of £1,200. The scenery is extremely rich and varied.

ASTWOOD-BURY, a par. in the hund. of Newport, in the co. of Buckingham, 5 miles to the N.E. of Newport Pagnell. It lies on the borders of Bedfordshire. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, of the val. of £230, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church contains monuments of the Cranmers and Lowndes, and is dedicated to St. Peter.

ASWARBY, a par. in the wap. of Aswardhurn, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 3 miles to the S. of Sleaford. Folkingham is its post town. It is situated in the Fens. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the value of £285, in the patron. of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Dennis. It has a fine tower, surmounted with a spire, and contains a very ancient font. There are some small charities. Aswarby Hall, situated in a large park, is the seat of Sir T. Whichcote, to whom the manor belongs. Bass, the maritime discoverer, after whom was named the Strait separating Tasmania from Australia, was born at Aswarby. This place is a meet for the Belvoir hounds.

ASWARDBY, a par. in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 3 miles to the N.W. of Spilsby, its post town. It is situated on the river Steeping in the Wolds. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £266, in the patron. of R. Brackenbury, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

ASWARDHURN WAPENTAKE, one of the subdivisions of the parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, bounded on the N. by Flaxwell and Langoe waps., on the E. by the wap. of Kirton, on the S. by the wap. of Aveland, and on the W. by the wap. of Winnibriggs and Threo. It contains the pars. of Asgarby, Aswarby, Aunsby, Burton-Pedwardine, Evedon, Ewerby, Great Hale, Haydor, Heckington, Helpringham, Howell, Ingoldsby, Kirkby-le-Thorpe, Quarrington, Scradington, Silk Willoughby, Old Sleaford, South Kyme, and Swarby. This wap. comprises an area of 45,280 acres.

ATCH, LENCH, a hmlt. in the par. of Church Lench, upper div. of the hund. of Halfshire, in the co. of Worcester, 4 miles from Evesham.

ATCHAM, or ATTINGHAM, a par. in the Wellington div. of the hund. of S. Bradford, in the co. of Salop, 3¾ miles to the S.E. of Shrewsbury. It is situated in a pleasant country on the banks of the Severn, at the confluence of the Tern with that river. The turnpike road from Shrewsbury to Wellington passes through this village, and, until the days of railroads, was the great thoroughfare between London and Holyhead. The par. comprises the tnshps. of Berwick, Cronkill, Emstrey, and Uckington, and the hmlt. of Chilton. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. of £340, in the patron. of R. Burton, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Eatta, is built on the banks of the Severn, and has a very picturesque appearance; it is remarkable as being the church where Ordericus Vitalis, the great historian of the Norman period, received the rite of baptism. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £84 per annum, of which sum £60 is the revenue of the free school. There are two bridges, a handsome one of stone across the Severn, designed by Gwyn, and another, with a span of 100 feet, across the Tern, both erected by Sir R. Hill. Attingham Hall, formerly called Tern Hall, is the seat of Lord Berwick, the present representative of the Hill family. It is a noble mansion, seated in a fine spot near the village, overlooking the Tern, which flows through the park and unites with the Severn within sight. It was built after a design by Stuart. In the picture gallery is an interesting model of Mount Vesuvius, constructed of rock from the mountain itself by the eminent traveller, Dr. Clarke. Longnor Hall is the seat of the Burtons. William Burton, who distinguished himself as an antiquary and topographer in the 17th century, and wrote a Commentary on those passages of the Itinerary of Antoninus which relate to Great Britain, was a member of this family; he died in 1657. Near this place is Wroxeter, the Roman Uriconium, the recent investigations and discoveries in which have excited so much interest, that they have gained for it the designation of the British Pompeii. Atcham is the seat of a Poor-law Union.

ATHAN, ST., a par. in the hund. of Cowbridge, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 4 miles to the S.E. of Cowbridge, its post town. It is situated on the coast of the Bristol Channel, in a fertile district of the vale of Glamorgan, abounding in striking and picturesque scenery. The people are chiefly employed in agriculture, and some in working the limestone, which is abundant, and of good quality. The small port of Aberthan is near this parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Llandaff, of the val. of £367, in the patron. of the Rev. W. Rayer. The church is dedicated to St. Athan, who is said to have resided here in the 6th century, and built the church, in which he was afterwards interred. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. At the Conquest, Fitzhamon, the Norman, became lord of this place, and a castle was erected here by Roger Berkrolles, one of his comrades. Remains of it, now overgrown with ivy, still exist on a bold hill at East Orchard. It is pleasant to hear that the brave knight Berkrolles restored half the land to its former owner, and on the other half maintained several families who had been deprived of their all by the Norman invaders.

ATHBOY, a par. and market town with a vic. in the bar. of Lune, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, containing the vils. of Castleton and Athboy-Commons, 7 miles to the N.W. of Trim, and 34 miles to the N.W. of Dublin. It is situated on a stream bearing the same name, which, after a course of 15 miles from Crossakeel where it rises, joins the Boyne not far from Trim. The district is fertile and the land chiefly laid down as pasture. Limestone is obtained in abundance. Athboy was formerly a municipal and parliamentary borough. It received a charter from Henry IV. in 1407, which was confirmed and extended by Henry VI., Henry VII., and James I. The borough returned two members to the Irish parliament from the second year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth till the Union, when it was disfranchised,—the representatives of the Earl of Darnley, to whom the manor belonged, and to whom it gives the title of viscount, receiving the compensation of £15,000. Here is a chief police station, and petty sessions for the county are held once a fortnight. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Meath, of the val., with the vic. of Garly, and the rects. of Moyagher, Rathmore, and Keldalky, of £432, in the patron. of the crown, the primate, and the Bishop of Meath alternately. The church is a modern edifice, with an ancient tower. There are several schools and a dispensary. Almshouses for twelve widows were founded by the Earl of Darnley. Each inmate receives five guineas per annum. Remains are to be seen of the old church of a Carmelite monastery, which was established here soon after 1300. At Frayne two castles formerly stood, of which there are extensive ruins. Remains of another castle are at Causestown. The principal residences are Athboy Lodge, the seat of Sir F. Hopkins, Bart., Frayne, Ballyfallon, Mitchelstown, &c. The market day is Thursday. Fairs are held on the 28th January, the 4th May, the 4th August, and the 7th November.

ATHEA, a vil. in the par. of Rathronan, and bar. of Shanid, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 10 miles to the W. of Newcastle. It is situated on the river Geale.

ATHELAMPSTONE, or ATHELAMPTON, Dorsetshire. See ADMISTON.

ATHELINGTON, or ALLINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Hoxne, in the co. of Suffolk, 5 miles to the S.E. of Eye. Woodbridge is its post town. The living is a discharged rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the yearly val. of £155, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small building with square tower. It is supposed to have been built in the time of the Saxon Edgar Atheling, whose bust and that of his wife are still preserved in the eastern wall. The present register dates from 1694, the more ancient one having been lost. In the churchyard is a tomb of one of the Brook family, above 300 years old, whose descendant, F. Capper Brook, Esq., of Ufford, is the sole surviving heir of that ancient house.

ATHELNEY, ISLE OF, a small district in the par. of Ling, or East Ling, hund. of Andersfield, in the co. of Somerset, 3 miles to the N.W. of Langport. It is a slight eminence in the marshy tract at the junction of the river Tone with the Parret, between Boroughbridge and the parish church. Here is a station on the Durston and Yeovil branch railway. Athelney is interesting as the place of temporary refuge and concealment of Alfred, and the spot on which he subsequently erected an abbey of the Benedictine order, which was dedicated to the Saviour and the apostle St. Peter. No vestiges exist of it, although the buildings are believed to have been of considerable extent. Various relics of antiquity have been discovered here, one of which, possessing a rare interest, is preserved in the Ashmolean museum, Oxford. It is a curious ornament of gold, enamelled, and formed like an amulet for hanging about the neck. On one side is the figure of a female holding flowers in each hand, and an inscription round the figure, "Aelfred æt me gewercan," i.e., "Alfred had me wrought." On the other side is a flower. This "jewel" was found in 1693. The isle of Athelney has an area of about 100 acres, and contains one farmhouse. The name Athelney signifies "noble island."

ATHELSTANEFORD, a par. in the co. of Haddington, Scotland, 5 miles to the S. of North Berwick. The par. lies in a low district, formerly a marsh, but now cultivated, to the S. of the river Peffer, and contains the postal vils. of Athelstaneford and Drem. The North British railway passes through the parish. Athelstaneford is said to have taken its name from Athelstan, a Danish chief who fell in battle near the ford in 815, and was here interred. Probably, however, it is derived from Ath-ail, the Gaelic for "stone ford," a ford of this nature called "Lug Burn" existing at the spot where the battle was fought. Remains of a Pictish town exist, and traces of an entrenchment, near which some Roman relics have been found. It is said that here was formerly a chapel of the Knights Templars. The living, which is of the yearly val. of £290, is in the presb. of Haddington, and in the gift of the chief heritor, Sir David Kinlock, Bart. The ancient church, which was founded about 1150 by Ada, daughter of the Earl of Warrenne and Surrey, having fallen into decay, the present more convenient one was erected in 1780. In the churchyard is the grave and monument of Robert Blair, author of the once popular poem, "The Grave," who was minister of Athelstaneford, and resided in the manse fifteen years. An obelisk has been erected to perpetuate his memory, and stands on the village green. The living was also held for ten years by John Home, author of the tragedy of "Douglas." He never occupied the manse, and at last quitted the living on account of the ill-will excited against him by his publication of the play. This village was the birthplace of Archibald Skirving, who distinguished himself as a portrait-painter, and whose remains rest in the churchyard here beneath a marble monument.

ATHENRY BARONY, one of the eighteen bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, bounded on the N. by Tyaquin bar., on the E. by Kilconnel and Loughrea bars., on the S. by Loughrea bar., and on the W. by Dunkellin and Clare bars. It comprises parts of the following pars.:—Athenry, Kilconickny, Kilcomerin, Killimordaly, Killulagh, and Lickerrig, and extends over an area of 25,782 acres.

ATHENRY, a par. and market town in the bar. of Athenry, and the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 13 miles to the E. of Galway, and 120 miles from Dublin by road, or 113 miles by the Dublin and Galway railway, on which it is a station. There is a branch railway to Tuam from Athenry, and a bill has passed (1862) for a line to Ennis, connecting this part of Ireland with Limerick, Cork, and Waterford. Athenry was a fortified town at a very remote period, and owed its origin to the De Burgos and Berminghams, Anglo-Norman adventurers. A Dominican monastery was founded here in the reign of King John, the site for which was given by Meyler de Bermingham. It was completed in 1261, and grew rapidly in wealth and importance. The earls of Ulster, who were among its principal benefactors, and other leading persons of the country, selected it for their place of interment. The town was sacked, and part of it burnt, by the sons of the Earl of Clanricarde, in 1577. Some attempt at restoration was made afterwards, but in 1596 the Irish, under Hugh O'Donnell, attacked and totally destroyed the town, leaving only the castle, the church, and the abbey. Athenry appears to have been a borough before the reign of Edward II., and returned two members to parliament in the reign of Richard II. It ceased to be a parliamentary borough at the Union, and a municipal borough at the passing of the Corporation Reform Act; before which time it included a portion of the adjoining bars. of Clare, Dunkellin, Kilconnel, and Tyaquin, and was governed under a charter of Charles II. The original charter, with the seal attached to it, is now in the possession of Robert French, Esq., of Monioca Castle. The public buildings are, the church, the Roman Catholic chapel, and a National school. Here is a police-station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight by the county magistrates. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, of the val. of £803, in the patron. of the crown and the bishop alternately. The principal residences are—Athenry House, within the precincts of the town, and Castle Ellere, Belleville, Moor Park, Castle Lambert, Moyvilla, Castle Turvin, Willmount, Rockmore, Graig-Abbey, Mhairwarra, Prospect, Raheen, and Mulpit, all within a circle of three miles of Athenry. The market is on Friday, and fairs are held on the 5th May, the 2nd July, and the 20th October. The Berminghams took from Athenry the title of baron, which was the premier barony of Ireland.

ATHERFIELD, a tythg. in the par. of Shorwell, Isle of Wight, in the co. of Southampton, 6 miles to the S. of Newport. Here is a coastguard station.

ATHERINGTON, a par. in the northern div. of the hund. of Tawton, in the co. of Devon, 6½ miles to the S. of Barnstaple, its post town, and 7 N.E. of Torrington. The river Taw runs through it, and the North Devon railway, which passes along the Taw valley, has a station at the small village of Umberleigh, 1 mile distant. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £416, with 205 acres of glebe land, which is a manor of itself, in the patron. of the Rev. J. Arthur, the incumbent. In the church is a beautifully-carved oak screen, a rood loft, and several interesting monuments; one of a crusader, another an altar-tomb, with brasses of a knight and ladies. The Wesleyans and Baptists have each a chapel here. In ancient times there was a chapel at Umberleigh, but the building is now used as a barn! In the reign of Henry III., here was a conventual establishment, a cell to the abbey of Caen, in Normandy. Atherington Hall is the principal residence.

ATHERINGTON, Sussex. See ADDINGTON.

ATHERSTONE, a hmlt. in the par. of White Lackington, and hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, in the co. of Somerset, not far from Ilminster.

ATHERSTONE, a market town and formerly a chplry. in the par. of Mancetter, but now a district par. in the Atherstone div. of the hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick, 23 miles to the N. of Warwick, and 102 miles from London by the Trent Valley branch of the London and North Western railway, on which it is a station. It is situated in a pleasant and highly-cultivated country, near the western bank of the river Anker, close to the borders of Leicestershire. The Roman road, Watling Street, passes through this place, and a little to the west is the Coventry and Fazeley canal. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and had a Saxon origin, its original name being Ardeston, the "town in Arden," or in the great wood. Its name in Domesday Book is written Aderestone. At the Conquest, the manor was the property of the Countess Godiva, and was granted to Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester. It afterwards passed through the hands of the Earls of Stafford and Warwick, till, in 1464, it became the property of the Carthusian monks of Mountgrace, in Yorkshire, and subsequently was given to the free chapel of St. George, at Windsor. In the latter part of the reign of Edward III., a friary of the Augustine order was founded here by Ralph Basset, the value of which at the Dissolution was only £2 per annum. The chief historical interest which attaches to the place is from its association with the decisive battle which closed the long and destructive Wars of the Roses. Bosworth Field lies about 8 miles to the E. of Atherstone. The Earl of Richmond reached the town with his forces on the 20th of August, 1485, and encamped for the night in a meadow to the north of the church, since called "royal meadow." The earl is said to have slept at the inn known by the sign of the "Three Tuns;" and during the night he had a conference with Sir William Stanley, and formed the plans which resulted in the entire overthrow of the king in the great battle which followed on the 22nd. This conference took place in a little close adjoining the town. The old carved oak chair occupied by Richmond on this occasion is said to be still in existence, and is in the possession of Stafford S. Baxter, Esq., of Atherstone. The town consists of one principal street, with several smaller ones branching off from it, forming a portion of the old Watling Street; and when the road was taken up in 1850 for the construction of a new sewer, the Roman pavement was discovered, and several Roman coins, about 3 feet below the present street. Ancient and modern buildings are curiously intermixed, but the town is well paved, and lighted with gas. There is a market-place on the north side of the town, with a townhall—a plain modern structure supported on pillars, and containing spacious assembly-rooms; also a corn-exchange, recently built. A literary institution, with library and news-room, a dispensary, and a savings-bank have been established. The Trent Valley railway passes through the western extremity of the town, for which there is a first-class station. The gas-works are on the south side of the town. The hat manufacture is carried on extensively; ribbons and shalloons are also made. At Baddesley Moor, there are collieries in which many hands are employed. The scenery surrounding the town is rich and beautiful, extending northwards over wide landscapes to the hills of Derbyshire, and southwards, to a range of wooded hills affording pleasant shelter.—Atherstone is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and a County Court district. It is a polling-place for the county elections, and petty sessions are held once a week. There are extensive wharves on the canal in the north-west part of the town.—The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £150, in the patron. of the Vicar of Mancetter. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It was erected in 1849, on the site of the ancient chapel of the friary, the old tower and the chancel being retained. It is in the decorated style of architecture, the tower rising from the intersection of the nave and chancel. The Roman Catholics, Independents, Secession Independents, Unitarians, and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. There are also two monastic institutions—St. Scholastica's priory, and the Benedictine nuns of the order of the Blessed Sacrament. Atherstone is rich in charitable endowments. A free grammar school was founded in 1573, and endowed by Sir William Devereux, and other benefactors. The system of education has been extended, and its present revenue is £320. There is another free school in South Street, founded by William Simmonds in 1685, called the English school, intended to prepare pupils for the grammar school. Its revenue is £42. The bequests and endowments for the benefit of the poor are very numerous.—Near the town is Atherstone Hall, the seat of the Bracebridges. From the rising ground on which the mansion stands, there is a fine view over the river Anker, and Charnwood Forest, in Leicestershire. At Merevale, within 1 mile of the town, are the ruins of the abbey. W. S. Dugdale, Esq., is lord of the manor, and Viscount Curzon master of the Atherstone hounds, which are kept by subscription at Witherley. The market day is Tuesday. Fairs are held on the 7th of April and the 18th of July for the sale of cattle; on the 19th and 21st of September for cattle and cheese; and on the 4th of December for cattle and general wares. There is also a statute fair for the hiring of servants. Atherstone is noted for its cheese fair, one of the greatest in England.

ATHERSTONE-ON-STOUR, a par. in the hund. of Kington, in the co. of Warwick, 3 miles to the S. of Stratford-on-Avon. It is in a pleasant district, on the borders of Gloucestershire. The river Stour and the tram railway between Stratford and Moreton pass through it. Ailstow is a vil. comprised in this par. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £288, in the patron. of the Rev. Dr. T. Cox. This village was the birthplace of Dr. Thomas, the continuator of the "Antiquities of the County of Warwick," by William Dugdale. The principal seat is Alscot Park.

ATHERTON, a chplry. in the par. of Leigh and hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles to the N. of Leigh. It is a station on the Bolton and Kenyon Junction railway, a branch of the London and North Western. The Manchester and Wigan canal passes within a little distance of the chplry. The inhabitants are employed in the cotton manufactories, the collieries, and ironworks. Nail-making and machine-making are also carried on. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, of the val. of £100, in the patron. of Lord Lilford. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Atherton Hall, the seat of Lord Lilford, is a modern mansion, near the site of an old hall which was the seat of the Athertons. Fairs are held here on the 29th June and the 29th August.

ATHGLASSON, a vil. in the bar. of Upper Kells, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, not far from Kells.

ATHLACCA, a par. in the bar. of Coshma, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Bruff. It is situated in a very fertile country, on the Morning Star river, which runs through the parish, and joins the river Maigue a little below the village. There is much good pasture land, and limestone is abundant. The living is a rect. united with that of Dromore, in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore. The church, a small building with a spire, was erected in 1823. Here are remains of a church built in the 13th century by the Knights Templars. The churchyard contains several ancient tombs of the De Lacys, formerly lords of the territory. They had two castles here, the ruins of which still stand; one, named Old Court, near the village, and the other Tullerbuoy, now called Castle Ivers. Here are also remains of Rathcannon Castle, founded by the O'Caseys. This parish was the scene of a battle between the forces of James II. and William III., in 1691. A police force is stationed here. Castle Ivers, the seat of R. Ivers, Esq., near the village, and Athlacca House, are the principal residences.

ATHLEAGUE, a par. and post town partly in the bar. of Athlone, in the co. of Roscommon, and partly in the bar. of Killian, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Roscommon. Clooneenbegg and Tromann are vils. included in this par. It lies on both banks of the river Suck, which forms the boundary of the two counties, and is here crossed by a causeway and a series of bridges passing from island to island. Much of the district is bog. There are quarries of good limestone and freestone. Iron has been obtained, but the mines are not now worked. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, of the yearly val., with the vics. of Fuerty and Kilbegnet, of £314, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was formerly a family chapel, and is of great antiquity. An abbey of gray friars was founded here at an early period. There are several seats of the gentry—Rookwood, Castle Kelly, Fortwilliam, &c. Fairs are held on the 11th July and the 24th September.

ATHLONE BARONY, one of the nine bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Roscommon, in the prov. of Connaught, Ireland. It lies on the southern part of the co., and is bounded by the bars. of Ballymoe and Ballintobber on the N., by Lough Ree and the co. of West Meath on the E., by the bar. of Moycarn on the S., and by the river Suck, which separates it from the co. of Galway, on the W. Comprised in the bar. are the town of Athlone, the vil. of Mount Talbot, the pars. of Cam, Drum, Dysart, Fuerty, Killinvoy, Kilmeane, Kiltoom, Rahara, St. John's, St. Peter's, Taghmaconnell, Tisrara, with parts of Athleague and Taghboy. It extends over an area of 146,183 acres.

ATHLONE, a market town and municipal and parliamentary borough, partly in the par. of St. Peter's and bar. of Athlone, in the co. of Roscommon, prov. of Connaught, and partly in the par. of St. Mary's, in the bar. of Brawney, co. of West Meath, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 17 miles to the S.E. of Roscommon, and 76 miles to the W. of Dublin. It is a station on the Dublin and Galway line of railway. The river Shannon intersects the town, and falls into Lough Ree a little below it. The great road from Dublin to Galway passes through the town. Early in the 13th century a Cistercian abbey was founded here, and soon afterwards the castle was built, which became a place of great importance. It was held some time by the Earl of Essex, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It stood a long siege by the Irish during the presidency of Lord Ranelagh, and was ultimately taken by Sir James Dillon in 1642. During the civil war of the reign of Charles I., the castle was taken by the parliamentary forces, and the town was burnt. In 1691, after a cannonade of extraordinary severity, and a most heroic and energetic defence, by the forces of James II., under Colonel Grace, the town was stormed and finally taken by the English forces under De Ginkell. After being rebuilt and made a great military depôt, castle and town were again destroyed during a thunderstorm in 1697, when the powder magazine was blown up. Part of the old town walls and one of the gateways are still standing. The present defences are on the Connaught or western side of the river. Near the castle are the barracks, capable of holding 3,000 men, and covering a space of 15 acres. There is an armoury and a military hospital. Great improvements have been made in the town. In place of the old bridge, built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and which was only 12 feet wide, and had three flour-mills on it, a new one was erected in 1844. It is a handsome stone structure of nine arches, besides a swivel arch for the passage of steamers, &c. A large dock has been constructed near the bridge. The railway is carried across the Shannon on a noble iron bridge. The houses are mostly built of limestone, which is abundant in the district. There is a court-house, which was built in 1703, a bridewell, two banks, a hospital, a union workhouse, and a dispensary. The hat manufacture was formerly extensively carried on here, but it has declined. There are considerable establishments for distilling, brewing, tanning, and soap and candle making, and several flour-mills. Two branch banks are established.—Athlone received its charter of incorporation from James I. in 1606, and confirmations and extensions of it from Charles II. The style of the corporation was "the sovereign, bailiffs, burgesses, and freemen of the town of Athlone." Under a new Act the government is vested in commissioners. It has a revenue of £195, and an area of 491 acres, including 1,011 houses, inhabited by a population of 5,001, according to the census of 1861. The borough returned two members to the Irish parliament till the Union, and since that time it returns one to the Imperial parliament. Two newspapers are published—the Westmeath Independent and the Athlone Sentinel. There is frequent steam communication with Limerick.—There are two livings in Athlone,—one a rect. in the par. of St. Mary, of the val. of £398; it is in the dioc. of Meath, and in the patron. of the bishop; the church was built in 1826. The other, a perpet. cur. in the par. of St. Peter, of the val. of £131; it is in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, and in the gift of the Incorporation Society; the church, erected in 1804, occupies the site of the old monastery. There are two Roman Catholic chapels, and convents of the Augustine and Franciscan orders. The Presbyterians, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists have each a place of worship here. The Ranelagh school was founded in 1760, in accordance with a grant of an earlier date by Lord Ranelagh, for the education and apprenticing of forty boys. There is an endowment by William Handcock, Esq., for the relief of the poor, and several other small charities. Athlone is the seat of a presbytery, and of a Poor-law Union. The Athlone canal is on the Connaught side of the river, and was formed to carry the navigation past the rapids at the bridge. Three bridges cross the canal. Moydrum Castle, a handsome castellated mansion in fine grounds, on the eastern side of the Shannon, is the seat of Viscount Castlemaine. There are many other pleasant residences. The De Ginkells of Utrecht take from Athlone the title of earl. Tuesday and Saturday are the market days. Fairs are held on the first Monday after the 6th January, the 21st March, the Wednesday before Ascension Day, and the first Monday in September.

ATHLUMNY, a par. in the bar. of Skreen, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, close to Navan. It lies in a fertile and cultivated country on the river Boyne, at the confluence of the Blackwater with that river, and contains part of the town of Navan, and the vils. of Factory and Little Furze. Limestone is quarried extensively here, and there are flour and flax mills employing a large number of hands. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Meath, val. £55, in the patron. of P. P. Metge, Esq. The church is decayed, and divine service is performed in a private house. There are considerable remains of a castle which belonged to the Dowdells, and was destroyed by them that it might not be taken by Cromwell. The principal seats are Athlumny House, in a tasteful demesne on the river bank, and Athlumny Cottage.

ATHNASSEY, or ATHNEASY, a par. in the bars. of Coshlea and Small County, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Kilmallock. It is situated in a fertile district, partly arable and partly meadow land. The living is a rect. in the union of Kilmallock, in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe. The church, of which scarcely any traces are left, was dedicated to St. Athanasius, and was probably erected in the 7th century. There are some trifling remains of castles and religious houses, one of the latter being called Adam's Church. Martinstown is the principal seat.

ATHNID, a par. in the bar. of Eliogarty, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles from Thurles. The living is a rect. forming part of the union of Thurles, in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore. There is no church. The river Suir flows through the parish.

ATHNOWEN, or ST. MARY, a par. in the bar. of East Muskerry, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 7 miles to the S.W. of Cork. It is situated on the south bank of the river Lea, and is crossed by the river Bride. One part of the parish is hilly and barren; the soil in the other part is very good. Limestone, which underlies the surface in the valleys, is quarried largely for agricultural purposes. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne, of the val., with that of Kilnaglory, of £655, in the patron. of the bishop. There is an ancient church, with a square tower. An abbey formerly stood in this parish, erected probably in the 7th century; some portion of its walls exist at The Grange, the seat of J. Hawkes, Esq. There are also ruins of a castle called Castle Inchy. Here are some interesting caves in the limestone rock, of considerable extent; the entrance is near the bridge over the Bride. The principal residences are The Grange, Sirmount, Spring Mount, &c. Petty sessions are held here once a fortnight.

ATHOLE, or ATHOLL, an extensive tract of country in the northern part of the co. of Perth, Scotland, being one of the eight ancient divs., or Stewartries, of the co. It is bounded on the N. by the Grampian range, branches of which also intersect it. It is almost wholly mountainous, with romantic glens, and a large extent of woodland. The forest of Athole, which covers an area of 100,000 acres, and is a famous hunting-ground abounding in red deer and other game, occupies the western part of the district. The highest points are at Cairn Gower and Scarsoch, the former rising to the height of 3,725 feet, the latter 3,390 feet. The approach from the south is by the pass of Killiecrankie, a wild narrow chasm, through which the river Garry runs, and which was the scene of the battle between General Mackay and Claverhouse (Viscount Dundee), in July, 1689, in which the latter was victorious, but fell on the field. The principal lakes in the district are Loch Ericht and Loch Rannoch; and it is watered by the rivers Tummel, Garry, Bruar, and Tilt. Athole House is the seat of the Duke of Athole, who takes his title from this district, and who is proprietor of nearly the whole of it. Here, in 1844, he had the honour of receiving her Majesty the Queen as a guest. The district of Athole comprises an area of about 450 square miles.

ATHY, a post and market town, and decayed borough, in the several pars. of St. Michael, St. John, and Churchtown, in the bar. of West Narragh, in the co. of Kildare, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 12 miles to the S. of Kildare, and 32 from Dublin by road, or 45 by the Carlow branch of the Great Southern and Western railway. It is situated in an open country on the river Barrow, at the junction with it of the Grand canal. The town had a monastic origin; two monasteries, one of the Dominican order, the other for Crutched Friars, being founded here in the 13th century. The Irish burnt the town in 1308. In 1315 it was taken and plundered by Edward Bruce and the Scots. Early in the 15th century a military governor was placed here, and in 1506 the Earl of Kildare erected the castle, since called White's Castle, after a proprietor of that name who extended it about 70 years later. The Irish under O'Nial got possession of it in 1648, but it was soon retaken for the parliament. The town consists chiefly of two streets on the east side of the river. The principal business of the place is the corn trade, which is carried on to a large extent. There is a court-house in the market square. The county gaol is near the town on the Carlow road. Part of the ancient castle is converted into barracks for cavalry. A fever hospital and a dispensary have been established, and there are two banks. Athy was incorporated by a charter of James I., in 1613, the style of the corporation being "the sovereign, bailiffs, free burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Athy." The government of the town is by a modern Act vested in commissioners. Till the Union, Athy returned two members to the Irish parliament. It was then disfranchised. The summer assizes and the quarter sessions at Christmas and Midsummer are held here. Petty sessions are held weekly. The town is a chief police station. It is the seat of a Poor-law Union and contains the Union workhouse. The living is a union, comprising the five pars. of St. Michael, St. John, Ardrie, Churchtown, and Tankardstown. The first four form the vic. of St. Nicholas, which is joined to the rect. and vic. of Tankardstown. The val. of the living, which is in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare, is £473, and it is in the patron. of the crown and the archbishop alternately. There are two Roman Catholic chapels, and chapels belonging to the Wesleyans and the Calvinists. Scarcely any traces are left of the old monasteries. Of White's Castle there is the square tower. Extensive ruins of Woodstock Castle, erected about 1290, and of Rheban Castle, probably founded in the same century, stand on the west bank of the river. The moat of Ardskull, an ancient earthwork of rude construction, is on elevated ground about 3 miles from Athy. Tuesday and Saturday are the market days. Fairs are held on the 17th March, the 25th April, the 9th June, the 25th July, the 10th October, and the 11th December.

ATLOW, a chplry. in the par. of Bradborne, and hund. of Appletree, in the co. of Derby, 4 miles to the N.E. of Ashbourne. It is situated in a pleasant district on the river Dove, and from a lofty hill, called Magger's Bush, not far from the village, there is a fine prospect. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. of £148, in the patron. of C. H. Oakover, Esq.

ATPAR, Cardiganshire. See ADPAR.

ATTANAGH, a par. partly in the bar. of Fassadinin, in the co. of Kilkenny, and partly in the bar. of Clarmallagh, Queen's County, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles from Durrow. It is in a fertile country, on the river Nore. The living is a vic. united with the rect. of Aharney, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin.

ATTENBOROUGH, a par. in the southern div. of the wap. of Broxtow, in the co. of Nottingham, 6 miles to the S.W. of Nottingham, its post town. It is situated on the western bank of the river Trent, immediately above the junction of the Erwash with it, and on the edge of Derbyshire. The Midland Counties railway runs through the parish, and has a station at Long Eaton, which is 2 miles to the N.E. Chilwell and Toton are hmlts. of Attenborough. The stocking manufacture is carried on in the village, employing about thirty frames. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val., with the cur. of Bramcote annexed to it, of £250, in the patron. of G. S. Foljambe, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are some almshouses, and other charitable endowments, amounting to £19 per annum. Chilwell Hall is the principal residence. This village was the birthplace (1611), of Ireton, friend and son-in-law to Oliver Cromwell.

ATTERBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Bishop's Norton, in the wap. of Aslacoe, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 8 miles to the W. of Market Rasen. It lies close to the course of the old way called Ermine Street. The charitable revenues of the township amount to £8.

ATTERCLIFFE-CUM-DARNAL, a chplry. in the par. of Sheffield, southern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N.E. of Sheffield. It is situated on the river Don, and takes its name from a lofty cliff near the village overhanging the river. The Sheffield and Tinsey canal and the Rotherham railway, a single line constructed in 1847, pass through the chplry. It contains the hmlt. of Carbrook. The population are engaged in the manufacture of cutlery and other branches of the Sheffield trade. It was at Attercliffe that the first specimens of cast steel were produced. The beautiful variety of coal called Cannel is obtained in this district. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £180, in the patron. of the Vicar of Sheffield. There is an almshouse, an endowed Sunday school, and several other charities. The principal residence is Attercliffe Hall. The manor is held by the Duke of Norfolk.

ATTERLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Much Wenlock, Wenlock lib., in the co. of Salop, 2 miles from Much Wenlock.

ATTERTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Witherley, and hund. of Sparkenhoe, in the co. of Leicester, 5 miles S.W. from Market Bosworth.

ATTINGTON, an ext. par. lib. in the hund. of Thame, in the co. of Oxford, 3 miles from Thame.

ATTLEBOROUGH, or ATTLEBURGH, a par. and small town, in the hund. of Shropham, in the co. of Norfolk, 14 miles to the S.W. of Norwich, and 94 miles from London by road, or 110 miles by the Eastern Counties railway, on which it is a station. This town has existed from a very early time, and was of considerable importance, being not only a market town, but also the capital of East Anglia, and the residence of the kings. It appears to have been fortified for defence against the Danes, and its fortifications were standing in the reign of Henry II. The manor belonged at one time to the Mortimers, by one of whom, Robert de Mortimer, a chantry or college was founded in the reign of Richard II. Its value at the Dissolution was £22, and it was granted by the king to the Ratcliffes. The present town consists of one long street irregularly built, and a number of respectable family residences recently erected. Near the railway station is the New Inn, a handsome commercial and family hotel. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £1,226, in the patron. of Sir W. B. Smÿth, Bart. The church is a large and beautiful cruciform structure in the early English style, with a central embattled tower. The porch on the north side is remarkably handsome. The chancel was destroyed some years ago by the falling of the spire, and has not since been rebuilt; although the interior of the church was repaired and re-seated in 1844. In the church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, are monuments to the principal families formerly connected with the town. There are chapels belonging to the Quakers, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists; also a National school, and an allotment of poor's land, containing 57 acres, and several other charitable endowments of the yearly value of £76. Attleborough Hall is the principal residence. Thursday is the market day. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Easter, Holy Thursday, and the 15th of August. Also a pleasure fair the day before March assizes.

ATTLEBOROUGH, a tnshp. and hmlt. in the par. of Nuneaton, Atherstone div. of the hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick, 1 mile from Nuneaton, to which town it forms a suburb. The inhabitants are mostly engaged in the ribbon factories, saw-mills, brick-making, wood-turning, and other industrial occupations of the neighbouring town. It lies on the east bank of the river Anker, near the borders of Leicestershire. The Trent Valley railway passes through the hamlet, and the Coventry canal goes near it. About 2 miles to the N.E. is Watling Street. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £170, in the patron. of the Vicar of Nuneaton. The church is a red brick building with stone spire, erected in 1842, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The Baptists have a chapel, and there is a National and infant school.

ATTLEBRIDGE, a par. in the hund. of Taverham, in the co. of Norfolk, 9 miles to the N.W. of Norwich. Reepham is its post town. It is situated on the river Wensum. The living is a vic. annexed to the rect. of Elderford, in the dioc. of Norwich, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew, and possesses a monumental brass.

ATTYMASS, a par. in the bar. of Gallen, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles to the N. of Foxford. It is situated in a hilly country, on the north bank of the river Moy. The Ox mountains rise on the western side of the parish, which contains much bog and many lakes. Freestone is abundant, and limestone occurs here and there. The living is a vic. united with that of Ardagh, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. A monastery once stood at Kildermol, of which some picturesque ruins remain on the border of a lake. Fairs are held on the 24th May, the 7th July, the 15th November, and the 15th December.

ATWICK, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Holderness, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N. of Hornsea. Hull is its post town. It is situated on the coast of the North Sea, in a district on which the sea is encroaching, and which suffers especially during the prevalence of storms. The par. comprises the hmlts. of Little Atwick, Arram, and Skirlington. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, of the val. of £149, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a free school founded by Mr. Fenwick, which has a revenue of £46. There are several other endowments, the yearly value of which is £13.

ATWORTH, or ALFORD, a chplry. in the par. of Great Bradford, hund. and union of Bradford-on-Avon, in the co. of Wilts, 3 miles N.W. from Melksham, its post town, 3 S. of Corsham railway station, and 5 N.E. of Bradford. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Salisbury, of the val., with that of South Wraxall attached, of £250, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. It is now a distinct parish for ecclesiastical purposes. The church is a neat modern structure, rebuilt in 1828. At a short distance to the north stands the ruined tower of the ancient church. The Independents have a chapel. There is a school with a small endowment, and some other charities. Lord Methuen is lord of the manor.

AUBIN, ST., a town in the par. of St. Brelade, in the island of Jersey, Channel Islands, 3¼ miles from St. Helier. It is situated in a charming and picturesque district, on the coast of the beautiful bay to which the town has given its name. The place was formerly of more importance than at present. It was the chief seat of the shipping trade, and was reputed to have the best harbour in Jersey. From the rock on which the castle stands, the pier is carried out, and shelters the harbour. The town is scattered along the shore and over the steep wooded heights, from which there are fine prospects over the bay and the country. At the south-western extremity of the bay is the rock called Noirmont Point. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £60, in the gift of the proprietors. There are two places of worship besides the church. A market is held on Tuesday and Friday. The place is chiefly attractive to the lover of nature and retirement. To such, it is, as an old traveller says, a place to be chosen among a thousand.

AUBOURN, a par. in the lower div. of the wap. of Boothby Graffo, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 7 miles to the S.W. of Lincoln, its post town. It is situated on the river Witham, not far from the border of Nottinghamshire, and comprises the tnshp. of Haddington, and the hmlt. of Marlborough. The Nottingham and Lincoln railway runs through the parish, and the Fosse Way lies within a short distance to the N.E. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £209, in the patron. of the Rev. H. Neville. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The annual value of the charitable endowments is £19.

AUBURN, or LISSOY, a vil. in the par. of Kilkenny West, and bar. of the same name, in the co. of Westmeath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 8 miles to the N.E. of Athlone. Its name is rendered familiar to us as being the original of the "sweet Auburn" of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village." Its pleasant rural scenery still lies around it, but the old parsonage, where the poet's boyhood was spent, is in ruins, and his hawthorn tree, carried off bit by bit by ardent, if not wise, admirers, now enriches a thousand private cabinets and collections.

AUBURN, or OWBURN, a hmlt. in the par. of Fraisthorpe, wap. of Dickering, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles from Bridlington. It lies on the shore of Bridlington Bay, and has been much damaged by the encroachments of the sea. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the cur. of Fraisthorpe.

AUCHANDOYNE, a vil. in the par. of Braemar and Crathie, in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, not far from the village of Castletown.

AUCHENBARD, a vil. in the par. of Livingston, in the co. of Linlithgow, Scotland, 2 miles to the S. of Blackburn.

AUCHENCLOICH, a vil. in the co. of Ayr, Scotland, 3 miles from Mauchline.

AUCHENDINNY, a vil. in the par. of Glencross, in the co. of Edinburgh, Scotland, 8 miles to the S. of Edinburgh. It is situated in the beautiful valley of the North Esk. Here is a paper-mill, which is probably the oldest in Scotland. Mackenzie, author of the "Man of Feeling," resided at Auchendinny House.

AUCHENDORY, a vil. in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, not far from Kirriemuir.

AUCHENFAD, a vil. in the co. of Kirkcudbright, Scotland, not far from the village of Auchincairn. It is situated near the coast of the Solway Frith.

AUCHENHANE, a vil. in the co. of Renfrew, Scotland, not far from Lochwinnoch and the Clyde.

AUCHENRIE, a vil. in the co. of Wigton, Scotland; it is nearly in the centre of the south-western peninsula of the co., 2 miles from Port Patrick.

AUCHINBLAE, a vil. in the par. of Fordoun, in the co. of Kincardine, Scotland, 4 miles from Laurencekirk. It stands on the banks of the Luther water, and has a flax-mill. A fair for the sale of black cattle and horses is held weekly from Michaelmas to Christmas in this village.

AUCHINCAIRN, a postal vil. in the par. of Rerrick, in the co. of Kirkcudbright, Scotland, 7 miles E. from Kirkcudbright. It stands pleasantly on the bay of Auchincairn, an inlet of the Solway Frith; the small island of Heston lies opposite to the village, at the opening of the bay.

AUCHINCAR, a vil. in the Isle of Arran, in the co. of Bute, Scotland. It is seated in the pleasant valley of Glenrosa on the western side of the island, not far from Mauchry Bay.

AUCHINCRAIVE, a vil. in the par. of Methlick, in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 7 miles from Ellon. It is watered by the river Ythan.

AUCHINCRAW, a vil. in the par. of Coldingham, in the co. of Berwick, Scotland, 7 miles from Dunse.

AUCHINDOIR, a par. in the Alford district of the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 7 miles to the N.W. of Alford. The old parish of Kearn is incorporated with it. It signifies the "field of chase," and derives its name from the fact of Luthlac, the son of Lady Macbeth, having been pursued and slain here by Malcolm. It lies in a bleak and hilly country, on the river Bogie, bounded on the west by one of the Grampian ranges, and comprising the village of Leith-Lumsden. The ground rises at the Buck Hill, in Cabrach, on the border of Banffshire, to the height of 2,286 feet. There are freestone quarries here, and small quantities of serpentine and asbestos have been discovered. The living, which is of the val. of £158, is in the presb. of Alford, and in the patron. of the Earl of Fife. There is also a Free church. The chief residences are Auchindoir House and Craig. The parish extends over an area of about 30 square miles. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March, the last Tuesday in April, O.S., the last Friday in May, O.S., besides one in August, and one in October.

AUCHINEARN, or AUCHINAIRN, OLD and NEW, a vil. in the par. of Cadder, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, 4 miles to the N. of Glasgow.

AUCHINGILL, a tnshp. in the par. of Cannisbury, in the co. of Caithness, Scotland, 2 miles from Keiss.

AUCHINLECK, or AFFLECK (as always pronounced), a par. and postal vil. in the Kyle district of the co. of Ayr, Scotland, 2 miles to the N.W. of Cumnock. Here is a station on the Glasgow, Dumfries, and Carlisle railway. It occupies a district in the middle of the county, and is watered in the northern part by the river Ayr, in the southern by the river Lugar. In the centre of the parish is Aird's Moss. [See AIRD'S MOSS.] Freestone, limestone, and coal are obtained in abundance here. Silver and lead have been found, though not in large quantities. Some of the population are engaged in the embroidery of muslin. The living, of the val. of £161, is in the presb. of Ayr, and in the patron. of Sir J. Boswell, Bart. Auchinleck House, or the Place of Auchinleck, the seat of the Boswells, is a modern mansion erected by Lord Auchinleck, the father of James Boswell, to whom we owe the famous "Life of Johnson." The great doctor was himself entertained at this house in 1773. Not far from the mansion are the ruins of the ancient castle, which also belonged to the Boswells, to whom the territory was granted by James IV. This parish was the birthplace of M'Gavin, author of "The Protestant." A fair is held here on the last Tuesday in August. The par. comprises an area of about 36 square miles.

AUCHINLOCK, a hmlt. in the par. of Cadder, in the co. of Lanark, 4 miles to the N. of Glasgow. The hmlt took its name from an extensive loch formerly existing here, which has been drained.

AUCHINMULLY, or LOWER BANTON, a vil. in the par. of Kilsyth, in the co. of Stirling, Scotland, not far from Kilsyth.

AUCHINRAITH, a vil. in the par. of Blantyre, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, 3 miles from Hamilton.

AUCHINTIBER, a vil. in the par. of Blantyre, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, 3 miles from Hamilton.

AUCHLEVEN, a vil. in the par. of Premnay, Garioch district of the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 5 miles S. from Culsalmond.

AUCHLOSSEN, a small loch partly in the par. of Aboyne and partly in that of Lumphanan, co. of Aberdeen, Scotland.

AUCHMEDDAN, a vil. in the par. of Aberdour, Deer district of the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 3 miles to the W. of Aberdour. It lies on the coast of the German Ocean, and was formerly the seat of the Baird family.

AUCHMILLAN, a vil. in the par. of Mauchline, Kyle district of the co. of Ayr, Scotland, not far from Mauchline.

AUCHMITHIE, a vil. in the par. of St. Vigeans, in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 3 miles to the N. of Arbroath. It is situated on a lofty bank of rock on the sea-coast. The inhabitants are fishermen. A coast-guard station is fixed here. In the neighbourhood is a cave called the Gaylet Pot. Auchmithie House was the residence of the Guthries.

AUCHNACRAIG, Argyleshire. See ACHNACRAIG.

AUCHTERARDER, a par., post town, and seat of a presb in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 11 miles to the S.W. of Perth. It is a station on the Scottish Central railway. The par. is situated on the river Earn, which bounds it to the north, and the river Ruthven, which intersects it. Part of the parish lies among the Ochil hills, the highest point being at Craigrossie, which has an elevation of 2,359 feet. It has been said that Auchterarder was once a royal burgh, but evidence of this is wanting. It was burnt, with several other villages, by the Earl of Mar, in 1716, and a curious document is preserved by the Society of Antiquaries, containing a promise of indemnification for the injuries thus sustained, and signed on behalf of the Pretender, by Mar. In recent times this place has attained some distinction in Scottish ecclesiastical history, as the first to make the protest and resistance to the claim of the civil power which gave occasion to the famous veto Act, and the disruption of the church, followed by the rise and rapid organisation of the Free Church. The living, of the val. of £200, is in the presb. of Auchterarder, and in the patron. of the Earl of Kinnoul. There is a Free church in the town, and one also at Aberuthven, together with two charity and four private schools. Ruins of the ancient church of Aberuthven, a par. united to Auchterarder before the Reformation, exist here still. Aberuthven was the burial-place of the Dukes of Montrose. The mausoleum is an elegant structure. There are also ruins of another ancient church, called St. Mungo's. Near the town is part of an old building which is said to have been a hunting-seat of King Malcolm Canmore. The walls are of immense thickness and strength. There are quarries of slate and stone in the parish, and cotton weaving is carried on to a considerable extent. Smithyhaugh and Borland Park are villages of this parish. The principal residence is Auchterarder House, a modern mansion in the Elizabethan style, erected by Captain Hunter. There is a weekly market on Saturdays, at which a great deal of business, principally in grain, is transacted. Six fairs are held in the course of the year—on the last Tuesday in March, the first Thursday in May, the 6th of December, and one in each of the months of August, September, and October. The par. has an area of about 24 square miles.

AUCHTERDAIR, a vil. in the co. of Elgin, Scotland, not far from Duthill.

AUCHTERDERRAN, a par. and postal vil. in the Kirkcaldy district of the co. of Fife, Scotland, 8 miles to the N.E. of Dunfermline. It is situated on the river Ore, and contains the village of Lochgelly. A branch of the Edinburgh and Northern railway passes through the parish. Coal and iron ore are obtained in abundance, and there are several smelting furnaces at Lochgelly. The living, val. £238, is in the presb. of Kirkcaldy, and in the patron. of Boswell of Balmuto. There are three chapels at Lochgelly, belonging to the established and free churches, and the United Presbyterians. The par. has an area of 15 square miles.

AUCHTERGAVEN, or OCHTERGAEN, a par. in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 8 miles to the N.W. of Perth. It is situated in a hilly moorland country on the south-west bank of the river Tay, having Birnam Hill at its northern extremity. It comprises part of the vil. and quoad sacra par. of Stanley, the postal vil. of Bankfoot, and those of Carnie Hill, Waterloo, and several other hmlts. The old parish of Logiebride is incorporated with Auchtergaven. In the village of Stanley is an extensive cotton-mill, in which about 1,000 hands are employed. The same village has a station on a branch of the Scottish Midland Junction railway. The northern part of the parish lies among the Lower Grampian mountains. Many of these rise to an elevation exceeding 1,000 feet. Birnam Hill, Craig-Obney, Craig-Gibbon, and Tullybelton Hill, are the loftiest points. Several small streams run through the parish. There are quarries of slate and good building stone. The living, val. £179, with a manse and glebe, is in the presb. of Dunkeld, and in the patron. of the Crown. The principal mansions are Stanley House, the old seat of the Nairne family, recently repaired and enlarged, and standing amidst magnificent scenery on the bank of the Tay, Airlywight House, and the House of Tullybelton. Part of an old tower is standing near the river at Stanley, which is conjectured to have been a religious house connected with Dunfermline Abbey. Auchtergaven has a claim to kindly remembrance as the birthplace of the young poet, Robert Nicoll, who died in 1837, at the age of 23. One of his songs is entitled, "The Fouk o' Ochtergaen." A fair is held here on the second Friday in November. The par. extends over an area of 19,000 acres, chiefly moorland.

AUCHTERHOUSE, a par. in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 6 miles to the N.W. of Dundee. It has a station on the Dundee and Newtyle branch railway. The par. is situated on the river Dighty, on the southern slope of the Lidlaw Hills, and comprises the villages of Dronley and Kirkton. The living, which is of the val. of £229, is in the presb. of Dundee, and in the patron. of the Earl of Airlie. There is also some glebe attached. Auchterhouse Castle, or the House of Auchterhouse, belongs to the Earl of Airlie. Not far from it is a castle called Wallace Tower. It is a square tower of great strength, the only remains of a large building conjectured to have been the seat of Sir John Ramsay, formerly lord of Auchterhouse. Here, probably, he received the patriot hero after whom the tower is named, when he arrived from France to attempt the liberation of his country. The par. has an area of 3,567 acres, chiefly arable, and abounds with building and paving stone.

AUCHTERLESS, a par. with a postal hmlt., in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 22 miles to the N.W. of Aberdeen. The river Ythan flows through the western part of the parish. The living, val. £191, is in the presb. of Turriff, and in the patron. of Duff of Hatton. Remains of an extensive Roman encampment exist in this place. There are also remains of numerous circles of stones called Druidical. The par. has an area of about 16,000 acres.

AUCHTERMARINE, a vil. in the par. of Kennoway, in the co. of Fife, Scotland, 4 miles from Leven.

AUCHTERMONEY, a vil. in the par. of Campsie, in the co. of Stirling, Scotland, 2 miles from Kirkintilloch.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, anciently a burgh, now a par. and postal vil. in the Cupar district of the co. of Fife, Scotland, 9 miles to the W. of Cupar, and 28 miles N. of Edinburgh. It is a station on the Fife and Kinross branch of the Edinburgh and Northern railway. The parish lies on the north side of the river Eden, a branch of which also intersects it, and it contains the village of Dunshelt. It was made a royal and municipal burgh, under a charter of James IV., and its government is vested in three bailies, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors. The town, situated on rising ground, is irregularly built, and its principal branch of industry is the cotton manufacture. There are some extensive malting establishments, a savings-bank, and a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland. The living is of the val. of £254, in the presb. of Cupar, and in the patron. of Mrs. Bruce, of Falkland. Myres Castle, long the seat of the Moncrieffs, is the chief residence. Besides the parish church, there are places of worship belonging to the Free Church, the United Presbyterians (who have three), and the Baptists. There are several good schools. Fairs are held in February, April, July, October, and December. The par. has an area of about 6 square miles, chiefly arable and pasture.

AUCHTERNEID, a vil. in the par. of Fodderty, in the co. of Ross, Scotland, 4 miles from Dingwall.

AUCHTERTOOL, a par. in the Kirkcaldy district of the co. of Fife, Scotland, 8 miles to the E. of Dunfermline. Newbiggin is a village in this parish. The Edinburgh and Northern railway passes through it. The living, of the val. of £158, is in the presb. of Kirkcaldy, and in the patron. of the Earl of Moray. From the church, which stands on elevated ground in the centre of the parish, there is a fine prospect. Near the small Camilla loch are some picturesque remains of the old house of Hallyards, the seat of the family of Skene. It was here that they received and gave shelter to James V. after his defeat. The par. has an area of about 8 square miles. The chief proprietors are the Earl of Moray and the Wemyss family.

AUCHTERTYRE, a vil. in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, not far from Newtyle. Montrose had a camp here, of which some traces remain.

AUCKLAND, ST. ANDREW, a par. and vil. in the north-western and south-eastern divs. of Darlington ward, in the co. palatine of Durham. The vil. of St. Andrew Auckland, better known as South Church, lies 1 mile to the S. of Bishop Auckland, its post town, and has a station on the Weardale railway. It is situated in a fertile and picturesque country on the river Gaunless, at its junction with the Wear. The parish is of great extent, comprising 45,868 acres, and includes the chplries. of Bishop Auckland, Auckland St. Helen, West Auckland, Byers Green, Etherley, Hamsterley, Shildon, Escomb, Witton-le-Wear, Coundon, Lynesach, and Hunwick, each of which is a perpet. cur. with a district and church of its own, besides many townships. Its name signifies "oak-land," and was derived from the number of oaks in the district, to the whole of which the name Aucklandshire was once applied. Coal and lime are obtained in abundance, and many of the inhabitants are engaged in the collieries. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. with that of St. Anne, Bishop Auckland, £587, in the gift of the Bishop of Durham, who is also lord of the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a large cruciform building, with a tower at the west end. It was made collegiate by Bishop Kairlipho in the 11th century, and subsequently endowed by Bishop Beck in the 13th. Its value at the Dissolution was £180. The church contains two effigies, one of a crusader, in wood, and the other of a woman, in stone: the stalls of the dean and prebendaries, and a brass, with traces of several other monuments. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £730, including the revenues of the free grammar school founded by James I. and the school founded by Bishop Barrington (both at Bishop Auckland), and the school endowed by Lord Crewe, now connected with the Barrington foundation.

AUCKLAND, BISHOP, Durham. See BISHOP AUCKLAND.

AUCKLAND, ST. HELEN, a chplry. and small vil. in the par. of St. Andrew Auckland, ward of Darlington, in the co. of Durham, 3 miles to the S.W. of Bishop Auckland. It is situated on the north side of the river Gaunless, which joins the Wear a little below. The Stockton and Darlington branch railway has erected a passenger station at a place called Haggerleazes. The population of the village are principally employed in two large collieries, called St. Helen's and West Auckland. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, of the val. of £220, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. Here is a free school for boys and girls, erected by the proprietors of St. Helen's colliery.

AUCKLAND, WEST, a tnshp. and large pleasant vil. in the par. of St. Andrew Auckland, ward of Darlington, in the co. of Durham, 3 miles to the S.W. of Bishop Auckland. It is situated on the south side of the river Gaunless, opposite to St. Helen Auckland, in which chplry. it is included. A large brewery has been established here, and there is a lunatic asylum. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there are National and free schools, the latter with an endowment of £20 per annum. The Eden family take the title of baron from this township. The Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor.

AUCKLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Finningley, partly in the wap. of Bassetlaw, in the co. of Nottingham, partly in Doncaster Soke, in the West riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the E. of Doncaster.

AUDENSHAW, one of the four districts of the par. of Ashton-under-Lyne, hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 3 miles to the S.W. of Ashton. Manchester is its post town. It comprises the hmlts. of Hooleyhill, Walkmill, Littlemoss, Woodhouses, and North Street. The Ashton canal and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway pass through Audenshaw. The population are engaged in the cotton and silk manufactures, calico-printing, machine-making, hatmaking, &c. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, of the val. of £150, in the patron. of the crown and the Bishop of Manchester.

AUDLEBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Caistor, in the wap. of Harborough, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 1 mile from Caistor. It is situated on the Wolds, The Brocklesby hounds meet at Audleby Villa, the principal residence in the neighbourhood of the hamlet.

AUDLEM, a par. in the hund. of Nantwich, in the co. palatine of Chester, 6 miles to the S. of Nantwich, its post town. It occupies the southern extremity of the county on the border of Shropshire, and contains the tnshps. of Audlem, Buerton, Dodcot-cum-Wilkesley, Hankelow, and Tittenley. The London and North Western railway passes near it. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chester, in the patron. of Lord Combermere. The church is dedicated to St. James. Here is a free grammar school founded by Ralph Bolton, the present revenue of which is £40, and an English school, with an endowment of £4 a year. The total value of the parochial charities is £132 per annum. Hankelow Hall is the chief residence. A fair is held on St. James's Day, under a grant by Edward I. The par. has an area of 10,525 acres, and a population under 3,000.

AUDLEY, a par. and small town in the northern div. of the hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles to the N.W. of Newcastle-under-Lyme, its post town, 16 from Macclesfield, and about 4 E. from the Burslem station on the North Staffordshire railway. It lies near the border of Cheshire, in a district rich in coal and ironstone, which give employment to a great number of the inhabitants. The Grand Junction canal is carried through the Harecastle tunnel on the eastern side of this parish. It includes the chplry. of Talk-o'-th'-Hill, which has now a district church and parsonage of its own, with the tnshps. of Audley, Bignall-End, Eardley-End, Halmer, Knowl-End, and Park-End. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. of £520, in the patron. of the Rev. E. Gilbert. The church, dedicated to St. James, was restored in 1846. It contains a monumental brass to the memory of Thomas, brother of the famous James, Lord Audley, who fought in the battle of Poictiers, in 1356, and to whose family the manor formerly belonged, together with an alabaster effigy of Delves of Doddington, who was one of his esquires at that battle. The chancel, which was rebuilt in 1846, has a fine east window of seven lights, with very beautiful Gothic tracery in the form of a cross, and is paved with encaustic tiles, after a design found in Tintern Abbey. The nave was restored in 1856, and a fine carved roof added. The register dates from 1538. The Wesleyan Methodists have several chapels here. There is a free grammar school, established and endowed in 1622, by the Rev. Edward Vernon, with £120 per annum, which has been subsequently increased. The chancery suit instituted in 1835 concerning the administration of this charity, was terminated in 1852. There are several smaller charities, amounting to about £50 per annum. On a rock within 3 miles of the village of Audley, are the ruins of Heyley, or Heleigh, Castle, the ancient seat of the Audleys, who took from this place the title of baron. The title is now borne by the Touchets.

AUDLEY END, Essex. See SAFFRON WALDEN.

AUGHADERRY, a hmlt. in the bar. of Trough, in the co. of Monaghan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, not far from the vil. of Aughnacloy.

AUGHCLARE, a vil. in the bar. of Shelburne, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles from New Ross.

AUGHELOGUN, a vil. in the bar. of Clare, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 8 miles to the N. of Galway.

AUGHER, a small market town in the par. and bar. of Clogher, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the N.E. of Clogher, and 96 miles from Dublin. It is situated in a hilly district on the river Blackwater, near the border of Monaghan. It was granted to Sir Thomas Ridgway by James I., in 1613, on condition of his causing twenty Englishmen or Scots to settle there. In the same year a charter of incorporation was granted, constituting the place a borough, with the privilege of returning two representatives to the Irish parliament; which privilege was exercised till the Union. In 1641, the town was garrisoned and successfully defended against Sir Phelim O'Nial and the insurgents by Colonel Chichester. The castle was subsequently dismantled by authority of the parliament. The town has one principal street, which is crossed by another. A chief police station is established here, and petty sessions are held occasionally by the county magistrates. The market-house, the only public building, serves as the church. There are several seats of the gentry, of which the principal is Augher Castle, a fine mansion erected in 1832, close to the ruins of the ancient castle, and now the seat of Sir J. B. Richardson, Bart. Monday is the market-day, and a cattle fair is held once a month.

AUGHINISH, a vil. in the par. of Oughtmama, bar. of Burren, in the co. of Clare, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 14 miles to the N. of Curofin. It is situated in the northern extremity of the county, on the shore of a small bay bearing the same name, and is frequented as a bathing-place.

AUGHNACLOY, a small post and market town in the par. of Carntcel, and bar. of Dungannon, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 19 miles to the S.E. of Omagh, and 89 miles from Dublin. It stands on the north bank of the river Blackwater, near the borders of Monaghan, on the road from Dublin to Londonderry. It consists of one main street and three smaller ones, with a market-house, the parish church of Carntcel, and chapels belonging to Presbyterians, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists. It is a police station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. The town is under the government of Town Commissioners, and is lighted with gas. It belongs to R. Montgomery Moore, Esq., the representative of Acheson Moore, Esq., by whom the church, as well as the town, was built. The proprietor has no residence on the estate, but has lived for many years on the continent. There is an almshouse for seven old men and seven old women who have seen better days, endowed by Dr. Jackson. The market is on Wednesday, and there is a monthly cattle fair.

AUGHNISH, a par. in the bar. of Kilmacrenan, in the co. of Donegal, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N. of Letterkenny. It is situated on the western shore of Lough Swilly, and comprises part of the market town of Rathmelton or Ramelton. The river Lannon flows near the parish on the west. The soil is fertile, and there is a small tract of bog. The population are employed in the linen manufacture, the corn and flour trade, and the bleaching grounds. The living is a rect., part of the union of Tullyaughnish, in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe. The church is at Ramelton. The Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, and Wesleyans have places of worship here. In the vicinity are the ruins of Killydonnell Abbey. The principal residences are Fort Stewart, seat of Sir J. Stewart, Bart., and Shellfield. There are several schools. Fairs are held on the 17th of July, and on the Tuesday after the 20th of May and 11th of December.

AUGHRIM, a par. in the bars. of Kilconnell and Clonmacnowen, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 33 miles to the E. of Galway, and 95 from Dublin. It lies on the road from Galway to Ballinasloe, near the confines of Roscommon, and is chiefly memorable as the scene of the great battle between the Irish army of James II. and the English, under General de Ginkell, 12th July, 1691, in which the latter won a complete victory. At an early period, an Augustine priory was founded here by Theobald, first Butler of Ireland, which was given at the Dissolution to the Earl of Clanricarde. Aughrim was formerly a market town. The living is a rect. and vic. in the dioc. of Killaloe, Kilenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh, val., with the rects. and vics. of Killallaghtan, Kilgerrill, and Killimore-Daly, £300, in the patron. of the bishop and Marquis of Clanricarde alternately. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics and the Primitive Methodists. What was the Wesleyan Chapel is now rented by the incumbent from the landlord, and used as a school-house under the Society for Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics. A police force is stationed in the town. Fairs are held on the 21st of June and the 14th of October. Aughrim gives the title of viscount to the De Ginkells of Utrecht.

AUGHRIM, a par. in the bar. and co. of Roscommon, in the prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Carrick-on-Shannon. It lies on the west side of the river Shannon, and contains several small lakes, some bog, and a large wooded tract. Good limestone is quarried. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, of the val., with those of Cloonagh and Killummod, of £228, in the patron. of the bishop. The old parish church, of which some ruins remain, was the burial-place of the Earls of Roscommon. There is a large fortress on a hill at Rockville, with a small cairn in the centre. Petty sessions are held in Aughrim once a fortnight. The principal residences are Rockville, Lisadurn, and Rushhill.

AUGHRIM, a postal vil. in the bar. of Ballinacor, in the co. of Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 8 miles to the S. of Rathdrum. It is situated in a mountainous district on the Aughrim river, at its junction with the Derrywater, at the head of the picturesque glen of Aughrim. The stream flows in a S.E. direction through the glen, joining the Avoca near Arklow, and there forming the second "meeting of the waters." Fairs are held here on the 22nd July, the 22nd November, and the fourth Tuesday in December.

AUGHTON, a par. in the hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles to the S.W. of Ormskirk, its post town. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes near it on the W., and a little further off is the river Alt. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, of the val. of £830, in the patron. of J. P. Tempest, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Aughton Hall is the principal residence.

AUGHTON, a chplry. in the par. of Halton, and hund. of Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 6 miles to the N.E. of Lancaster, its post town. It lies on the banks of the river Lune. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £140, in the patron. of the rector of Halton. There are some charitable endowments, the annual income of which is £18.

AUGHTON, a tythg. in the par. of Collingbourn Kingston, hund. of Kinwardston, in the co. of Wilts, 4 miles from Ludgershall.

AUGHTON, a par. in the wap. of Harthill, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles to the N.W. of Howden. York is its post town. It is situated on the river Derwent, and comprises the chplry. of East Cottingwith, and the tnshps. of Aughton and Laytham. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, of the val., with the perpet. cur. of Cottingwith, of £96, in the patron. of A. J. Fletcher, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Souls. There is a school with a small endowment, and other charities, of the yearly val. of £44. Aughton was the residence of Sir Robert Aske, who distinguished himself in the reign of Henry VIII. as the leader in the insurrection called the "pilgrimage of grace," and suffered death for it. The mansion itself has disappeared, but several moats and trenches near the river point out its site.

AUGHTON, a par. in the southern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the E. of Sheffield. It now forms a part of the parish of Aston. The North Midland railway runs within a short distance of Aughton. Aughton Hall is the principal residence.

AUGUSTINE, ST., LATHE OF, one of the five lathes, or principal subdivs. of the co. of Kent, is bounded on the N. and E. by the ocean, on the S. by the lathe of Shepway, and on the W. by the lathe of Scray. It comprises the following twelve hunds.:—Bewsborough, Bleangate, Bridge and Petham, Cornillo, Downhamford, Eastry, Kinghamford, Preston, Ringslow, or the Isle of Thanet, Westgate, Whitstable, and Wingham. The lathe extends over an area of 163,550 acres.

AUGUSTUS, FORT, a vil. and fortress in the par. of Boleskin, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, 28 miles to the S.W. of Inverness, and 131 miles from Edinburgh. The fort is one of three erected by the English government in the Highlands. A hamlet has existed here from a remote antiquity. It was the place of interment for the powerful family of Cumin, and from that circumstance bore the name Kilcummin. The situation of the place is very striking. It is on a fair plain among the hills, at the head of Loch Ness, and on the bank of the Caledonian canal. The fort was erected in 1729. It was captured and demolished during the insurrection of 1745. After the battle of Culloden, the Duke of Cumberland made it his head-quarters. It is no longer needed as a fortress, and has only a nominal garrison.

AUKBOROUGH, Lincolnshire. See ALKBOROUGH.

AULDEARN, a par. and postal vil. in the co. of Nairn, Scotland, 2 miles to the E. of Nairn. It lies on the south coast of the Moray Frith, and is bounded on the W. by the river Nairn and the par. of the same name. It is a burgh of bar., and was formerly the residence of the deans of Moray. The living, which is of the val. of £241, is in the presb. of Nairn, and in the patron. of Brodie of Brodie. The principal residences are Lethen and Boath. In 1645, a battle was fought near this village, between the royal forces, under Montrose, and the Covenanters, under Hurry, in which the latter were defeated. Fairs, chiefly for the sale of horses, are held here in June and November. The par. has an area of about 30 square miles, and contains both a Free and a United Presbyterian church.

AULDFIELD, a quoad sacra par. in the par. of Eastwood and co. of Renfrew, Scotland, not far from Pollockshaws. The cotton manufacture is carried on here. The living is in the presb. of Paisley, and in the gift of the male communicants.

AULDHAM, formerly a separate par. in the co. of Haddington, Scotland; now forms part of the par. of Whitekirk.

AULT-HUCKNALL, a par. in the hund. of Scarsdale, in the co. of Derby, 6¼ miles to the S.E. of Chesterfield, its post town, and 5½ N.W. of Mansfield. It is situated in a pleasant country, and contains the hmlts. of Rowthorne, Stainsby, Hardwick, Harstoft, and Astwith. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. of £168, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, who is lord of the manor. The church contains a monument to Anne, first Countess of Devonshire, who died in 1698, and also one in memory of the philosopher Thomas Hobbes, who died here in 1679. In this parish is Hardwick Hall, the seat of the Duke of Devonshire, a fine old mansion in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1570 by Elizabeth, Countess of Shrewsbury. In its architecture, furniture, and decorations, which have been carefully preserved in their original condition, we have an interesting a picture of the taste and manners of the old time which produced it as can be wished. It stands on the summit of a lofty ridge, from which the view over the surrounding country is very extensive, and in a fine park abounding in grand old oaks. A more than private or family interest attaches to this mansion, as one of the residences of Mary, Queen of Scots, while in the custody of the Earl of Shrewsbury. The principal apartments are the hall, which is tapestried, and now adorned with the statue of Mary, by Westmacott; the chapel, also hung with tapestry; the dining-room, the mantel-piece of which is carved and bears a pious inscription; the spacious state-room, tapestried and canopied; the great picture gallery, which runs along the whole eastern front, 116 feet in length, with 18 deep bay windows, and containing a very large and curious collection of portraits, many of them being of eminent and royal persons. Among them are those of Queen Elizabeth and her great rival Mary, Richard III., James V., Lady Jane Grey, Cardinal Pole, Burleigh, &c. There is also the room which was appropriated to the captive queen, her bed, and embroidery, sacredly preserved. The number and size of the windows in this hall have given rise to the proverbial expression, "Hardwick Hall, more window than wall." Not far off are some remains of a much more ancient hall, in which Cardinal Wolsey rested for one night when on his way to Leicester Abbey.

AUNBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Castle Bytham, in the wap. of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the N. of Stamford. The liv. is a perpet. cur. united with the rect. of Careby.

AUNSBY, a par. in the wap. of Aswardhurn, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the S. of Sleaford. Folkingham is its post town. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £251, in the patron. of J. A. Hoobler Esq. The church is in the early English style, and is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. It contains a font with sculptured figures.

AUSDALE, or OUSDALE, a vil. in the par. of Latheron, in the co. of Caithness, Scotland, 3 miles from Berriedale. It lies at the foot of the Hill of Ord.

AUST, a chplry. in the par. of Henbury, and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Gloucester, 3 miles to the W. of Thornbury, its post town. It is situated on a lofty cliff on the eastern bank of the river Severn, at the ferry called the "Old Passage," and the "Tra-jectus" of Roman times. The passage is made to Beachley at the mouth of the river Wye, and is two miles long. It was at this place that the interview of Edward I., with the Prince Llewellyn was held. The district is chiefly marshy, but has many points of interest for the geologist. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the vic. of Henbury.

AUSTELL, ST., a par. and market town, in the eastern div. of the hund. of Powder, in the co. of Cornwall, 28 miles to the S.W. of Launceston, 40 from Plymouth, and 93 from Exeter. It is situated on the coast of the English Channel, about midway between the eastern and western extremities of the county, and was formerly of very large extent, comprising 12,125 acres, before the new parishes of Charlestown and Treverlyn were formed out of it, under Sir R. Peel's Church Endowment Act. Owing to its position in a district of great mineral wealth, the town, originally a poor village, has risen to considerable importance. It was once called Treuance: its present name is supposed to be taken from that of the hermit St. Austol. During the civil war the troops of the Earl of Essex were quartered here, and the town was taken by Charles I. in 1644. The town occupies the eastern slope of a hill, at the foot of which flows a small stream. It is not incorporated, but under the government of the parochial officers and a vestry. The streets are narrow, partly paved and lighted with gas; but great improvements have been made during the last ten years, by the erection of new houses and handsome shops in Fore-street, besides many private residences in the suburbs. The Union workhouse, which was built in 1830, is a large Elizabethan structure overlooking the town on the north side. A convenient market-house has been recently built, above which is a capacious townhall. There are two foundries, one in the town, the other at Charlestown, besides several smelting-houses for the grain tin which is found in this county. Harbours have been constructed at Charlestown, Par, and Pentewan, which are connected with the town by tram railways. Charlestown has a dock and a shipyard, and Par harbour has a good breakwater. Coals are imported from Wales, and the copper-ore and china-clay of the district are exported. The latter substance is so remarkably pure and abundant in quantity that many thousand tons are annually exported to the potteries in the North of England and Scotland, and even to the continent and America for making earthenware, bleaching, and other purposes. A large number of vessels are engaged in this trade. Many boats are employed in the pilchard fishery. The predominating rock in the district is granite, rich in metallic veins, especially of tin, copper, lead, and silver; there are also some very productive iron mines; besides these are very valuable tin stream-works. In one of these gold, in small quantities, has been found, and in one work, to the south of the town, topaz and other gems have been casually met with. The great tin mines are those of Polgooth, Carclaze, Crinnis, Pembroke, and Pentewan; the copper mines are at Lanescot. The Polgooth mine, 2 miles from the town and partly in another parish, is about 120 fathoms in depth, and was once held to be the richest in the island. The annual value of its produce was about £20,000. It contains 50 shafts. Its name signifies "Old Pool." Carclaze is on the summit of Carclaze Down, a wild brown moor, and is a quarry rather than a mine, being shaped like an enormous bowl. It is supposed to have been in working more than 400 years, and until ten years ago (1851) for tin exclusively, but is now worked for china-clay, of which an immense quantity is washed from the decomposed granite, of which its strata consists. It is a vast hollow, excavated in the white granite, about a mile in circumference, all alive with busy workers, streams, and mills, and presents a startling magical contrast to the surrounding scenery. Porphyry, valuable porcelain clay and china-stone, nickel and freestone, are other products of the district. The mines furnish employment to more than a thousand persons. A few hands are engaged in the woollen manufacture and in linen bleaching. St. Austell is a stannary town, and had the Blackmoor court, the principal of the stannary courts, held in it recently. Polling for the county takes place here, and petty sessions for the Austell division of East Powder are held by the county magistrates. There are also courts held periodically for the manors of Tewington, Penrice, and Treverbyn Courtenay. The magistrates sit in the townhall on the first Tuesday in every month, and the Board of Guardians for the poor every alternate Friday. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, of the val. of £576, in the patron. of the crown. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It is a large and ancient edifice, in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a tower above 96 feet in height, decorated with curious sculpture. The chancel is early English, and the church in the Norman and Saracenic styles. The font is very old, and covered with fanciful ornament. On the walls of the building the forms of the ladder, hammer, nails, and spear frequently occur. These the unlearned not unnaturally take for representations of the implements of the miner, while the learned see in them objects of a most sacred character. There is a perplexing inscription over the south porch, which some read as a Cornish sentence, signifying "Given to God." This church was at one time a cell to the priory of Tywardraeth. At Charlestown and Treverbyn are two neat district churches, the former, erected in 1851, is dedicated to St. Paul, and the latter in 1850, to St. Peter. There are chapels belonging to the Society of Friends, Baptists, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Reformed Wesleyans, Wesleyan Association, Congregationalists, Bible Christians and Plymouth Brethren. There are national and Sunday schools, and a literary institution, well supported, besides an horticultural society, which holds its fêtes in the townhall in the beginning of August. There is an almshouse, founded in 1809, for six persons. At Higher Blowing-house, formerly part of Menacuddle Wood, is an ancient chapel or baptistry, a beautiful early English structure in good preservation. It contains a holy well. A similar building stands at Towan. The Mengu stone is a stone near the market-house venerated for its antiquity and for some traditions and customs associated with it. To the north of the town are two large barrows, called Cock's Barrow and Hen's Barrow. St. Austell is the seat of a county court district and of a Poor-law Union. Friday is the market-day, but a market is also held on Saturday afternoon. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Easter, Whit-Tuesday, the 26th July, the 19th October, and the 30th November.

AUSTERFIELD, a chplry. in the par. of Blyth, wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 8 miles to the S.E. of Doncaster. It is situated on the North Watling Street, and had a Roman encampment. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the vic. of Blyth.

AUSTERTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Acton, in the hund. of Nantwich, co. palatine of Chester, 2 miles to the N.W. of Nantwich. It is watered by the river Weaver.

AUSTHORPE, a tnshp. in the pars. of Whitkirk and Garforth, lower div. of the wap. of Skyrack, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the E. of Leeds. Great and Little Manston are hmlts. of this tnshp. The Hull, Selby, and Milford Junction railway passes through it. The engineer, Smeaton, who erected the famous Eddystone lighthouse, was a native of Austhorpe (1724). Austhorpe Hall is the principal residence.

AUSTHWAIDE, a tnship. in the par. of Millom, ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, in the co. of Cumberland, 5 miles to the E. of Ravenglass. It is united with the tnshp. of Birker.

AUSTINDYKE, a hmlt. in the par. of Moulton, and wap. of Elloe, parts of Holland, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles from Crowland.

AUSTONLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Almondbury, upper div. of the wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the S.W. of Huddersfield. It is on the banks of the river Colne, not far from the border of Derbyshire. The population are chiefly engaged in the woollen manufacture.

AUSTREY, a par. in the hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick, 6 miles to the E. of Tamworth, its post town. It lies on the borders of Leicestershire. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £162, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and was repaired in 1845. The Baptists have a chapel here. There is an endowed school, with an income of £20 per annum, and some other charities of the yearly value of £27.

AUSTWICK, a tnshp. in the par. of Clapham, western div. of the wap. of Staincliffe and Ewcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N. of Settle, its post town. It is situated in a moorland district, not far from Ingleborough Hill. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the vic. of Clapham. The principal residence is Austwick Hall, seated on the bank of the river Wenning. An annual fair for the sale of cattle is held here on the Thursday before Whitsuntide.

AUTHORPE, a par. in the Wold div. of the hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the S.E. of Louth. Alford is its post town. It is a station on the East Lincolnshire section of the Great Northern railway. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £166, in the patron. of R. Vyner, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. The charitable endowments, including a bequest for a sermon, amount to £6. The par. has an area of 1,390 acres, and a population of only 126.

AVEBURY, or ABURY, a par. in the hund. of Selkley, in the co. of Wilts, 6 miles to the W. of Marlborough. Calne and Chippenham are its post towns. It lies on the small river Kennet, not far from its source, and contains the tythings of West Kennet and Beckhampton. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. with that of Winterbourn Monkton, £245, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a free school, endowed by Holford and Martin with an income of £10 a year. Avebury, in itself a mere ordinary English village, with pleasant rural environment, stands on ground which was once the site of one of the vastest and most extraordinary structures of a primitive age and race existing not alone in England but in Europe. In its attractive interest for the historical inquirer and archæologist, and in its power to stir the imagination, it stands on a level with the mounds of Nimroud and Koyunjik, the sepulchres of Etruria, and the temples of Carnac and Luxor. That here a stupendous structure did once exist is certain, though the gentle touch of nature and the ruder hand of man have long been, and are still destroying, covering, or taking away its visible remains, and the stony testimonies of its existence. What it was is all uncertain, and must probably continue so. The belief most readily takes hold of us that it was one of those "greatest works of mind or hand," which the poet secs are in every age "done unto God," and we call it a temple. That it has existed from a period remoter than our faltering history has run back to is certain; and we conclude that it was the work of the primitive inhabitants of this island. From the investigations of various inquirers, among whom the principal are Aubrey, who visited the scene in 1648; Stukeley, who examined it in 1720; and Hoare, who followed them in 1812, we are furnished with a tolerably distinct and full conception of the vast monument as it was. On an extensive tract of level ground, bounded on all sides but the north by gentle hills, stood a circle, probably a double circle, of huge stones, varying in height from 5 to 20 feet, the circle having a diameter of 1,400 feet. Within it stood two lesser double circles, not concentric with it, nor with each other, nor in contact, one of them having a single tall stone near its centre, and the other enclosing three similar stones. A deep ditch surrounded the whole, and outside the ditch was a lofty rampart of earth. The area within the rampart was equal to nearly 29 acres. On the southern half of the work were two spaces left open for entrance. The approach was by two avenues formed of double rows of upright stones, sweeping in long graceful curves, one towards the south-east, the other towards the south-west. The former was above a mile in length, and terminated in a small double oval of stones, at Overton Hill; the latter was a mile and a half long, and terminated in a single stone, of larger size than the rest. These approaches varied in width from 35 to about 55 feet. At the distance of about three-quarters of a mile to the south of the site of the great circle, and nearly midway between the two stone avenues is a conical mound of enormous dimensions, measuring in height 170 feet, and in circumference above 2,000 feet, and covering a space of more than five acres. This mound is called Silbury Hill, and is the largest tumulus in Europe. One interesting fact in proof of its great antiquity is, that the Roman road between Bath and London bends round the south side of the hill. Remains of cromlechs, circles, and tumuli, are scattered over the neighbouring downs. Near Silbury Hill are numerous blocks of sandstone irregularly strewn over the ground, which from their resemblance at a distance to a flock of sheep, are called the "grey wethers." The successive inquirers who have visited the site of these marvellous structures, have found the remains and visible evidences of their existence continually diminishing. The number of stones in the great enclosure in 1648 was 63, in 1720 it was reduced to 29, and in 1812 there were only 17 left. They were broken up for the construction of fences, or for use as road-metal; and would probably in a few years have disappeared altogether, had not the present proprietors interfered and put a stop to any further demolition. The number of stones now remaining are not above 20, out of 660 stones which formed the two circular temples and long avenues. The stones which are said to have encircled Silbury have long since been removed.

AVELAND WAPENTAKE, one of the nine waps. or subdivs. of the parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, bounded on the N. by the wap. of Aswardhurn, on the E. by the waps. of Elloe and Kirton, on the S. by the wap. of Ness, and on the W. by the waps. of Beltisloe Winnibriggs, and Threo. It comprises the pars. of Aslackby, Billingborough, Bourne, Dembleby, Dowsby, Dunsby, Folkingham, Haceby, Hacconby, Horbling, Kirkby Underwood, Laughton, Morton, Newton, Osbournby, Pickworth, Rippingale, Semperingham, Spanby, Swaton, Treckingham, Walcot, and Scott Willoughby. The wap. extends over an area of 53,220 miles.

AVELEY, a par. in the hund. of Chafford, in the co. of Essex, 6 miles to the S.E. of Romford, its post town. It is situated at a short distance from the north bank of the river Thames. It was formerly a market town. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the annual val. of £266, in the gift of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and contains an interesting brass of the year 1390. There is an almshouse in the village, founded by Sir Edward Barrett in 1630, and built, it is said, after a design by Inigo Jones. It has been since rebuilt. A fair is held here on Easter Monday.

AVEN. See Avon.

AVENBURY, a par. in the hund. of Broxash, in the co. of Hereford, 1 mile from Bromyard, its post town. It lies near the border of Worcestershire, on the east side of the river Frome. The surrounding scenery is rich and beautiful, and the land is partly occupied with hop grounds. Limestone is obtained in the parish. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £80, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A priory once existed here.

AVENING, a par. in the hund. of Longtree, in the co. of Gloucester, 2 miles to the S. of Minchinhampton. Stroud is its post town. It contains the chplry. of Nailsworth, the hmlt. of Aston, and several other hamlets. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Gloucester, in the patron. of the Hon. L. H. K Harman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is also a district church at Nailsworth, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £100, in the gift of trustees. There is an endowed school for six boys, with an income of £22, and some other charities. Previous to the suppression of alien priories, the manor of Avening was held by the Abbess of Caen in Normandy, who is conjectured to have erected the church. Gatcomb Park is the seat of the Ricardos, and has some Danish relics.

AVENIS, a tythg. in the par. of Bisley and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Gloucester, 4 miles from Stroud.

AVERHAM, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Thurgaton, in the co. of Nottingham, 2 miles from Newark. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Trent, and contains the hmlt. of Staythorpe. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. with that of Kelham, of £1,435, in the patron. of J. H. M. Sutton, Esq., whose seat is Kelham Park. The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and contains some ancient monuments of the Sutton family, who formerly held the manor of Averham, and one of Lord Lexington. Averham Hall is the rectory.

AVETON, or AVÉTON GIFFORD, a par. in the hund. of Ermington, in the co. of Devon, 3 miles to the N.W. of King's Bridge. Ivy-Bridge is its post town. It lies on the north bank of the river Avon, not far from its mouth and the coast of the English Channel. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £586, in the gift of the executors of the late Jas. Pitman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parochial charities amount to £7 per annum.

AVICH (Loch) a fresh-water lake between Loch Awe and Melfort, Argyle, Scotland, about 8 miles in extent. Its scenery is remarkably picturesque, and the fishing good.

AVIEMORE, a vil. in the co. of Elgin, Scotland, 60 miles to the W. of Aberdeen. It is situated in a mountainous district on the banks of the river Spey. The Cairngorm rises a little to the south of the village, to the height of 4,050 feet. The military road to Inverness passes through Aviemore, and travellers find here a well-provided inn. The Andromada cærulea, and the smallest of the water lilies, called the Naphor minima, together with several other rare and beautiful plants, are found in the district.

AVILLE, a hmlt. in the par. of Dunster and hund. of Carhampton, in the co. of Somerset, close to Dunster. It is situated in a picturesque country on the south coast of the Bristol channel.

AVINGTON, a par. and pleasant vil. in the hund. of Kintbury Eagle, in the co. of Berks, 2 miles to the E. of Hungerford. It lies in the pleasant open valley of the river Kennet. The Hungerford branch of the Great Western railway, and the Kennet and Avon canal run through the parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, of the val. of £300, in the patron. of Sir R. Burdett, Bart. The church is an interesting example of the Norman style, and contains a circular font, the sides of which are adorned with niched figures rudely sculptured. The principal mansion is Barton Court, the seat of Admiral Dundas, M.P.

AVINGTON, a par. and pleasant vil. in the lower div. of the hund. of Fawley, in the co. of Southampton, 3 miles to the W. of New Alresford, and 4 N.E. from Winchester, its post town. It is situated in a pleasant country on the banks of the river Itchin. In the Saxon age the manor of Avington was a royal demesne, and was given by King Edgar to the priory of St. Swithin, Winchester, in whose possession it continued till the Dissolution. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, of the val. of £265, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat red brick edifice, with ivy-mantled tower and peal of six bells. It was built by the late Marchioness of Carnarvon. The register dates from 1623. The Rectory House was built by the present rector. There is an endowment of £20 a year for the benefit of the rector. Avington House, late the seat of the Dukes of Buckingham, stands in a large, beautiful, and well-wooded park, in a retired valley, through which flows a feeder of the Itchin. The stream is expanded into a broad sheet of water in front of the house. It was once the residence of Charles II., whilst the king's house, now the barracks, at Winchester, was being built. The site on which the conservatory now tands was then occupied by the banqueting-room. The roperty has lately been purchased by John Shelley, Esq., vho is lord of the manor, and resides in the old brick- uilt mansion.

AVISFORD HUNDRED, one of the six hunds. of Arundel Rape, in the co. of Sussex, bounded on the N. y the hund. of Bury, on the E. by the hund. of 'oleing, on the S. by the English Channel, and on the V. by the Chichester Rape. It contains the pars. of Barnham, Binstead, Climping, Eastergate, Felpham, 'ord, Madehurst, Middleton, South Stoke, Tortington, Valberton and Yapton. This hund. comprises an area f 15,010 acres.

AVOCH, or AUCH, a par. and postal vil. in the co. f Ross, Scotland, 7 miles to the N. of Inverness. It ies in a district mostly mountainous on the west coast f the Moray Frith. Fishing forms the principal occu- ation of the inhabitants. Useful building stone, from hich the works at Fort George were built, is quarried ere. The living is of the yearly val. of £249, in the resb. of Chanoury, and in the patron. of the Sir J. R. Mackenzie, Bart., chief heritor, whose seat is Rosehaugh House, not far from Bonar Bridge. The par. has an rea of about 7,000 acres, and lies between Inverness at he end of it and Fortrose and Fort George at the other.

AVON, a Celtic word signifying river, and now he name applied to many streams in all parts of the British Islands. It occurs either alone or in composition vith other names, and may be readily recognised under he various forms, Afon, Aven, Awn, Aun, Abhan, the last eing its Irish form, in which the b is pronounced as v. The most noteworthy of the British rivers bearing this ame are the following, which are mentioned in order, ccording to their length :—In England, (1) The Upper r Warwickshire Avon; (2) the Lower or Bristol Avon; 3) the East or Wiltshire Avon. In Scotland, (4) the Aven or Avon of Banffshire; (5) the Avon or Avondale in Lanarkshire; (6) the Aven or Avon of Stirlingshire. In Wales, (7 and 8) the Avon or Afon of Monmouthshire, nd of Glamorganshire. Of some of these further par- culars may be given. 1. The Upper or Warwickshire Avon, which has its source at Naseby, in the county of Northampton, flows along the boundary line of that ounty and Leicestershire, crosses Warwickshire and Worcestershire, enters Gloucestershire, and falls into he Severn at Tewkesbury. The length of its course is early 100 miles. The principal towns it passes are, ugby, Stoneleigh, Warwick (flowing close by the old astle), Stratford (Shakespeare's), Evesham, Pershore, nd Tewkesbury. Three small streams join it before it eaches Warwick; and two others, the Stour and the Ine, before it enters Worcestershire. Below Stratford is navigable for small vessels. In the upper part of s course, at Dowbridge or Drovebridge, the Roman oad, Watling Street, crosses it, and on its eastern bank, ot far from that point, are interesting remains of a oman station. The river is connected with the Wor- ster and Birmingham canal by a branch canal from tratford to King's Norton. 2. The Lower or Bristol Avon, sometimes called the West Avon, rises in the north- estern part of Wiltshire, near Tetbury, on the borders f Gloucestershire, pursues a winding course southward hrough part of Wiltshire, crosses the northern extremity f Somersetshire, and forms the boundary line of that ounty and Gloucestershire, till it joins the Severn below ristol, at a place called King's Road. Its length is bout 75 miles. On its way it runs past Wootten Bas- tt, Chippenham, Melksham, Bradford in Wiltshire, ath, and Bristol. Two small tributaries join it above hippenham, and two others between Bradford and ath. Its course lies through a rich and beautiful ountry, and through many deep and charming valleys. is navigable up to Bath. The Avon is connected ith the Thames and with the Wiltshire and Berkshire nal by the Kennet and Avon canal, which extends om Bath to Newbury, in Berkshire. 3. The East or Wiltshire Avon, the sources of which are among the lls in the central part of the county, eastward of evizes, flows in a southerly direction through Wilt- shire, enters Hampshire near Downton, crosses the south-western extremity of that county, and falls into the English Channel near Christchurch. It has a course of about 70 miles. Besides numerous villages which lie on its banks, it flows past the towns of Amesbury, Salis- bury, Fordingbridge, Ringwood, and Christchurch. It runs across Salisbury Plain, and along the border of the New Forest. Its waters are augmented at Salisbury by those of the Wilybourne and the Nadder; and just above its mouth by the Stour. It becomes navigable at Salisbury. 4. The Aven or Avon of Banffshire, which has its source in Aven Loch, a small lake near the summit of Cairngorm, in the south-western part of the county, runs in a northerly direction through Glen Aven and the Forest of Glen Aven, past the village of Tomantoul to Inveraven, where it mingles its waters with those of the Spey. Its length is about 30 miles, and it receives many small streams from the mountains on both sides of its channel. The water of this river is singularly clear. 5. The Aven or Avon of Lanarkshire. This river rises among the hills in the western part of that county on the border of Ayrshire, runs northward through a valley bearing its name, and abounding in fine scenery, especially in its lower half, and falls into the Clyde at Hamilton Bridge. It has a course of about 28 miles. Many fine residences, both ancient and modern, with noble woods, adorn its banks. Burns has uttered his sense of the beauty of this stream and its environment in his song, "Evan Banks." 6. The Aven or Avon of Stirlingshire, rises in the par. of Slamannan; and after a course of 24 miles, falls into the Frith of Forth, near Grangemouth. Besides these prin- cipal rivers there are several much admired streams bearing the same name, as the Aven of Devonshire, which rises in Dartmoor Forest, and passing by Aveton Giffard, after a course of 22 miles, discharges itself into Bigbury Bay at Thurlestone. The Aven of Kincar- dineshire, abounding in trout, rises under Mount Battock, and passing by Strachan, joins the Dee near Banchory, after a course of only 10 miles.

AVON, a tythg. in the par. of Sopley, and hund. of Christchurch, in the co. of Southampton, 4 miles from Christchurch. It is situated on the bank of the (East) Avon. The chief residence is Avon House.

AVON, a tythg. in the par. of Christian-Malford, hund. of North Damerham, in the co. of Wilts, 3 miles from Chippenham. It is on the bank of the Lower Avon. The Great Western railway passes through it. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the rect. of Christian-Malford in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol.

AVON, an ex. par. lib. in the par. of Kellaways, hund. of Chippenham, in the co. of Wilts, 4 miles to the N.E. of Chippenham.

AVON, a hmlt. in the par. of Stratford-under-the-Castle, hund. of Underditch, in the co. of Wilts, 2 miles from Salisbury. It is situated on the river Avon.

AVON DASSETT, a par. in the hund. of Kington, in the co. of Warwick, 5 miles to the S.E. of Kington. Banbury is its post town. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £366, in the patron. of the Rev. R. G. Jeston, incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

AVONDALE, or AVENDALE, a par. in Middle Ward, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, 12 miles to the W. of Lanark. It lies along both banks of the river Avon, and includes the quoad sacra parish and post town of Strathaven, which sometimes gives name to the whole parish. The district is wild moorland and heath, with a small portion of forest, remnant of the once great Caledonian Forest. Coal and limestone are procured here. The inhabitants are engaged in weaving and in the rearing of calves, the veal of the neighbourhood being proverbially excellent. The living, which is of the annual val. of £305, is in the presb. of Hamilton, and in the patron. of the Duke of Hamilton, chief heri- tor. Ruins of Avondale Castle, an old seat of the Hamiltons, stand in the midst of the village of Strath- aven. A more than ordinary interest belongs to a spot in this parish, a little eminence near Loudon Hill, as the scene, in 1679, of the gathering of the Covenanters for their worship, when Claverhouse and his dragoons came down upon them. The circumstances of the conflict, named the battle of Drumclog, are depicted in "Old Mortality." It resulted in the rout of the dragoons. A shepherd's dwelling stands on the spot. The Roman road ran for some miles through Avondale. The area of the parish is about 40,000 acres. It contains 13 schools, one Free church, and three united Presbyterian churches in Strathaven.

AVONMOUTH, a hmlt. in the par. of Thurlestone, hund. of Stanborough, in the co. of Devon, 4 miles to the W. of Kingsbridge. It lies at the mouth of the small river Aven, or Avon, which has its source in Dartmoor and falls into the English Channel.

AWBRIDGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Mitchelmersh, hund. of Lower Thorngate, in the co. of Southampton, 2 miles from Romsey. It is not far from the border of Wiltshire. The Andover canal and the Salisbury branch of the South Western railway pass within a short distance. The chief residences in the neighbourhood are Awbridge Danes and Awbridge House.

AWBURN, a chplry. in the par. of Carnaby, in the co. of York. Bridlington is its post town. The living is annexed to the vic. of Carnaby.

AWE, LOCH, a freshwater lake and river in the Lorn district of the co. of Argyle, Scotland. The former lies nearly midway between the coast and Loch Fyne, its direction in length, from N.E. to S.W., being parallel with the upper half of that lake. In form it resembles a river more than a lake, extending in length about 24 miles, and having a breadth of about one mile and a half. Several streams fall into it, the principal of them being the Orchy which enters it from Glenorchy at its northern extremity. The waters of the lake are discharged by the short but swift stream, bearing the same name as the Loch, into Loch Etive. At Bunawe, a village at the mouth of the "rapid Awe," there is a quay at which vessels engaged in the carrying trade discharge and receive their freights. It was at this spot that an engagement took place between Bruce and the Macdonalds, in which the latter were defeated. Loch Awe is studded with small islands at its northern end, several of them possessing interesting ruins. Inishail, or the "Beautiful Island," has those of a Cistercian nunnery; Inis Fraoch, those of a castle which belonged to the MacNaughtens; and opposite to which are the extensive and picturesque remains of Kilchurn Castle, a seat of the Campbells, occupying a low rocky promontory jutting out into the lake. Part of it was erected about the middle of the 15th century. Near Inis-Chonnel, with its ivy-mantled ruins, lies Inis-Eraith, mentioned by Dr. Smith, of Campbell-town, in his authenticity of Ossian's Poems, as the place to which the traitor Erath beguiled Duara, as recounted in one of the songs of Selma; in this island are burial-grounds and the ruins of a chapel. The scenery at the northern end of Loch Awe is sublime and impressive. Shadowing its waters are vast and lofty masses, and chief among them the double-peaked Ben Cruachan towering to the height of 3,660 feet, and having a circuit of 14 miles. The finest view of the lake and mountains, with their richly wooded slopes, is enjoyed in approaching from Inveraray. Loch Awe is famed for the excellent salmon, trout, and other fish which abound in it. This lake lies at an elevation of more than 100 feet above the level of the sea. The origin of Loch Awe is explained by a curious tradition concerning a female of supernatural character and endowments, to whom was entrusted the keeping of a well of mysterious properties, with a flat stone for its nightly covering, and which being neglected on her part, a fatal deluge ensued. This legend is touched in one of Ossian's songs, and it singularly resembles, in some particulars, passages in Fenton's charming romance "Undine." The ancient Scottish proverb, "It's a sad cry to Lochawe," arose from the circumstance of the Campbells having fixed themselves in the mountain fastnesses on this lake, and using this as their war-cry when they wished to impress their enemies with the hopelessness of reaching them in their distant strongholds.

AWLISCOMBE, a tnshp., par., and vil. in the hund. of Hemyock, in the co. of Devon, 2 miles S. of Honiton, its post town, 9 N. of Cullompton railway station, and 16 from Exeter. A small stream, a branch of the river Otter runs through it. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £223, in the patron. of the Duke of Bedford. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a fine old building of the 15th century, and was repaired in 1838. It contains a very handsome stone screen and some beautiful windows. There are parochial endowments amounting to £10 a year, and a national school for 60 children. It is surrounded on the north side by the old Roman encampment of Hembury Fort.

AUNBY, a chplry. in the par. of Careby, in the co. of Lincoln. Stamford is its post town. The living is annexed to the rect. of Careby.

AWRE, a par. in the hund. of Bledisloe, in the co. of Gloucester, 3 miles to the S.E. of Newnham, its post town. It is situated on the western bank of the river Severn, on the edge of the Forest of Dean, and comprises the chplry. of Blakeney, and the tythgs. of Bledisloe, Etloe, and Hagloe. Some of the inhabitants are engaged in the cloth manufacture. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, of the val. of £530, in the gift of the Haberdashers' Company of London. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is also a district church at the village of Blakeney, the living of which is a perpet. cur. val. £232, likewise in the gift of the Haberdashers' Company. Iron pyrites occur in this district.

AWSWORTH, a hmlt. in the par. of Nuthall, hund. of Broxtow, in the co. of Nottingham, 5 miles from Nottingham, its post town. The collieries and the stocking manufacture furnish employment to the people. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £101, in the patron. of the rector of Nuthall.

AXBRIDGE, a par., market town, and municipal borough in the hund. of Winterstoke, in the co. of Somerset, 13 miles to the S.W. of Bristol, and 130 miles from London, or 136 miles by the Great Western railway. It is situated on a slope of the Mendip hills, in a fertile district watered by the river Axe. There are fine views from the top of the ridge above the town, in one direction over the Bristol Channel to South Wales, in another over beautiful country to the Quantocks and Bridgewater bay. Axbridge is a very old borough and sent members to parliament in the reigns of Edward I and Edward III. The burgesses then prayed to be excused the exercise of the too expensive privilege, and Axbridge ceased to have a voice in the legislature. Its local government is vested, under a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth, in a mayor, councillors, and burgesses. The corporation chest is particularly rich in old documents, some as far back as the times of the Edwards. The town is little more than one street, half a mile in length. A new townhall and market-house was built in 1820. Many of the houses are ancient. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, of the val of £158, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is a handsome structure in the form of a cross, and in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a fine tower, on two sides of which are niches, containing, the one a statue of a king, the other one of a bishop. The church contains several monuments and one brass of the year 1493. It stands on rising ground near the market-place, and is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. The charitable endowments, including the revenue of some almshouses, are of the yearly val. of £101. Axbridge is a polling place for the county elections, and petty sessions are held in it. It is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and the Union workhouse is situated in the adjoining parish of Compton. In the Roman times roads were formed connecting this place with Ilchester in the southern, and Portishead in the northern part of the county. The market day is Saturday. Fairs are held on the 2nd of February, the 25th of March, the 11th of June, and the 28th of October. The par. contains only 540 acres, part of which is valuable ground recovered from the river.

AXFORD, a tythg. in the par. of Ramsbury, and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Wilts, 3 miles to the E. of Marlborough. It lies on the banks of the river Kennet, not far from the borders of Berkshire. In the reign of Henry IV. the manor of Axford was held by the Lovels.

AXHOLME, ISLE OF, a river island constituting the western div. of the wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln. It forms the north-western extremity of the co., and lies on the borders of Yorkshire and Nottinghamshire. It is bounded on the E. by the river Trent, and was enclosed formerly by the rivers Don, Torne, and Idle. It contains the following seven pars.: Althorpe, Belton, Crowle, Epworth, Haxey, Luddington, and Owston. Two of these, Crowle and Epworth, are market towns. Haxey, formerly called Axel, and once the chief town, has given name to the district. This tract of country was in the earliest times covered with forest, and subsequently (it is not known when) became a marsh. After various attempts and failures, the task of draining and reclaiming it was undertaken and successfully accomplished in the reign of Charles I., by a skilful and energetic Dutchman, named Cornelius Vermuyden, whose compensation was to have been one-third part of the lands recovered. Many Dutch and French Protestants came over and established themselves in the neighbourhood, between whom and the natives unhappy contentions soon arose, which grew into ruinous lawsuits, and terminated after a long period by a decree awarding to each party their own share of the lands. The island is very fertile, and is divided into very small farms. It contains gypsum and beds of peat. A castle formerly stood at Haxey, belonging to the Mowbrays, which was demolished in 1174. Millwood Park was a seat of the same family, near which was established a Carthusian monastery. This district is about 18 miles in length from N. to S., and varies in breadth from 3 to 5 miles. It comprises an area of about 46,000 acres.

AXMINSTER HUNDRED, one of the thirty-three hunds. of the co. of Devon, southern div., bounded on the N. by Somersetshire, on the E. by Dorsetshire, on the S. by the English Channel, and on the W. by Hemyock and Colyton hunds. It contains the following pars.:—Axminster, Axmouth, Combe-Pyne, Combe-Raleigh, Honiton, Kilmington, Luppitt, Membury, Musbury, Roosdown, Thorncombe, Uplyme, Upottery, and Yarcombe. The hund. extends over an area of 51,930 acres.

AXMINSTER, a par. and market town in the hund. of Axminster, in the co. of Devon, 25 miles S. from Taunton railway station, 25 miles to the E. of Exeter, and 147 miles from London. It is a station on the South-Western line to Exeter, and is situated on the east side of the river Axe, in the eastern extremity of the county, and on the border of Dorsetshire, only 1 miles N.W. from the seaport town of Lyme Regis, in that county. The par. includes the tythgs. of Beerhall, Westwater, Wyke, and several others. The celebrated battle of Brunanburgh, the Anglo-Saxon name of Axminster, is supposed to have been fought here in 937, between King Athelstan and the Danish invaders whom he had expelled from Northumbria. In remembrance of that battle, the royal manor of Prestaller, in this parish, and the church of Axminster were given by the king to the church of York, and still remain the property of the prebendal stalls of Grindal and Warthill in that cathedral. The manor of Axminster belonged in the middle ages to the Abbey of Newenham, and is now in lay hands. During the civil war, a battle was fought near this town between the forces of the king and the parliament, in which Sir R. Cholmondeley fell. The town of Axminster is not incorporated, and the par. is divided into ten tythgs., governed by ten surveyors, four overseers, two churchwardens, and two paid constables, all nominated at vestry meetings annually. Previously to 1834, the streets in front of the church were very narrow and circuitous, but on the 24th of May in that year, being Trinity Sunday, a great fire occurred, which consumed twenty-four houses, on the site of which Trinity Square has since been built, facing the church. Axminster obtained a name and distinction for itself by the manufacture of carpets which rivalled in their beauty and durability the works of Eastern looms. The manufacture was introduced in 1755, but has long been discontinued, owing to the great cost of production and the limited demand for the carpets. The machinery was removed to Wilton in 1835, and the factory, a modern building west of the church, converted into the county court house and a private residence. Owing to the diversion of the traffic by the construction of the Great Western and the Bristol and Exeter railways, the trade and prosperity of the town had much declined; but it is likely again to revive, now that the South Western line to Exeter is completed, on which it is a station. A small mill for the winding and throwing of silk has recently been erected. There are also three corn and grist mills worked by water-power, and a malting-house, but no breweries. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val., with the perpet. curs. of Kilmington and Membury, £975, in the patron. of the Conybeare family as lessees under the church of York. A church existed in this place as early as the 7th century; but of this, and of the later fabric of Athelstan, there are no remains. Of the present church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, the earliest part (except a Norman doorway) is the small but good chancel of very early decorated work, A.D. 1315; the north aisle, of late perpendicular work, was built about 1525; and a south aisle added about fifty years ago. The church contains a handsome carved pulpit of 1613, and a very beautiful altar window, recently erected in memory of the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, the late vicar. There are chapels belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists and Independents, and a new and handsome one belonging to the Roman Catholics. Not far from the town are some slight remains of the Abbey of Newenham, which was founded in 1346 for monks of the Cistercian order. At the Dissolution its revenue was £231. The parochial charities amount to £64 per annum. Axminster is the seat of a county court district and of a Poor-law Union. Petty sessions are held here once a fortnight. There have been no hundred or manor courts held, as formerly, for a quarter of a century, in consequence of the estates and manor being in chancery. The ancient churchyard of Axminster was closed in 1855, in pursuance of the Extra Metropolitan Burials Act, and a cemetery formed about half a mile from the town, adjoining the Chard road. Dr. Buckland, the geologist, was a native of this town. The market is held on Tuesday and Friday, and fairs on the first Tuesday after the 25th of April, the first Wednesday after the 24th of June and after the 10th of October.

AXMOUTH, a par. in the hund. of Axminster, in the co. of Devon, 6 miles to the S.W. of Axminster, its post town. It lies on the coast of the English Channel, at the mouth of the river Axe. It is chiefly a fishing village. A coastguard station is established here. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, of the val. of £230, in the gift of J. H. Hallett, Esq. The church was considered a cell to the abbey of Mountborough, in Normandy, to which the manor of Axmouth was granted in the reign of Henry II. At Christmas, 1839, this village was the scene of an extraordinary and alarming landslip. A chasm was formed nearly a mile and a half long, between 200 and 300 feet in depth, and from 400 to 600 feet in breadth. Loud noises, as of crushing or rending, sometimes near sometimes more distant, accompanied the convulsion, which lasted the whole day. The sea bottom was raised, and a new reef formed nearly 50 feet long. The chasm has a curving direction, convex towards the north, or landwards. The slip was probably occasioned by the mining effects of springs in the porous substratum of red sandstone, locally called "fox-mould."

AXTON, a vil. in the hund. of Prestatyn, in the co. of Flint, North Wales, 6 miles to the E. of Rhuddlan.

AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON HUNDRED, one of the eight hunds. or subdivs. of the lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, in the co. of Kent, bounded on the N. by the river Thames, on the E. by the lathe of Aylesford, on the S. by the hund. of Codsheath, and on the W. by the hunds. of Lessnes and Ruxley. It comprises the following pars.:—Ash, Darenth, Dartford, Eynesford, Farningham, Fawkham, Hartley, Horton-Kirby, Kingsdown, Longfield, Lullingstone, Ridley, Southfleet, Stone, Sutton-at-Hone, Swanscombe, and Wilmington. This hund. extends over an area of 39,500 acres.

AYCLIFFE, GREAT, a par. in the south-eastern div. of Darlington ward, in the co. of Durham, 5 miles to the N. of Darlington, its post town, and 6 from Bishop's Auckland. It is situated on the banks of the river Skerne, a branch of the Tees, and contains the tnshps. of Great Aycliffe, Brafferton, Preston-le-Skerne, and Woodham. It is a station on the North Eastern railway. The paper manufacture is carried on here, and there are limestone quarries in the neighbourhood. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, of the val. of £246, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The vicarial tithes are commuted for £386 1*s.* 8*d.* per annum. The church, which stands on high ground at a distance from the village, is dedicated to St. Acca, and formerly belonged to the see of Lindisfarne. Its style of architecture is mixed, Gothic arches resting upon round columns. The register dates from 1560. The churchyard contains an old cross, supposed to be Saxon. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there are parochial and Sunday schools. The annual val. of the parochial charities, including a small endowment for a school, is £8.

AYCLIFFE SCHOOL, a tnshp. in the par. of Heighington, south-eastern div. of Darlington ward, in the co. of Durham, 6 miles to the N.W. of Darlington.

AYDON, a tnshp. in the par. of Corbridge, eastern div. of Tynedale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 5 miles to the E. of Hexham. Coal and lead exist in this tnshp. It is in the vicinity of an ancient Roman station, and Roman antiquities have been discovered here.

AYDON CASTLE, a tnshp. in the par. of Corbridge, eastern div. of Tynedale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 4 miles to the E. of Hexham. This place takes its name from an ancient fortress standing on the side of a deep valley, and approached by a flight of steps. It was erected in the 13th century.

AYLBURTON, a chplry. in the par. of Lidney, and hund. of Bledisloe, in the co. of Gloucester, 8 miles to the N.E. of Chepstow. Blakeney is its post town. It is situated about 2 miles from the western bank of the river Severn. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the vic. of Lidney, in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are some charitable endowments amounting to £16 per annum.

AYLESBEARE, a par. in the hund. of East Budleigh, in the co. of Devon, 6 miles to the N.W. of Sidmouth. Exeter is its post town. It is situated in a beautiful country on the west side of the river Otter, and contains the tythg. of Newton-Poppleford, and the lib. of Dotton. A manufactory of silk and riband is established here, and gives employment to some of the inhabitants. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £210, in the patron. of the Rev. W. H. Carwithen, incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. Christopher. There is a district church at Newton-Poppleford, the living of which is a perpet. cur. val. £45, in the gift of the vicar. There are some trifling charities.

AYLESBURY HUNDRED, one of the eight hunds. or subdivs. of the co. of Buckingham, occupying the central part of the co., and bounded on the N. by the hunds. of Cottesloe and Ashenden, on the E. by the hund. of Burnham, on the S. by the hund. of Desborough, and on the W. by Oxfordshire. It comprises the following pars.:—Aylesbury, Aston-Clinton, Bierton, Bledlow, Buckland, Cuddington, Dinton, Ellesborough, Haddingham, Halton, Great Hampden Little Hampden, Hartwell, Horsendon, Hulcott, Great Kimble, Little Kimble, Lee, Great Missenden, Little Missenden, Monk's Risborough, Prince's Risborough, Stoke Mandeville, Stone, Wendover, and Weston Turville, and the ext. par. lib. of Brandsfee. This hund. contains an area of 60,540 acres.

AYLESBURY, a par., market town, and parliamentary borough in the hund. of Aylesbury, and co. of Buckingham, 17 miles to the S.E. of Buckingham, and 40 miles from London by road, or 44 miles by the London and North Western railway, with which it is connected by a short branch line. Two other branch lines are now (1862) forming, one to Claydon, on the Bletchley and Oxford line, and the other to Prince's Risborough, on the Wycombe and Thame line. It occupies a central position in the county, being situated a little to the S. of the river Thame, in the beautiful and fruitful vale of Aylesbury, and contains the chplry. of Walton. A small stream flows through the town, and joins the Thame 2 miles to the west of it. This place was one of the strongholds of the ancient Britons, and was not reduced by the Saxons till the year 571. It was called by the Saxons Aylesbury. The sanctity and miraculous powers of several virgins added fame and distinction to it. First, the two sisters Eadburga and Editha, daughters of a prince of the country, are spoken of; and after them, St. Osyth, their niece, is related to have retired hither from the world on the very day of her espousal, not without her lord's consent, and after some time to have been murdered by Danish ruffians. Her burial-place became the scene of many miracles, and soon a monastery was founded and dedicated to her memory. In the reign of William the Conqueror, the manor of Aylesbury was a royal possession, and was granted to one of his Norman followers, who held it by the strange tenure of finding the king in winter straw for his bed and chamber, and three eels for his table, and in summer straw, rushes, and two green geese. And this luxurious provision for kingly board and bed was to be made thrice in the year, should he honour the town so frequently. At a very early period two hospitals for lepers existed here. They were dedicated to St. John and St. Leonard, and were in ruins before the middle of the 14th century. In 1387 a monastery of Gray Friars was founded here by James, Earl of Ormond. At the Dissolution, under Henry VIII., its value was about £3, and its site was then granted to Sir John Baldwin. Aylesbury received a parliamentary garrison during the civil war in the reign of Charles I. The town, situated on a hill, is irregularly built, consisting of several streets and roads running up from all sides to a central market-place. There is a market-house, for which the beautiful Temple of the Winds, at Athens, was taken as model. The county hall is a handsome brick edifice, erected in 1723, in which are held the assizes, quarter sessions, and county elections. Outside the town, on the road to Bierton, stand the new county gaol, covering nearly five acres of ground, and the new Union workhouse, a building in the Tudor style. On the Tring road, about a mile from the town, is the new cemetery, opened in 1858. The manufacture of the celebrated "bone-lace," once the most important branch of local industry, is now carried on to a very small extent: the manufacture of straw-plait appears to have taken its place. Another important and curious occupation of the town and neighbourhood is the rearing of young ducks for Christmas. The natural production is delayed by artificial methods till October and November. By another course of treatment it is then stimulated, and the young brood are nursed up for the London market, where they fetch absurd prices. Above 100 hands, mostly women and girls, are now engaged in the recently-established silk factory. Aylesbury received a charter of incorporation in 1550, which was soon after forfeited. It received the elective franchise in 1554, since which time it has returned two representatives to parliament. The constituency includes the voters resident in the hundred (usually called the "three hundreds"), with which the borough is made to coincide, in consequence of corrupt proceedings at the election in 1804. The government of the town now belongs to the county magistrates; and the superintendent registrar's district, according to the census of 1861, includes 5,068 inhabited houses, with a population of 23,598. Petty sessions are held weekly. A mechanics' institution is established. There is an infirmary, a savings-bank, and several other banks. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, of the val. of £300, in the patron. of the bishop. The vicar is the Ven. Edward Bickersteth, M.A., Archdeacon of Buckingham. Aylesbury was a prebend in the cathedral church of Lincoln; but the prebend is now suppressed, and will fall to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners when the present lease expires. The church is an ancient cruciform building, in the early English style, with a low central tower, and contains a Norman font and some old monuments. It is dedicated to St. Mary. The churchyard is large, and pleasantly laid out and planted. In addition to the parish church, there is a district church at Walton, with a parsonage, the living of which is a perpet. cur.* val. £100, in the gift of trustees. There are chapels belonging to the Wesleyans, Baptists, Independents, and Primitive Methodists. The charitable endowments of this parish are of considerable amount. The free grammar school, founded by Sir Henry Lee, and subsequently endowed by John Philips, Esq., provides for 120 pupils, and has a revenue of £539. The Bedford charity, founded in 1619, for the benefit of the poor, now yields £535 per annum. Hickman's charity, of a like nature, produces £45. Aylesbury is the seat of a county court district, and of a Poor-law Union. It supports three newspapers—the Bucks Advertiser and Aylesbury News, the Bucks Herald, and the Bucks Chronicle. A short canal connects the town with the Grand Junction canal at Marsworth. The Bruce family take from this place the title of Marquis of Ailesbury. The market, chiefly for corn, is held on Saturday. Fairs are held on the Friday after the 18th of January, on the eve of Palm Sunday, the 8th of May, 14th of June, 25th of September, and 12th of October.

AYLESBY, a par. in the wap. of Bradley Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the W. of Great Grimsby, its post town. It is situated in the Wolds. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £73, in the patron. of the Rev. T. T. Drake, the incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Aylesby House is the principal residence.

AYLESFORD LATHE, one of the five lathes or subdivs. of the co. of Kent, occupying a nearly central position in the co. and bounded on the N. by the river Thames and the co. of Essex, on the E. by the lathe of Scray, on the S. by the co. of Sussex, and on the W. by the lathe of Sutton. It contains the following hunds.: Brenchley and Horsemonden, Chatham and Gillingham, Eyhorne, Hoo, Larkfield, Littlefield, Maidstone, Shamwell, Toltingtrough, Tonbridge, Twyford, Washlingstone, and Wrotham. This lathe extends over an area of 233,580 acres.

AYLESFORD, a par. and small town in the hund. of Larkfield, lathe of Aylesford, in the co. of Kent, 4 miles by the N.W. of Maidstone, and 6 S.W. of Rochester. It is situated on the banks of the river Medway, over which is a bridge of six arches, in a rich and pleasant country, and contains the hmlt. of Millhall. It has a station on the North Kent railway. The Saxon form of the name of this place is Aegelesford, and in Domesday Book it is named Elesford. It is supposed by some to have been the scene of more than one engagement between the Danes and the Saxons, and of a still earlier one between the Saxons and the Britons. There is a tradition of a battle in the middle of the fifth century, in which the Saxons suffered a defeat. The Danes are said to have been defeated here by Alfred, in 893, and again by Edmund Ironside in 1016. A monastery for the Carmelites, or White Friars, was founded here in 1240, by Richard, Lord Grey, of Codnor. It was given at the dissolution to Sir Thomas Wyatt, and subsequently, by Queen Elizabeth, to John Sedley. The present town consists of one street, and the inhabitants are mainly employed in the manufacture of mill-board and brown paper, and in an extensive brown stone pottery, which is situated about ½ a mile to the east of the church. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val. of £531, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a handsome Saxon building, with a square tower at the west end. It stands on a hill which rises very abruptly above the village, and contains several tombs and monuments of interest. There is a brass to John Covington, of the year 1426; a fine monument to Sir John Banks, and monuments to the families of the Colepeppers, Rycauts, and Sedleys. To the last-named the manor of Aylesford once belonged; and Sir John Sedley, wit and poet of the 17th century, was a member of this family. Sir Paul Rycaut, who was a native of the village, and is interred here, was a distinguished traveller. The parochial charities consist of an almshouse for a warden and six poor persons, founded in 1605, by John Sedley, the revenue of which is £135; a free school, endowed by Milner with an income of £20 a year; and several smaller endowments. Aylesford contains several curious relics of ancient times. The most interesting is the cromlech, well known by the name of Kit's Cotty House. It stands on a hillside not far from the village, and is visible from the London and Maidstone road. It is in the usual form, consisting of three massive upright stones, supporting a fourth laid flat upon them. Its name remains at present unexplained. Other stones are found in its neighbourhood, which may be the ruins of cromlechs overthrown. A free chapel formerly stood in this parish, the remains of which are converted into a barn, and named the Hermitage. Aylesford Priory is a modern mansion erected by Sir William Sedley, on the site of the ancient friary, and including some remains of it. It is the seat of the Earl of Aylesford. Aylesford is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and about 1½ miles to the north-east of the town on the Rochester and Maidstone road is the new lunatic asylum, the cost of which is estimated at £50,000. Hops are cultivated in the neighbourhood. A fair is held on the 29th June.

AYLESTONE, a par. chiefly in the hund. of Guthlaxton, partly in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, in the co. of Leicester, 2 miles to the S. of Leicester. It is situated on the river Soar and the Union canal, which here joins that river. The Midland Counties railway runs through the parish, and the Fosse Way is near it. Aylestone contains the chplry. of Lubbesthorpe and the tnshp. of Glenn Parva. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, of the val. of £845, in the patron. of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

AYLMERTON, a par. in the hund. of North Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, 2¾ miles to the W. of Cromer, its post town. It is situated in a picturesque country on the north-eastern coast of the county. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £370, in the patron. of the trustees of the late W. H. Wyndham, Esq., of Felbrigg Hall. The rect. of Runton is annexed to that of Aylmerton. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is in the perpendicular style, with an embattled round tower, dating as early as the 13th century. The font is of Purbeck marble, and the register dates from 1696. There are fine views over the country and the sea from Beacon Hill, a little to the north of the church.

AYLSHAM, a par. and market town in the hund. of South Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, 12 miles to the N. of Norwich, and 118 miles from London by road, or 138 miles by the Eastern Counties railway. It is pleasantly situated on the river Bure, which is navigable for small vessels to Yarmouth, where it falls into the German Ocean. This town was once the seat of the duchy court of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, whose arms are carved upon the font. In the first half of the 14th century, this town attained some note as a seat of the linen manufacture, and the products of its looms were in much request. The woollen manufacture was extensively carried on at a later period, and in the reign of James I. the chief branch of industry was knitting. The chief trade of the town is now in corn and timber. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £425, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, who hold the rectorial tithes, which are leased by S. Pittman, Esq., and are commuted for a rent-charge of £730 per annum. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was rebuilt in the 14th century, by John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. It is in the decorated English style, with a square tower and spire, and contains a handsome carved font, some stained windows, and several old monuments. The screens were painted with devices of saints and martyrs in 1507, by order of Thomas Wymer, who is sculptured on his monument in his winding-sheet. The chalice is old, and has a graceful band round the middle. The paten bears date 1568, and is inscribed, "The Towne of Aylsham." The register dates from 1653. Portions of a church of much older date remain. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels here. There is a free grammar school, which was founded in 1517, by Robert Jannys, then mayor of Norwich, and endowed with £10 per annum. There are other small charities. National and infant schools have been some time established. The town has a corn exchange, a literary society, with a library and reading-room, and a savings-bank. Aylsham is the seat of a county court district and of a Poor-law Union. The petty sessions are held in a room adjoining the corn hall on the first and third Tuesday in each month. The county bridewell, which was formerly in this town, has recently been converted into dwelling-houses. Tuesday is the market day, the trade being principally in corn. Fairs are held on the 23rd of March, and the last Tuesday in September. And a statute fair for hiring servants on the first Tuesday in October.

AYLTON, a par. in the hund. of Radlow, in the co. of Hereford, 3 miles to the W. of Ledbury, its post town. It is not far from the border of Gloucestershire. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford, of the val. of £149, in the patron. of the Earl of Oxford.

AYLWORTH, a hmlt. in the par. of Naunton, lower div. of the hund. of Slaughter, in the co. of Gloucester, 6 miles to the S.W. of Stow. It lies at the southern foot of the Cotswold Hills.

AYMESTREY, a par. chiefly in the hund. of Wigmore, partly in the hund. of Stretford, in the co. of Hereford, 7 miles to the N.W. of Leominster, its post town. It lies in a rich and beautiful district in the valley of the river Lug, and comprises the chapelry of Earl's Leinthall, and the townships of Conhope, Mortimer's Cross, Nether Lye, Shirley, and Yatton. Limestone is quarried here, and hops are cultivated. The river is crossed by a bridge, which, with the adjacent rocks, the woods, and fair meadows, make up a right pleasant landscape. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £249, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. John and St. Alkmund. Aymestrey has the benefit of two endowed free schools and some almshouses. Its charities amount altogether to £50 per annum.

AYNHO, a par. in the hund. of King's Sutton, in the co. of Northampton, 6 miles to the S.W. of Brackley, and the same distance to the S.E. of Banbury, its post town. It is a station on the Oxford and Birmingham branch of the Great Western railway. It is situated at the southern extremity of the county on the edge of Oxfordshire, on an eminence near the east bank of the river Cherwell. The Oxford canal passes near the village. Aynho was formerly a market town. In the reign of Henry II. a hospital was founded here by Roger Fitz-Richard and his son, which was given in 1184 to Magdalen College, Oxford. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford, of the val. of £500, in the patron. of W. R. Cartwright, Esq. The church, which has monuments of the Cartwrights, is dedicated to St. Michael. Alms-houses for six persons were established and endowed in 1816 by John Baker; their revenue is £161 per annum. The free school, founded by the Cartwrights is endowed with £20 a year. Sir Ralph Winwood, a statesman of the 17th century, and Shirley Marmion, a poet of the reign of James I., were natives of Aynho. Aynho Park is the seat of the Cartwrights, and contains a valuable collection of pictures.

AYOTT, ST. LAWRENCE, a par. in the hund. of Broadwater, in the co. of Hertford, 6 miles to the N.W. of Hatfield, and 3½ W. of Welwyn and the Great Northern railway. The river Muran flows on the north-eastern side of the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £180, in the patron. of Lionel Lyde, Esq., who now holds the manor. The church was erected in 1778, by Sir Lionel Lyde, Bart., after designs by the architect Nicholas Revett, friend and assistant of James Stuart in the preparation of the "Antiquities of Athens." The old church, which is dilapidated, contains several ancient and interesting monuments. The parish once belonged to the Saxon king, Harold.

AYOTT, ST. PETER, a par. in the hund. of Broadwater, in the co. of Hertford, 5 miles to the N.W. of Hatfield. Welwyn is its post town. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £250, in the patron of the Rev. E. Prodgers.

AYR, a maritime co. of Scotland, situated on the south-west coast along the Frith of Clyde. In form it approaches a crescent, concave towards the west, having the greatest breadth in the centre, and terminating northward and southward in comparative points. It is bounded on the N. and N.E. by Renfrewshire: on the E. by Lanarkshire and Dumfriesshire: on the S.E. by the co. of Kirkcudbright: on the S. by the co. of Wigton: and on the W. by the Frith of Clyde. It lies between 55° and 55° 50′ N. lat. and between 4° and 5° W. long., extending in length in a straight line from the northern to the southern extremity, about 60 miles, and in breadth at the broadest part about 25 miles. It has a coast line of about 66 miles, and comprises an area of 1,045 square miles, or of 668,800 acres, although some have estimated its extent at as much as 1,500 square miles. The coast in the central part is low, level, and sandy, but towards the north and south becomes lofty and rocky. Good harbours are rare, and the shore has the reputation of being dangerous. There are, however, two excellent harbours, with docks, at Ardrossan and Troon, the properties respectively of the Earl of Eglinton and the Duke of Portland. Several small islands lie off the coast. At the north, Little Cumbray; Horse island, off Ardrossan: Lady island, off Troon; and the island rock of Ailsa Craig, off Girvan. Ayrshire was in ancient times, divided into three districts:—Cunningham, Kyle, and Carrick, which are still popularly recognised, although they have ceased to exist in the eye of the law. Cunningham is that part of the county which is north of the river Irvine; Kyle, viz., King's Kyle and Kyle Stewart, which is again subdivided by the river Ayr into two sections, is that part which is between the Irvine and the Doon; and Carrick, that part which lies to the south of the Doon. These districts are named and characterised in a pithy manner in a popular local rhyme:—

> "Kyle for a man,
> Carrick for a cow,
> Cunningham for butter and cheese,
> And Galloway for woo'."

In the earliest period to which our knowledge at present extends, this part of Scotland was occupied by the Damnii, a powerful Celtic tribe. Scots from Ireland, who had effected a settlement in the peninsula of Cantyre, subsequently passed into this county. These races amalgamated with each other, and were afterwards subject to Saxon invaders from Northumbria. From the 9th century, when the Pictish kingdom was broken up by King Kenneth, till the close of the 11th century, this county formed part of the kingdom of Scotland, and remained subject to Celtic usages and laws. At the commencement of the 12th century a great change took place. After the accession of Edgar, Anglo-Norman settlers thronged into the land.—castles grew up for the baron, and towns for the trader, churches for all. Among the settlers of this period were Hugh Morville, with a host of vassals, the families of Roses, Montgomerys, Campbells, Boyds, Kennedies, &c. Laws, customs, in fact, almost everything changed. Yet the old language, the Gaelic, held its ground, and for five hundred years was not utterly rooted out. The history of the centuries during which feudalism was the prevailing system, would be little more than a story of feuds between the chiefs and leading families, and of oppression and misery towards the lower orders. It is no matter for surprise that visions of political liberties and of social justice should fascinate them and make them, as they were, zealous adherents of the Covenant in the 17th century. For it they were ready to fight, for it to die, and many are the spots in secluded moors and mosses which are consecrated by the memory of the noble army of martyrs of those days. The men of Ayrshire heartily accepted the revolution which placed the Prince of Orange on the throne of Great Britain, and would have no money remuneration for their armed attendance upon the estates at Edinburgh.—Ayrshire is cut off from the neighbouring parts of Scotland by ranges of lofty hills along its western border, and Carrick, the southern district, is wholly mountainous. Narrow plains stretch along the coast, and Cunningham, the northern district, is level and very fertile. Generally the surface of the county rises towards the east and the south. The hills have not a great elevation: not one of them attaining the height of 2,000 feet. The loftiest among them is Knockdolian, in the parish of Colmonell, near the south coast, which has an elevation of 1,950 feet. Others are, Cairntable, in Muirkirk, on the eastern side of the county, 1,650 feet; Blackside End, in Sorn, 1,560 feet; Ailsa Craig, off Girvan, 1,098 feet. The prevailing rocks are granite and limestone. With these are associated freestone, red sandstone, pudding-stone, &c. Coal is abundant and of many varieties. Large quantities of the curious "blind coal" are exported. At Dalmore, on the Ayr, is obtained the whetstone, known by the name of "Water o'Ayr stone." Ironstone is found, and large ironworks are established in several places. At Kilbride, millstones are quarried. Copper, lead, and other metals exist in small quantities. This county has no great river, but many short streams. The principal of these are the Irvine, which receives the Garnock, and has a course of about 20 miles; the Ayr, which receives the Lugar, almost divides the county into two equal parts, and is about 35 miles in length; the Doon, the "bonnie Doon" of the poet; the Girvan, and the Stinchar. There are several small lakes; the chief is Loch Doon. Trout abound in many of the rivers. Formerly forests covered a great part of Ayrshire: there are now few tracts of woodland left. The climate is damp, but mild. The soil of the level districts on the coast is mostly light. A large part of the interior has a stiff clay soil. About half the surface of the county is under cultivation. A large extent of the eastern part consists of moor and moss.—Progress and improvement have been rapid during the last hundred years,—improvement in dwellings, in methods of cultivation, in drainage, in conditions of tenure, modes of living, breed of cattle, and means of intercommunication. In this course of improvement a noble and energetic lady had the honour and happiness of leading the way—Margaret, Countess of Loudoun, who, in 1757, came as a widow to reside in Sorn Castle. By her superior knowledge, patient teaching, and persevering example, she at length aroused nobles, gentry, and people to vigorous efforts on sound principles for the better cultivation of their lands. Oats form the principal crop, but wheat, barley, peas, beans, &c., are also commonly grown. Much attention is paid to the rearing of cattle, and to the dairy. Dunlop cheese is in high estimation. Ayrshire is sometimes called the Cheshire of Scotland. Many important manufactures are carried on in the county. Its natural advantages, in stone for building material, coal, iron, means of communication, &c., are very great. The cotton manufacture employs the largest number of hands. There are factories at Catrine, Kilbirnie, Galston, and Riccarton, in which about 9,000 persons are engaged. The weaving of muslin employs nearly 2,000, mostly women and girls. The silk, woollen, and cloth manufactures are also established here, but on a comparatively small scale. Other branches of industry are carpet-making, bleaching, tanning, embroidering, &c.—The county is subdivided into 44 parishes, two of which, Ayr and Irvine, are royal and parliamentary boroughs; and four, viz., Girvan, Dalmellington, Newton-on-Ayr, and Newmilns, are burghs of barony. The other principal towns are Galston, Troon, Kilmarnock, Beith, Saltcoats, Ardrossan (the two latter being ports), Largs (a watering-place in the north), Stewarton, and Maybole. Its population, according to the census of 1861, is 198,959, distributed into 43,394 separate families, occupying 25,868 houses. One member is returned to parliament for the county, and one for the towns of Ayr and Irvine, in conjunction with Inverary, Campbelltown, and Oban, in Argyleshire. Kilmarnock is contributory with four burghs in Renfrewshire and Dumbartonshire in returning one representative. The local government is vested in a lord-lieutenant, a vice-lieutenant (with between 40 and 50 deputies), sheriff and substitutes.—Ayrshire possesses not a few interesting remains of ancient times. At Sorn, on Ayr Water, is an immense cairn, measuring above 80 yards in circumference. There is another at Galston, 60 yards round. At Dundonald, south of the river Irvine, there are two ancient encampments,—one of which consists of two circular earthworks, the outer one surrounding an area of 10 acres; the other work is similar, but smaller, and has only a single bank. Ardrossan, further north, has some remains of a camp. Among the ruins of religious houses, the finest are those of the abbey of Crossraguel, in the parish of Kirk-Oswald, not far from Maybole. This abbey has stood above 600 years, and is still the best preserved in the west of Scotland. Besides the church walls, above 160 feet in length, there are parts of the choir, abbot's house, &c. Little remains of the once fine abbey of Kilwinning, founded above 700 years ago. The bare walls are still standing of the "haunted kirk" of Alloway, to which the poet has given a longer existence by his song than the mason by his handicraft. Ruins of castles, erected in the days of baronial power and oppression, are numerous. Turnberry Castle, seat of the lords of Carrick and through them of Robert Bruce, stood on a hill by the coast in the parish of Kirk-Oswald. The remains are insignificant, but spread over an acre. Loch Doon Castle is on an island in the lake of that name; it was the last to yield to Edward III. Dundonald Castle was a royal seat, in which Robert II., the first of the Stuarts, resided, and where he died. Others are at Dunure, Auchinleck, Thomaston, &c.—The principal seats of the nobility and gentry are the following:—Fullarton House, the seat of the Duke of Portland; Culzean Castle, of the Marquis of Ailsa; Loudoun Castle, of the Marquis of Hastings; Eglinton Castle, of the Earl of Eglinton, to whom belongs also Skelmorlie Castle; Kelburne House, of the Earl of Glasgow; Blanefield, of Blane, Bart.; Brisbane House, of General Sir T. M. Brisbane, Bart.; Blairquhan Castle, of Sir D. Hunter Blair, Bart.; Bargeny, of the Duchesse de Coigny; Auchencruive, of Oswald, Esq.; Ballockmyle, of Colonel Alexander; Dumfries House, of the Marquis of Bute; Auchenleck, of Lady Boswell; Sorn Castle, of Somervell, Esq., &c. &c.—The Glasgow and South Western railway, which has rendered unnecessary the completion of the canal projected in 1806, enters the county in the north, and runs along the coast by Troon to Ayr and to Girvan, sending off branch lines to Ardrossan, Kilmarnock, and Dalmellington. A continuation of this line to Stranraer is projected. The Glasgow, Dumfries, and Carlisle branch line also intersects the county, from Dalry, passing by Kilmarnock, Mauchline, Auchinleck, and Old and New Cumnock, with branch lines to Irvine, Troon, Newmilns, and Muirkirk. Good roads have been formed connecting all the principal towns.—Robert Burns, with whose life and songs all parts of the county have memorable association, was a native of Ayrshire. Rock and river, castle and bridge, kirk and cottage, he has touched them all and made them poetic for ever, and his monument stands amidst scenes which he loved so well.

AYR, a par., market town, municipal and parliamentary burgh, and the county town of Ayrshire, Scotland, 75 miles to the S.W. of Edinburgh by road, or 86 miles by the Glasgow and South Western railway, on which it is a station. It occupies a nearly central position in the county, lying on the coast of the beautiful bay of Ayr, on the southern bank and near the mouth of the Ayr Water. The parish comprises the ancient parish of Alloway, which was united with it in 1690. Although a Roman station existed here, and subsequently a small village, the town is considered to have been founded by William the Lion, at the close of the 12th century. In 1202 it was constituted a royal burgh by the same monarch. The old church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was probably built about the same time. In 1230, a monastery was founded for monks of the Dominican order, or Black Friars, by Alexander II. The townspeople themselves founded another house for the Franciscans, or Grey Friars, in 1472. This house possessed a wonder-working statue of the Virgin. No remains of either of these monasteries are now to be seen. A small castle was erected at Ayr by William the Lion, which was burnt by Robert Bruce in 1298, after the defeat at Falkirk, that the English might not have possession of it. It was afterwards rebuilt by the English. In 1315, a parliament, or meeting of the barons and higher clergy, was assembled by Bruce in the old church of St. John, for the purpose of settling the succession to the throne. A great fort was erected in the 17th century by Cromwell, inclosing the church and a space of about 18 acres. It was surrounded by a moat, formed by the river Ayr and the sea, and was approached by a drawbridge. A new church was built for the use of the inhabitants in 1654, for which Cromwell granted 1,000 marks.—The town of Ayr is in form nearly a parallelogram, consisting of 2,091 houses, inhabited, according to the census of 1861, by 4,307 separate families. It is clean, well paved, and lighted with gas. The harbour, which is formed by two piers running out as far as low-water mark, extends up the river to about the middle of the length of the town. Close to the end of the quay is the new bridge, and a short distance higher up the river is the "auld brig." The latter is supposed to have been erected in the second half of the 13th century. It is very narrow, and consists of four low arches. It connects the burgh of Newton with Ayr, and is now open only to foot-passengers. The new bridge was built in 1788. Close to its Newton end is the goods railway-station, the passenger-station being at the head of High Street. The principal street is High Street, parallel with the river; from one end of which another broad street called Sandgate runs down to the new bridge. At the southern termination of this street is Wellington Square, one side of which consists of the county buildings, designed after the temple of Isis, at Rome, and containing a large hall, court-rooms, and offices. The county gaol, a large and convenient edifice, stands behind these buildings. The Town's New Buildings stand at the junction of High Street with the Sandgate, and are surmounted with a handsome spire rising to the height of 226 feet. In High Street is the Wallace Tower, a modern structure, 115 feet in height, with a statue of the hero in front. It is on the site of an old building in which Wallace is said to have been imprisoned, and the dungeon bells are placed in the spire. Not far from the Fishmarket, which is opposite the old bridge, is a handsome new edifice for business purposes, called Winton Buildings. To the north-west of the town is the Academy, which ranks as one of the best in Scotland. It is governed by a body of directors incorporated by royal charter, and is well attended. Ayr has a mechanics' institution, several banks and libraries, a dispensary, and various charitable institutions.—The chief trade of the place is now in the shipping and the fisheries. The woollen and cotton manufactures, embroidery of muslin, carpet-making, tanning, and nail and shoe-making, are carried on extensively. The bar at the mouth of the harbour admits only of small vessels entering it. Between 40 and 50 vessels belong to the port, most of which are engaged in the coasting trade, a few only visiting the colonies and foreign ports. The principal exports are coal, iron, whetstones, &c.; and the imports timber, hides, tallow, slates, hemp, &c. Two lighthouses, about 280 yards apart, mark the entrance to the harbour. Girvan is a subport to Ayr. There is constant communication by steam with Glasgow and the coast towns.—The government of the burgh is vested in a provost, two bailies, thirteen councillors, &c. Its revenue is about £2,800, and its population, in 1861, 18,571, of whom 2,970 are returned as children between the ages of five and fifteen attending school. It is contributory with Oban, Irvine, Inverary, and Campbelltown, in sending one representative to parliament. Three newspapers are published, called the Ayr Advertiser, Ayr Observer, and the Ayrshire Express. Races take place once a year on a course which is about a mile and one-fifth in circuit. The Caledonian Hunt meet occasionally near this course.—Ayr is the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Glasgow and Ayr. There are two livings, of which the first charge is of the val. of £178, and in the patron. of the crown; the second, val. £283, is in the gift of the corporation. The old kirk, built in 1654, on the site of the Grey Friars monastery, is near High Street. The new kirk is in Fort Street. There is an Episcopal church, two belonging to the Free Church, two to the United Presbyterians, and five others for Roman Catholics, Independents, Wesleyans, Reformed Presbyterians, and Moravians. A portion of the ancient tower of the parish church is still standing, and has been converted into part of a dwelling-house.—The birthplace of Burns, a two-roomed cottage, stands about a mile and a half from the town. Close by are the "Brig o' Doon" and the remains of Alloway kirk. The monument to the memory of the poet stands on an eminence near the kirk, and on the banks of the Doon. It is formed of freestone; its style of architecture is Grecian; it is 60 feet high, and contains a bust and portrait of Burns, and several interesting relics. Ayr was the birthplace of the eminent scholar and philosopher of the 9th century, Johannes Scotus, or, as he was named from his native place, Erigena. Among other distinguished natives are John Louden M'Adam, the great road-maker, born in 1756; and David Cathcart, Lord Alloway, a distinguished judge, born in 1764. Dr. Thomas Jackson, Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of St. Andrew's, was for some time at the head of Ayr Academy.—The parish contains some traces of a Roman road. The moat of Alloway, a very ancient work, may still be traced. In the neighbourhood of the town, and along the banks of the river, as it winds through the fertile sheltered valley surrounding the town, are many handsome villas and charming grounds. Among them are Castle Hill, Belmont Cottage, Rozelle, Doonholm, Cambus Doon, Newark Castle, and Mount Charles. The market days are Tuesday and Friday. Fairs are held in January, June, September, and October.

AYR, or AIR, WATER, a river in Ayrshire, Scotland, rising in the par. of Muirkirk, among the hills on the eastern edge of the county, crossing it in a westerly direction, and falling into the sea at Ayr. It has given name to the town, the county, and the bay. The scenery through which it runs is wild and bleak in the upper part of its course, but of great beauty and richness in the lower part. On its banks are Sorn Castle, and many elegant modern residences near the town of Ayr. It has been celebrated for the abundance and excellence of its salmon; but the supply has of late years greatly diminished. In its bed is found the peculiar stone called Water o' Ayr stone, used for making whetstones and for polishing metals. It is a kind of claystone, with particles of felspar and mica. This river is about 30 miles long, and divides the county into two nearly equal parts. Its name is said to be an ancient British word signifying clear; and at the present day, the water of the river, which flows along a gravelly bed, is remarkable for its clearness.

AYSGARTH, a par. and vil. in the western div. of wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the S.E. of Askrigg. It is situated in Wensley Dale, on the banks of the river Ure, or Yore. The district bounds in striking scenery, rugged hills, chasms, torents, and waterfalls, not without intermixture of fine pasture lands. The parish is probably the largest in England, being about 25 miles in length, and comprises the chplries. of Askrigg, Hardrow, with Lunds, Hawes, and Stalling-Busk, all of which have churches of their own, and the tnshps. of Abbotside (High and Low), Bainbridge, Bishopdale, West Burton, with several others. Coal and lead occur here in small quantities. Aysgarth Force is the finest waterfall in Yorkshire. The river Ure precipitates itself over a lofty ridge of rock, not far from the church. A single arch 70 feet in span crosses the river above the fall. From this bridge the view is very impressive, embracing several falls gleaming among the rocks and trees, and the picturesque tower of the church rising quietly above a wood. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £137, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is in the early English style, possesses a beautiful screen, and is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a free grammar school at Yorebridge, founded in 1601, by Anthony Beeson, with an income from endowment of £100. The parish enjoys several other charitable endowments, amounting to above £100 per annum.

AYSTON, a par. in the hund. of Martinsley, in the co. of Rutland, 1 mile to the N.W. of Uppingham. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, of the val. of £183, in the patron. of G. Fludyer, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The principal mansion is Ayston House.

AYTON, a par. and postal vil. in the co. of Berwick, Scotland, 9 miles to the N.E. of Dunse. It is situated on the coast, near the eastern extremities of the Lammermoor hills, and is watered by the small river Eye. The parish contains the fishing village of Burnmouth. The population are chiefly employed in agriculture and the fisheries. A paper-mill has been established here. The living, which is of the val. of £235, is in the presb. of Chirnside, and in the patron. of the crown. Ayton House is the chief residence. There are remains of ancient encampments. The par. comprises an area of about 12 square miles, and is intersected by the North British railway, of which there is a station for passengers at Cocklaw, and for goods at Burnmouth.

AYTON BANK, a vil. in Chester ward, in the co. of Durham, 3 miles to the S. of Gateshead. It is about 5 miles from the sea-coast, and the North Eastern railway passes near it.

AYTON, EAST, a tnshp. in the par. of Seamer, Pickering lythe, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 7 miles to the S.W. of Scarborough. It is seated in a pleasant valley on the banks of the river Derwent, and the York and Scarborough railway passes by it, with a station at Seamer. The district yields ironstone, and ironworks are established here.

AYTON, GREAT, a par. in the western div. of the lib. of Langbaurgh, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the N.E. of Stokesley. Northallerton is its post town. It is situated in the picturesque district of Cleveland, at the foot of Roseberry Topping. This hill has an elevation of more than 1,000 feet. The par. comprises the tnshp. of Little Ayton, and the chplry. of Nunthorpe. The houses are mostly built of the freestone which is quarried in abundance from the hills on the east side of the parish. The summit of these hills is a thick bed of freestone; below that is a bed of shale, from which alum may be extracted; below that again, are seams of jet and ironstone. The railway which crosses this parish and connects the Stokesley and Guisborough lines, was finished in 1862. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £82, in the patron. of G. Marwood, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints, and has a monument to William Wilson, of Ayton Hall, commodore in the service of the East India Company, who died in 1795. There is also a church at Nunthorpe, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £50, in the patron. of Isaac Wilson, Esq., and John Richardson, Esq. Among the charitable endowments of Great Ayton, which together amount to £27 a year, is £10, the rents received from the old school-house, originally given by Michael Postgate, in 1704, and now let as tenements. The £10 are divided between the school built by the patron in 1851, and the British school, built in 1843. To Postgate school belongs more than common interest, for among its pupils, about the close of the year 1736, was James Cook, afterwards Captain Cook, the circumnavigator of the globe. Cleveland Lodge, Ayton Hall, Langbaurgh Hall, and Nunthorpe Hall are the principal seats.

AYTON, LITTLE, a tnshp. in the par. of Great Ayton, lib. of Langbaurgh, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles from Great Ayton. Tunstall, on the banks of the small river Tame, is a hmlt. of this tnshp.

AYTON, LOW, a vil. in Chester ward, in the co. of Durham, 4 miles from Gateshead.

AYTON, WEST, a tnshp. in the par. of Hutton Bushel, lythe of Pickering, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the S.W. of Scarborough. It is situated on the river Derwent, opposite to East Ayton. The river, which, after leaving a narrow valley, becomes broader here, is crossed by a bridge of four arches. There are some remains of the old seat of the Evers, to whom this place belonged. Ayton Castle, the seat of the Aytons at an early period, subsequently came to the Cliffords.

AZENBY, Yorkshire. See ASENBY.

AZERLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirkby-Malzeard, wap. of Claro, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the N.W. of Ripon. It lies to the W. of the river Ouse, and contains the hmlts. of Galphay and Mickley. Azerley House is the principal residence.

B

BABBICOMBE, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Mary Church, hund. of Haytor, in the co. of Devon, 1 mile from Torquay. It is built in a rock on the coast of a beautiful bay named after the hamlet, and amidst scenery of unrivalled beauty. BAINTON, a par. in the wap. of Harthill, East Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the S.W. of Great Driffield, its post town. It is situated on elevated ground, nearly in the centre of the Riding. A beacon having been formerly erected here, the division of the wapentake has received the name of Bainton Beacon division. Petty sessions are held here for the division. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of York, of the val. of £767, in the patron. of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, which is ancient, is dedicated to St. Andrew, and has a monument with an effigy of Peter de Mauley, a baron who distinguished himself in the battle with the Scots, in 1346, in which King David was made prisoner.

BAKER STREET, a vil. in the hund. of Barstable, in the co. of Essex, 9 miles from Romford.

BAKER STREET, a vil. in the par. of Enfield, and hund. of Edmonton, in the co. of Middlesex, 2 miles to the N. of Enfield.

BAKEWELL, a par. and market town in the hund. of High Peak, in the co. of Derby, 25 miles to the N.W. of Derby, and 152 miles from London. It is a station on the Stockport and Buxton branch of the North Western railway. Bakewell is the largest and most populous parish in Derbyshire, extending above 20 miles in length from E. to W., and above 8 miles in breadth, and comprising in all 21 tnshps. and several hmlts. Of these the following are chplries.:—Ashford, Baslow, Beeley, Buxton, Chelmorton, Longstone, Monyash, Sheldon, Taddington, Rowsley, and King's Sterndale. The town of Bakewell is a very ancient place. Some suppose that it was a Roman station, a Roman altar having been found in the neighbourhood. It appears to have been in existence as early as the reign of Edward the Elder, by whom a castle was founded there. Its Saxon name was Badecanwillan, which, by the wear and tear of a thousand years has been ground down to Bakewell. Between these two forms occur those of Badequella and Basquella. At the Conquest this place was given to the Peverells. Having passed, by forfeiture, to the crown, it was given by King John to Ralph Gernon. The Vernon family became, in 1502, the next owners, from whom it came, in the reign of Elizabeth, by marriage, to the Rutland family, who now hold the manor. The town stands on the south bank of the river Wye, on a hillside, in the midst of a beautiful country. It is paved, and lighted with gas.—The working of the black marble which is obtained in the district, forms an important branch of the local industry. There is a beautiful manufactory in the town, consisting of the inlaying of marble, spar, cornelian, &c., some fine specimens of which were exhibited at the International Exhibition of 1862, and were declared equal to the best examples of Florentine art. Many persons are also employed in the lead mines and the chert works. The cotton manufacture was introduced by Arkwright, but it is not now carried on regularly. Hosiery is made to a small extent.—The baths, which were apparently in use at the time of the Romans, are slightly chalybeate. The supply of water is abundant—the composition 60° of Fahrenheit. There is a large plunging bath and several smaller ones which are warmed by artificial heat. The present baths, erected by the Duke of Rutland, attract many visitors to the town, but are capable of great improvement. There is a literary institution, a library and reading-rooms in connection with it, and a museum of natural history and antiquities. The town has also a court-house (an ancient building lately restored), a townhall, a dispensary, and a savings-bank.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. of £460, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is a very ancient building in the form of a cross, in various styles of architecture. The western part is Norman, of the date probably of King John, by whom it is related the church was rebuilt. In the north transept there is a good specimen of a perpendicular window; in the south transept there are some admirable early English arches and lancet windows, and the Vernon chapel adjoining is lighted by three beautifully decorated windows. The tower, surmounted by a spire, rises from the centre. A complete and costly restoration of the whole structure was effected in 1846. It contains several monuments of great interest:—One to Sir Godfrey Foljambe and his spouse, consisting of canopied effigies, carved in alabaster; another of a knight in armour; and several of the Vernons and Manners. The font is old and curious, and in the churchyard is a sculptured cross. Besides the parish church there are eleven district churches and chapels of ease within the parish, and several places of worship belonging to Protestant Dissenters. The free grammar school was founded in 1637 by Lady Manners, and is endowed with £50 per annum. The other charitable endowments of the town, including the hospital dedicated to St. John, amount to about £75. Those of the whole parish amount to £382.—Bakewell is the seat of a County Court district, and of a Poor-law Union; a polling place for the county elections, and a petty sessions town.—The trout and grayling which abound in the Wye attract many disiples of Izaak Walton to this place. Friday is the narket day, and a sale of cattle takes place every second Monday. Fairs are held on Easter Monday and Whit-Monday, the 26th of August, and the Mondays after tlfe 10th October and the 11th November.

BALA, a borough and market town in the par. of Llanykil, in the hund. of Penllyn, and co. of Merioneth, North Wales, 17 miles to the N.E. of Dolgelly, and 94 miles from London. It is situated at the north-eastern extremity of Bala lake, and is a place of great antiquity. It is a borough by prescription, and is governed by two bailiffs and a common council. It is the seat of a County Court district, and of a Poor-law Union. The town contains one principal street, with a townhall, market-house, and savings-bank. The inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of hosiery, gloves, flannels, Welsh wigs, &c. There are good inns, which are much frequented by mountain tourists. A grammar school was established in 1712, and has a revenue of about £90 per annum. There are colleges and chapels belonging to the Independents and Calvinistic Methodists, also National and British schools. Bala lake extends nearly 4 miles in a south-westerly direction from the town, and is nearly three-quarters of a mile broad. It is the largest lake in the principality. Its bottom is rocky, and its water, which has a depth of about 40 feet, is remarkable for clearness and purity. The shores of the lake are cultivated, and partly wooded. Fine pike, eels, perch, red trout, and "gwyniads" (a famous local luxury) abound in it. The fishery, which belonged at an early date to Basingwerk Abbey, is now held by Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, Bart., whose fishing lodge is at Glan Llyn. The river Dee, the sources of which are in the range of lofty hills to the south, called Arran Fowddy, flows through this lake. The Roman Watling Street passed near its margin. From a lofty tumulus near the town there is a fine prospect over the lake and the neighbouring mountains, including Cader Idris. The native name of the lake is Llyn Tegid. It is also called Pemblemere. Polling for the county election takes place at Bala, and the assizes are held here in turn with Dolgelly. Petty sessions are also held. The market is on Saturday, and fairs take place on the 4th May, the 10th July, the 11th September, the 24th October, and the 8th November.

BALBRIGGAN, a chplry., seaport, and market town in the par. of Balrothery, and bar. of the same name, in the co. of Dublin, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 22 miles to the N.E. of Dublin. It is situated on the eastern coast of Ireland, and is a station on the Dublin and Drogheda railway. Balbriggan was formerly a mere fishing village, but in 1780 cotton factories were erected here by Baron Hamilton, the proprietor of the estate, and the place grew rapidly into importance. A large number of persons are still employed in the manufacture of linen and cotton goods and stockings, in embroidery, the corn trade, fisheries, and the coasting trade. The town contains, according to the census of 1861, 500 inhabited houses, with a population of 2,308, of whom 2,011 are Roman Catholics, 273 belong to the Established Church, and 24 to other persuasions. The harbour is formed by a fine pier, 600 feet in length, constructed in 1763. A new pier was erected in 1826—1829. There is a lighthouse at the end of the old pier, 50 feet high, the light of which is visible at the distance of 10 miles. The port is subordinate to Dublin. Here are coastguard and police stations, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. A market house was built in 1811, and a savings-bank has been established. The town is resorted to as a bathing-place. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare, val. £80, in the patron. of G. A. Hamilton, Esq., M.P. The church, erected and endowed by the proprietor, has an average congregation of about 300 from the town and neighbourhood. BALLANTRAE, a par. in the district of Carrick, in the co. of Ayr, Scotland, 32 miles to the S.W. of Ayr, and 108 miles from Edinburgh. It lies in a wild and secluded district in the southern corner of the county, on the coast of the North Channel. The village is built at the mouth of the river Stinchar, and received the name of Ballantrae, which signifies "town on the shore," to distinguish it from an older village standing higher up the river. A small castle was erected here by the lords of Bargeny, of which some picturesque remains exist near the river. The people of the district were formerly given to smuggling, and were noted for the lawlessness and barbarity of their manners. The coast is rocky, and the surface of the parish, which extends over an area of 62,000 acres, mostly hilly, the highest ground being at Eldridge Hill. The chief employments of the people are fishing and the weaving of linen. The living, val. £258, is in the presb. of Stranraer, and in the patron. of the Duchess de Coigny. There is a free school in the village, with a small endowment.

BALLASALLA, a vil. in the par. of Castletown, sheading of Rushen, in the Isle of Man, 3 miles to the N.E. of Castletown. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and was formerly of great importance. In 1098 the abbey of Rushen was founded here for monks of the Cistercian order by Mac Marus, elected king of the island. It was subsequently enlarged or rebuilt by King Olave, and was made a cell to the abbey of Furness. It was dedicated to St. Mary, and became the burial-place of many of the island kings. In 1316 a body of Irish, under Richard de Mandeville, invaded the island and plundered the abbey. The site now belongs to the chief deemster. Previously to 1796 the courts of the deemster were held at Ballasalla. Ballasalla House is the principal residence. There is an interesting old bridge, called the Abbey Bridge, near the village. It consists of two arches, one of which is nearly semicircular, and the other slightly pointed. The roadway is only 8 feet wide. It forms a picturesque object in the landscape.

BALLATER, a vil. in the par. of Glenmuick, in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 14 miles to the E. of Braemar. It is situated in a pleasant district on the banks of the river Dee, and is frequented as a watering-place. Two miles distant is the village of Pannanich, with its mineral springs. Lord Byron resided in his boyhood at Ballatrich farm, in this village, and grew familiar with the lofty and rugged cliffs of Lochnagar, which are within sight, and which he afterwards celebrated in his song.

The chapelry is included in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of the Tutbury court for the recovery of small debts.

BALLINA, a market town and seaport in the par. of Kilmoremoy and bar. of Tyrawley, partly in the co. of Mayo and partly in that of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 19 miles to the N.E. of Castlebar, and 159 miles from Dublin. The town was founded by one of the O'Haras, Lord Tyrawley, and its importance as a seat of trade dates from the year 1729, when a cotton factory was erected, and the privilege of a market was granted to the inhabitants. Ballina is situated in a pleasant country on the borders of the county of Sligo, on the western bank of the river Moy, about 6 miles above its mouth, and opposite to the village of Ardnaree. The river is crossed by two stone bridges, one having sixteen arches. Many of the houses are newly built, and great improvements have been made. The principal branches of industry are the fishery, the value of which was lately £1,500 per annum, the corn and provision trade, the manufacture of snuff and tobacco, which was introduced in 1801, the weaving of coarse linen, brewing, &c. The port is subordinate to Sligo. The parish church is at Ardnaree. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The town, according to the census of 1861, contains 1,030 inhabited houses with a population of 5,452, of whom 4,727 are Roman Catholics, 485 belong to the Established Church, 143 are Presbyterians, 90 Methodists, and 7 Baptists. There is a neat court-house, in which the quarter and petty sessions are held, a market-house, two banks, and a dispensary. It is a chief police station, the seat of a Poor-law Union, and the headquarters of the county militia. Two newspapers are published here—the Ballina Chronicle and the Tyrawley Herald. There are some remains of an abbey on the Sligo side of the river, which was founded by St. Olean. Many pleasant seats are in the neighbourhood. In August, 1798, Ballina was attacked and taken possession of by a party of French under General Humbert, who had effected a landing in Kilcummin Bay. Monday is the market day. Fairs are held on the 12th of May, the 5th of June, and the 12th of August.

BALLINA, a vil. in the par. of Templeachally, bar. of Owney and Arra, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 11 miles to the S.W. of Nenagh. It is situated on the river Shannon, opposite to the town of Killaloe, with which it is connected by a bridge of nineteen arches. There are some ruins of an old castle not far from the bridge.

BALLINABOY, a par. chiefly in the bar. of Kinalea, partly also in the bars. of Kerricurrihy and East Muskerry, in the co. of Cork, and partly in the co. of the city of Cork, in the prov. of Munster, Ireland, 7 miles to the S.W. of Cork. It is situated on the banks of the river Annabuoy, and was once a possession of the abbey of St. Finbarr. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Cork, Ross, and Cloyne, of the val. of £44, in the patron. of the Earl of Shannon. The principal seats are Ballinaboy House, Tuligmore House, and Mount Mary.

BALLINACARRIG, a par. in the bar. of Carlow, partly also in that of Rathvilly, in the co. of Carlow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles to the S.E. of Carlow. It is situated in a well-cultivated district on the river Burren. Granite is obtained here for building purposes. The living is a vic. united with the perpet. cur. of Staplestown, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin.

BALLINACLASH, a hmlt. and district par. in the bar. of Ballinacor, and co. of Wicklow, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.W. of Rathdrum. It lies on the banks of the river Avonbeg. two of the eight bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Wicklow, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, occupying the central parts of the county, and bounded on the N. by the bar. of Rathdown, on the E. by the bars. of Newcastle and Arklow, on the S. by the co. of Wexford, and on the W. by the bars. of Upper and Lower Talbotstown. North Ballinacor contains the par. of Rathdrum, with portions of those of Crosspatrick, Macketstown, Kilfife, Kiltogan, and Knockrath, and has an area of about 74,000 acres. South Ballinacor contains the following pars.: — Ballinacor, Ballykine, Kilcommon, Moyne, Preban, with portions of those of Crosspatrick, Macketstown, Kilfife, Kiltogan, and Knockrath, and has an area of about 78,300 acres.

BALLINACOR, a par. in the bar. of South Ballinacor, in the co. of Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the W. of Rathdrum. It is situated in a mountainous district on the river Avonbeg, and is crossed by the military road. The principal residence is Ballinacor, the seat of W. Kemmis, Esq. The mansion is built on the slope of a hill, commanding a fine prospect along the valley. Fairs are held here in February, May, August, and November.

BALLINADEE, a par. in the bar. of East Carbery, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Bandon. It is situated in a pleasant, fertile, and cultivated district on the bank of the river Bandon, and is connected with the town of Bandon by a good level road. The facility of communication with Kinsale recently afforded by the erection of a timber bridge across the Bandon, a little lower down, has been of advantage to all this side of the country. A fine quay has been recently built by the Earl of Bandon at this place, and a good trade is carried on in the import of coal and export of corn; there are besides some small quays, chiefly for the use of the boatmen who bring up cargoes of sea sand for manure. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, of the val., with three others, of £450, and in the patron. of the bishop. The church was erected in 1759, and has a square tower of more recent date. A good glebe house has been recently built, and there are a National school and a Church Education school, besides several other schools supported by the Earl of Bandon, to whom a large portion of the parish belongs. There are many gentlemen's seats in the parish, of which the principal are Lock House, Rock Castle, Peafield, Peafield House, &c.

BALLINAKILL, a market town in the par. of Dysartgallen, and bar. of Cullenagh, Queen's County, in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.E. of Abbeyleix, and 63 miles from Dublin. It is an ancient town, and was formerly a municipal and parliamentary borough, returning two members to the Irish parliament, from the reign of James I., by whom it was incorporated, until the Union. The privilege of a market was granted to the inhabitants in 1606. The quarter and petty sessions, which used to be held here, are now held at Abbeyleix. The town of late years has been much improved under the liberal administration of its present landlord, Earl Stanhope, on whose estate it is situated. The woollen manufacture was formerly an important branch of industry in the town, and is still carried on to a considerable extent. The parish church stands in the town, and has a handsome east window, presented by the late Michael Frederick Trench, Esq., of Heywood. The remains of the old parish church of Dysartgallen are situated in a picturesque vale, about 1½ mile from the town, and there are some slight remains of the old castle, which was taken by Fairfax in 1641. The principal residence is Heywood, formerly the seat of the Trench family, but now in the possession of William Domville, Esq., youngest son of the late Sir Compton Domville, of Santry House, Dublin. Heywood domain is rich in beautiful scenery, and contains a chalybeate spring. The living of Dysartgallen is in the gift of Earl Stanhope. The rectory is situated about a quarter of a mile from the town, and is a handsome residence. The river Owenbeg passes through its grounds, and flows in a tortuous course till it empties itself into the river Nore near Kilkenny. The soil about Ballinakill is rich, on a substratum of limestone. Saturday is the market day. Fairs are held monthly throughout the year.

BALLINASLOE, a market town, partly in the par. of Kilcloony, in the bar. of Clonmacknowen, and co. of Galway, and partly in the parish of Creagh, in the bar. of Moycarnon, and co. of Roscommon, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 14 miles to the S.W. of Athlone, and 91 miles from Dublin. It is a station on the Midland Great Western railway. The town stands on both banks of the river Suck, which here forms the boundary between the counties of Galway and Roscommon, and is crossed by a line of bridges and causeways, about 1,600 feet in length, supported on sixteen arches. According to the census of 1861, the town contains 543 inhabited houses, with a population of 3,200, of whom only 295 belong to the Established Church, 2,805 are Roman Catholics, 32 Presbyterians, 57 Methodists, and 11 of all other persuasions. The Grand canal connects Ballinasloe with Shannon harbour, and has been the means of greatly promoting the trade and prosperity of the town. The cattle fair of Ballinasloe is one of the most important in Ireland. It is held on a green on the western side of the river, between the town and Garbully Park, the seat of Earl Clancarty, the proprietor of the place. The black cattle are sold on the green; but the sheep are shown on ground within the park. Sixty thousand sheep and twelve thousand black cattle have been sold at this fair. A large wool fair takes place in July. The principal branches of trade and industry are tanning, brewing, the flour and meal trade, hat manufacture, and coach building. Good limestone is quarried in the neighbourhood of the town. Ballinasloe is the headquarters of the Galway police and militia, and has some small infantry barracks, a court-house, and a bridewell. Petty sessions are held twice a week. It is the seat of a Poor-law Union. Here is a large lunatic asylum for the province, with 14 acres of ground attached to it. The building was completed in 1833. Horticultural and agricultural societies, a savings-bank, and a dispensary are also established. Besides the parish church of Creagh, which has a fine spire and stands on a hill in the town, there are places of worship for the Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. There are a National and several other schools. A newspaper, called the Western Star, is published here. A strong fortress with a moat was erected at Ballinasloe, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, of which only the outer walls and a round tower now remain. It is converted into a modern residence, and is named Ivy Castle. Saturday is the market day. The great fair takes place on the 5th October, and four following days; other fairs are held on the 7th May, and on the 4th, 5th, and 6th July.

It lies in a pleasant country on the eastern shore of Lough Mask, on the banks of the river Robe, which falls into that lake, and has given name to the parish. A monastery of the Augustine order existed here at the commencement of the 14th century. It is mentioned in a document of that age as the monastery De Roba, but the date of its foundation is unknown. Ballinrobe was formerly an assize town of the county alternately with Castlebar. The town, which consists chiefly of one street, contains, according to the census of 1861, 453 inhabited houses, with a population of 2,507, of whom 2,375 are Roman Catholics. The principal trade of the place is in corn and flour. Malting, brewing, and tanning are carried on. There is a convenient court and market house, a bridewell, and a dispensary. The barracks, which are for cavalry and infantry, and include a hospital, are in a beautiful situation on the bank of the river. Limestone is abundant in the parish, and is quarried both for building and for farming purposes. Petty sessions are held here once a week. Ballinrobe is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and a chief station of police. The living is a rect. and vic., of the val. of £360, with glebe land valued at £46 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, and in the patron. of the bishop. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics, and a convent has been recently founded. A new Roman Catholic chapel is now being built in the town, and is a handsome structure. The old Protestant Charter-school-house is now occupied as a National school, and a handsome school-house has been built near the church gate. The parish contains many vestiges of ancient fortresses, and numerous pleasant modern residences. Among the latter are Cranmore, the seat of Colonel Knox, Carramore, Coxlough House, Creagh, Lake View, Robe Villa, &c. The market, which is chiefly for corn and provisions, is held on Monday, and fairs for the sale of cattle on Whit-Tuesday, and the 5th December.

The demesne contains above 2,000 acres, and is finely wooded. The living is a rect., of the val., with several others annexed to it, of £629, in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore.

BALLINTEMPLE, a par. in the bar. of Arklow, in the co. of Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the N.W. of Arklow. It lies in a fertile district at the confluence of the river Derry with the Ovoca. Gold and copper have been found here in small quantities. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare, of the val. of £101, and in the patron. of W. Bryan, Esq. From the higher grounds there is a beautiful prospect over the valley of the Ovoca.

BALLINTOBER, a par. in the bars. of Carra and Burrishoole, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 7 miles to the S. of Castlebar. It is situated in a mountainous country to the north of Lough Carra, and is very extensive, comprising within its limits 32,475 acres. The hill called Slieve Bohaan has an elevation of nearly 1,300 feet. A castle is said to have been built here at a remote period, which was the burial-place of the lords of Mayo. On the site was founded, in 1216, an abbey of the Augustine order, by Cathel O'Connor, of which some fine ruins remain. The living is a rect. united with that of Drum, and appropriate to the vicars choral of Christ Church, Dublin.

BALLINTOBER, a par. in the bar. of Castlereagh, in the co. of Roscommon, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Castlereagh. It lies on the eastern bank of the river Suck, and comprises a large extent of bog. Limestone of good quality is obtained here. The living is a rect., of the val., with two others annexed to it, of £515, in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin, in the gift of the bishop. There is a Roman Catholic chapel in the village. Near the village, on the west, stand the fine ruins of the old castle. Its founder and age are unknown, but it is generally supposed to have been built in the 13th century. It was of great size, extending in length 270 feet, and in breadth 237 feet. Its form was quadrangular, and it had six towers—one at each of its angles, and two at the entrance, and was defended by a deep moat. It was captured in 1641 by Lord Ranelagh, who routed the Irish insurgents, under the O'Connor Don. Petty sessions are held in the village. A fair is held for the sale of horses on the 25th August. There are several seats of the gentry in the neighbourhood.

North Ballintober lies on the eastern side of the co., and is bounded on the N., E., and S. by the river Shannon, which separates it from the cos. of Leitrim and Longford, and on the W. by the bar. of Roscommon. It contains the pars. of Kilmore and Termonbarry, with parts of those of Kilglass and Roosky. South Ballintober extends across the central part of the county, bordering on Lough Rea in the east, and is intersected by the barony of Ballymoe. It contains the towns of Roscommon and Lanesborough, the pars. of Kilcolman, Kiltoevan, and Roscommon, with portions of Cloontuskert and Kilbride. These baronies extend over an area of above 84,000 acres.

BALLINTOGHER, a vil. in the par. of Killery and bar. of Tiraghrill, in the co. of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 6 miles to the S.E. of Sligo. A police station is established here, and fairs are held in January, June, July, October, and December.

BALLINTOY, a par. in the bar. of Cary, and co. of Antrim, in the prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 5 miles to the N.W. of Ballycastle. It is situated in a hilly country on the northern coast of the county, and includes the Carrickarede and Sheep islands. The village stands at the foot of Knocksaghy Hill, one of the loftiest in the district. Not far off is Croughmore, another lofty hill, conspicuous for a considerable distance. The Giant's Causeway is about 4 miles to the west of the village. Under the basalt in the hills, wood-coal is found, and there is abundance of excellent limestone and other building stone. Agriculture and the fisheries furnish the principal employments of the people. Weaving and spinning yarn are also carried on. A coastguard station is established at Port Ballintoy. The living is a rect., of the val. of £316, in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, in the patron. of the bishop. The Presbyterians and Roman Catholics have chapels here. The ruins of the castle of Dunseverick, one of the oldest in the island, stand on a rock on the coast near Benmore Head; and those of MacAllister's castle are on the coast at the other end of the parish. Fairs are held in June, September, and October, for the sale of horses, &c.

BALLINTRA, a vil. in the par. of Drumhome, and bar. of Tirhugh, in the co. of Donegal, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S. of Donegal. It is situated near the coast of Donegal Bay. The country is bleak and uninteresting, but there is a spot of singular beauty near the village; it is the demesne surrounding Brown Hall, with fine groves, rugged precipices, a fair river with falls and a pleasant lake—this tract is called "The Pullins." The parish church is in the village. Here is also a chapel of the Wesleyans, a dispensary, and a police station. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight. Fairs are held in February, March, May, June, August, October, and November.

BALLYBROOD, a par. in the bar. of Clanwilliam, in the co. of Limerick, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the W. of Pallasgrean. It lies in a very fertile and well-cultivated country, a little to the north of the river Camoge, a branch of the Maigue. Basalt underlies the surface of the district, and constitutes the mass of the lofty Ballybrood Hill. Limestone also occurs, and is quarried extensively for agricultural uses. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, of the val., with four others, of £641, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, erected in 1825, is in the early English style of architecture, with a tower and spire. Ballybrood House and Mount Maude are the principal residences. Here is a police station. Fairs are held on the 12th June and the 11th October.

BALLYBUNIAN, or BALLYBANYAN, a vil. in the par. of Killchenny, and bar. of Iraghticonnor, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 9 miles to the N.W. of Listowel. It is seated in a very pleasant spot on the coast of a bay at the mouth of the river Shannon, and is become a favourite bathing place. Near the village, on the north, is Knockanure Hill, and the line of cliffs between Ballybunian and Kilconly Point is of the most picturesque and remarkable character. There are many caverns and passages of curious form, some of them of considerable extent. The Pigeon Cave is about 70 feet in height. Waterfalls occur at several points, and on the summit of the cliffs are remains of the castles of Doon and Ballybunian. A salmon fishery is established here.

It is on the eastern bank of the river Slaney, which is crossed here by a stone bridge. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £50, in the gift of the incumbent of Ferns. A police force is stationed here.

BALLYCAROGUE, a vil. in the barony of Decies-without-Drum, in the co. of Waterford, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles from Kilmacthomas. Here are some remains of a castle, and a curious rock which has earned for itself the title of the Speaking-stone.

BALLYCARRY, a vil. in the par. of Templecorran, and bar. of Lower Belfast, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 6 miles to the N.E. of Carrickfergus. It is in a pleasant spot, near the western shore of Lough Larne. Linen weaving and spinning divide the labours of the people with agricultural employments. The parish church, which is gone to decay, was a large and handsome edifice in the form of a cross. Fairs are held in the village on the 21st June, the 19th August, and the 31st October.

BALLYCASSIDY, a hmlt. in the bar. of Magheraboy, in the co. of Fermanagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 3 miles N.W. from Enniskillen. It is near the eastern shore of Lough Erne, not far from the curious caverns called the Daughters, formed in the limestone rock.

BALLYCASTLE, a chplry., seaport, and market town in the par. of Ramorn and bar. of Cary, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 33 miles to the N. of Antrim. The name of this place, which signifies "castle-town," is derived from a castle founded here by the Earl of Antrim, in the reign and by the direction of James I. The town is situated on the northern coast of the county, at the foot of the mountain Knocklayd, which rises to the height of 1,670 feet, and at the head of Ballycastle Bay. This bay was a well-known inlet to the north of Ireland from the earliest times. Here Partholan and his Phœnician colonists are said to have landed, and many emigrants from Britain took refuge here, whence the name Port Brittas was given to part of the bay. Opposite to the town, and at the distance of about 6 miles, lies the island of Rathlin, and the coast of Scotland is also visible at a distance of 21 miles. Ballycastle was converted from a small fishing village into a town of some importance in the course of the last century, by the enterprise of the then owner of the Ballycastle estate, Col. Hugh Boyd. He opened roads, constructed a harbour, built the town, established manufactories of soap, salt, and glass, weaving, bleaching, and tanning, and actively worked the collieries. He erected and endowed a handsome chapel and school for the benefit of his newly-built town; and by his will he directed 21 cottages to be built for the widows of his colliers and seamen, which he endowed with two townlands adjoining the causeway. He died in 1756, and was buried in the vaults of the church which he had founded. With him the busy life of the town has greatly passed away, but his charitable institutions remain as perpetual monuments of his beneficence. Ballycastle is noted for its rich mines, chiefly in the neighbourhood of the promontory of Fair Head. They contain coal, iron, and clays of various qualities and colours, also valuable spar (see Sir R. Kane's "Industrial Resources of Ireland"). Much may be expected to be done by the energy of the present owner, Alexander Boyd, Esq., but the wealth of this district is such as would render it a matter of public benefit to revive the industry and commerce of this place. There are good salmon fisheries at the entrance of the Margy river and at Kenban. The fisheries in the bay, which had fallen off, have been much more productive recently (1862), and require only to be developed to become of considerable importance. The town of Ballycastle contains, according to the census of 1861, 322 inhabited houses, with a population of 1,625, of whom 884 are Roman Catholics, 502 belong to the Established Church, 198 are Presbyterians, and 41 Methodists. There is a market-house, a court-house, and coast-guard and police stations. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, val. £60, in the patron. of A. Boyd, Esq. The church, erected in 1756, is in the Grecian style, with a fine spire. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, and Wesleyans. Near the town are the remains of Bonamargy Abbey, a Franciscan house, founded at the commencement of the 16th century. Ballycastle is the seat of a Poor-law Union. Tuesday is the market day. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, the last Tuesday in May, July, and August, the 26th October, and the 22nd November.

BALLYCASTLE, a vil. in the par. of Doonfeeny, and bar. of Tirawley, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 16 miles to the N.W. of Ballina. It is pleasantly seated on the coast, not far from Downpatrick Head. It has a chief police station, and petty sessions are held weekly.

BALLYCLARE, a market and post town chiefly in the par. of Ballynure, in the bar. of Lower Belfast, and partly in the par. of Ballyeaston, in the bars. of Upper and Lower Antrim, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 9 miles to the E. of Antrim, and 114 miles N. from Dublin. It is a pleasant town situated on the Six Mile Water, and is a station on the Belfast and Ballymena railway. The Presbyterians and Wesleyans have chapels here. A market for linens is held once a month, and fairs for the sale of horses on the 24th May, 19th July, 23rd August, and 22nd November.

BALLYCLEARY, a hmlt. in the bar. of Dunkellin, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 2 miles from Kinvarra.

BALLYCLERAHAN, a par. in the bar. of East Iffa and Offa, in the co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.W. of Clonmel. This parish, which forms part of the lands belonging to the see of Cashel, is situated on the road from Cashel to Clonmel. The living is a rect. united with that of Cashel, in the dioc. of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore. There is no church, and the inhabitants attend Divine service in the adjoining parish of Newchapel. The Roman Catholic chapel is a spacious building. Here are remains of the once formidable stronghold of Mockelrough More, which was stormed and taken by Cromwell. A square tower and part of the walls are still standing.

BALLYCLOG, a par. in the bar. of Dungannon, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the N.E. of Stewartstown. It lies in a well-cultivated district on the western shore of Lough Neagh, and contains coal, limestone, freestone, quartz, and basalt. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, of the val. of £273, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church, which has a tower and spire, is an ancient edifice of small size. There are chapels belonging to the Presbyterians and the Roman Catholics, and several schools. The principal seats are—Steuart Hall, the residence of the Earl of Castlesteuart, Belmont, and Drumkirn.

BALLYCLOGH, or LAVAN, a par. in the bars. of Orrery and Kilmore, and of Duhallow, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.W. of Mallow.

It is pleasantly situated on the small river Finnow, a branch of the Blackwater. Limestone is abundant. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, of the val. with that of Drumdowney of £130, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was erected in 1830, and has a square tower with pinnacles. The glebe-house, a handsome residence, was built by the present incumbent. There is a square tower of Ballyclough Castle still standing, now converted into a residence. Mount North, the old seat of the Lysaghts, is in decay. The scenery of the neighbourhood is very pleasing, and there are several seats; the principal is Longueville, the residence of Colonel Longfield, situated in a fine spot on the banks of the Blackwater. There is a police station. Fairs are held, chiefly for cattle and pigs, on Easter Monday, 21st June, 5th August, and 19th September.

BALLYCLUG, a par. in the bar. of Lower Antrim, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 10 miles to the N. of Antrim. It lies in a fertile and cultivated district, to the E. of the Main Water, and includes part of the town of Ballymena. The district formerly belonged to the O'Haras. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, of the val., with the cur. of Kirkinriola, of £212, in the patron. of the bishop. The Roman Catholic chapel, erected in 1810, is situated at Crebilly, near the ancient seat of the O'Haras, which has been rebuilt. There are several schools, and a charity of £20 per annum, bequeathed by Col. O'Hara in 1759, for the benefit of the poor. The parish has many remains of ancient structures, Druidical, ecclesiastical, and military. Courts leet and baron are held annually, and a manorial court for the district of "Kearte" is held monthly by the seneschal. Fairs for horses and cattle are held on the 26th June and the 21st August.

A small part of the town is in the bar. of Noughaval. It is seated in a pleasant country on the banks of the river Inny, which is here crossed by a bridge of five arches, and falls into Lough Ree a little lower down. The Royal canal passes within a mile on the north-west side of the town. A thriving trade is carried on in corn and other commodities with the neighbouring towns. There is a market-house which contains a court-room, in which the quarter and petty sessions are held, a police-station, and a dispensary. The places of worship are the parish church, which is in the town, and the Roman Catholic chapel. The town is the property of the Shuldham family. Goldsmith, who was born in a neighbouring village, resided here in his childhood. The market is on Thursday. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Ash-Wednesday, the 11th May, the 11th August, and the 21st November.

BALLYMAKENNY, a par. in the bars. of Drogheda and Ferrard, in the co. of Louth, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles from Drogheda. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, of the val. of £158, in the patron. of the archbishop. There is a church, glebe-house, and glebe.

BALLYMANNY, a par. in the bars. of East Offaly and Connel, in the co. of Kildare, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the E. of Kildare. The river Liffey runs through the parish. The living is a rect. united with that of Killashee, in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare. Fairs are held in April, August, and November.

BALLYMARTIN, a par. in the bars. of Upper and Lower Belfast, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 8 miles to the E. of Antrim. It lies on the south-east side of the Six-mile Water. The living is a rect. united with the vic. of Carnmoney, in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore.

BALLYMARTLE, a par. in the bars. of Kinalea and Kinsale, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles from Kinsale. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, of the val. of £367, in the gift of the crown. There is a Roman Catholic chapel. A police force is stationed here, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. There are several gentlemen's seats.

BALLYMASCANLAN, a par. in the bars. of Upper and Lower Dundalk, in the co. of Louth, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Dundalk, and 54 miles from Dublin. It is situated on the coast of the bay of Dundalk, on the banks of the river Flurry, which enters the bay at its north-west extremity. The eastern part of the district is hilly, and has abundance of limestone. Agriculture is the principal occupation of the inhabitants. A few are employed in the linen manufacture, bleaching, and fishing. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £106, in the patron. of Lord Clermont. The Presbyterians and Roman Catholics have chapels in the parish. A castle once stood here, of which there are some remains. Here is a massive cromlech called the "Giant's Load," the upper stone of which is said to weigh thirty tons. Several Danish remains are found here. Mount Pleasant, the seat of Sir John McNeill, the eminent engineer, and Ballymascanlan House, are the principal residences.

BALLYMENA, a market town in the par. of Kirkinriola, and bar. of Lower Toome, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 11 miles to the N. of Antrim, and 118 miles from Dublin. It is seated on the banks of the river Braid, and is a station on the Northern Counties railway. It is the centre of a thickly peopled district, in which the linen manufacture, introduced about 1732, is carried on extensively. The town contains, according to the census of 1861, 1,233 inhabited houses, with a population of 6,739, of whom 1,427 are returned as belonging to the Established Church, 1,646 Roman Catholics, 3,300 Presbyterians, 233 Methodists, and 133 of other persuasions. It would thus appear that in Ballymena three parts of the people are Protestants. The town contains the parish church of Kirkinriola, and chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, and Wesleyans. The diocesan school, founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was established here on being removed from Carrickfergus, in 1829. Here is also an endowed free school, founded by John Guy in 1813, and several other schools. Other public buildings are the market-house, the bridewell, the court-house, and the Union poor-house. The river is crossed by a stone bridge. Ballymena is the seat of a Poor-law Union and a presbytery. It has a chief station of police, and quarter and petty sessions are held in the town—the former quarterly, the latter every fortnight. The principal market is on Saturday, when a large sale of linens takes place; but there is also a market on Tuesday and Wednesday, for grain and pork. Fairs are held on the 26th July and the 21st August.

BALLYMITHY, a par. in the bar. of Shelmaliere, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S. of Taghmon. It is situated on a small stream which falls into Bannow Bay. The land is mostly cultivated, and there are quarries of good building-stone. The living is a rect. united with that of Taghmon, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. The principal mansion is Coolcliffe, the seat of Sir W. Cox, Bart. There are some remains of a castle.

BALLYMODAN, a par. in the bars. of Kinalmeaky and East Carbery, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 15 miles to the S.W. of Cork. It lies on the south bank of the river Bandon, and comprises the greater part of the town of Bandon. The soil is good, and the scenery of the district very pleasant. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, of the val. of £367, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, which was rebuilt in 1849, is a neat edifice in the pointed style of architecture. There are chapels belonging to the Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyans. Castle Bernard, the seat of the Earl of Bandon, is a noble mansion, surrounded by an extensive, beautiful, and richly-wooded park, on the river Bandon. It is on the site of a castle formerly the seat of the O'Mahonys. Among the other pleasant seats are The Farm, an Elizabethan mansion, Mayfield, Hare Hill, &c.

BALLYMOE BARONY, one of the eighteen bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, situated in the north-east part of the county, and bounded on the N. and E. by the county of Roscommon, on the S. by the bars. of Killian and Tiaquin, and on the W. by the bar. of Dunmore. It contains the parishes of Clonbern, Kilbegnet, Kilcroan, Templetogher, with parts of the parishes of Ballynakill, Boyounagh, Drumatemple, Dunamon, Dunmore, Killererin, and Tuam, and the town of Dunmore. The barony extends over an area of 89,273 acres.

BALLYMOE BARONY, one of the nine bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Roscommon, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, bounded on the N. by the bar. of Ballintober, on the E. by the bars. of Roscommon and Ballintober, and on the S.W. by the co. of Galway. It contains the pars. of Cloonygormican and Oran, with parts of Ballynakill, Drumatemple, and Dunamon. The bar. has an area of about 23,280 acres.

BALLYMOE, a vil. in the par. of Drumatemple and bar. of Ballymoe, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles from Castlereagh. It is situated on the west bank of the river Suck. Fairs are held here on the 1st February, the 16th March, the 21st May, the 24th June, the 22nd August, and the 25th October.

BALLYMONEY, a par. and market town in the bars. of Upper Dunluce and Kilconway, in the co. of Antrim, and in the libs. of Coleraine, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 31 miles to the N.W. of Antrim, and 140 miles from Dublin. It is a station on the Northern Counties railway. The parish, which is very extensive, is situated in a fertile and cultivated district containing some coal and ironstone, on the east side of the river Bann. It is the seat of a considerable linen manufacture, and has also a large and important trade in corn, butter, and provisions. The provision market was established in 1790, and the corn-market in 1820. Large quantities of butter are exported to Liverpool. Other branches of industry are soap and candle making, tanning, and brewing. There is a distillery and a tobacco manufactory. The town contains, according to the census of 1861, 484 inhabited houses, with a population of 2,599, of whom 463 belong to the Established Church, 780 are Roman Catholics, 1,257 Presbyterians, 59 Methodists, and 40 of all other persuasions. Thus it would appear that above two-thirds of the inhabitants are Protestants. The town contains a court-house, a bridewell, two banks, the Union poor-house, and a dispensary. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, of the val. of £907, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, erected in 1782, stands near the ruins of an older one. The Roman Catholics and Presbyterians (of two sections) have chapels in the town. There are several endowed and other schools. Quarter and petty sessions are held, and a chief police station is established here. Ballymoney is the seat of a Poor-law Union. The chief residences are—O'Hara Brook, Leslie Hill, Ballynacre, &c. The market is held on Thursday, and fairs on the 6th May, the 10th July, and the 10th October.

BALLYMONEY, a par. in the bar. of East Carbery, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 9 miles to the W. of Bandon. It is situated on both banks of the river Bandon, and contains the vil. of Ballyneen. It comprises a large tract of mountain and bog. The population are chiefly engaged in agriculture. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, of the val. of £695, in the patron. of the bishop. The Roman Catholics and Wesleyans have chapels in the parish. At Ballincarrig are the ruins of a castle, erected probably about 1585, with a tower of much earlier date.

BALLYMORE, a par. in the bar. of Lower Orior, in the co. of Armagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 10 miles to the E. of Armagh. The par., which is extensive, comprising an area of 14,159 acres, lies on the west side of the Newry canal, and contains the vils. of Tanderagee, Poyntz Pass, and Acton. The soil is remarkably fertile, and the land highly cultivated. Good building stone is quarried, of which Tanderagee Castle, the seat of the Duke of Manchester, was built. Potters' clay and fullers' earth are also found in the parish. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, of the val. of £1,462, in the gift of the archbishop. The church, which was built in 1812, is a fine structure, in the early English style, with an embattled tower. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. Petty sessions are held weekly, and fairs once a month.

BALLYMORE, a par. in the bar. of Rathconrath, in the co. of Westmeath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 15 miles to the W. of Mullingar, and 72 miles from Dublin. It contains Lough Sendy. An abbey was founded here in 1218, by the De Lacys, for monks of the Premonstratensian, and nuns of the Benedictine order. In 1641 Ballymore was one of the English military stations; in 1691 it was garrisoned by the Irish, and taken by General De Ginkell. The town had formerly the privilege of a market. It is a chief police station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. Good limestone is quarried in the parish. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Meath, val. £93, in the gift of the bishop. Fairs are held on Whit-Monday, and the 14th October.

BALLYMORE, a par. in the bar. of Forth, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 7 miles to the S. of Wexford. The living is a rect. united with that of Tacumshin, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. There is a Roman Catholic chapel, but no church.

BALLYMORE-EUSTACE, a par. and market town in the bar. of South Naas, in the co. of Kildare, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 13 miles to the E. of Kildare, and 34 miles from Dublin. Its name is derived from the family of its founders, the Eustaces (a branch of the Fitzgerald family), who had a strong fortress here. The parish is situated in a pleasant hilly country on the river Liffey, which is here crossed by a bridge of six arches. An extensive woollen manufactory was established in the town in 1802, which furnishes employment to many hands. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare, val., with two curacies, £100, in the gift of the archbishop. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland receive the rectorial rent-charge. In the churchyard are ruins of an ancient church. There is a remarkable waterfall near the town, called Pool-a-Phooka, or the "demon's hole;" here the river Liffey precipitates itself through a narrow passage between steep rocks into a basin below, and thence passes by two other falls to the lowest level. The whole height of the fall is 150 feet. An elegant bridge, consisting of one Gothic arch, has been thrown across the basin. A police force is stationed in the town. Ardenode, the seat of George W. West, Esq., is the principal residence. The market day is Wednesday. Fairs are held on Easter Monday, the 24th June, the 26th August, the 28th October, and the 21st December.

BALLYMORIN, or ALMORITIA, a par. in the bar. of Rathconrath, in the co. of Westmeath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.E. of Ballymore. It is within a short distance of the Royal canal, and is intersected by a small stream, a branch of the river Inny. Good limestone is obtained in abundance. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Meath, of the val. of £194, in the gift of the bishop. Among the seats are Glencarry and Darlington Lodge.

BALLYMOTE, a vil. in the bar. of Longford, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, not far from Eyrecourt.

BALLYMOTE, a market town in the par. of Emlaghfad, and bar. of Corran, in the co. of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 12 miles to the S. of Sligo, and 123 miles from Dublin. A fortress of great strength was founded here by Richard de Burgo, one of the Earls of Ulster, in 1300, which is supposed to have given origin to the town. This castle fell into the hands of the Irish in 1641, who held it about eleven years, when it was captured by the English under Ireton and Sir C. Coote. A Franciscan friary also existed here, founded by the MacDonoghs. The town, which consists chiefly of one street, is situated in a pleasant and cultivated district. Linen weaving is carried on, but to a much smaller extent than formerly. The places of worship are the parish church of Emlaghfad, and chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics and Wesleyans. There is a court-house, in which quarter and petty sessions are held, a police-station, a bridewell, and a dispensary. The principal residence is Earlsfield, the seat of Sir R. Booth, proprietor of the town. Temple House, a mansion in a fine wooded park on the banks of a small lake, is in the vicinity. There are ruins of the castle, enclosing a square of 150 feet, of the friary, and of an ancient house of the Knights Hospitallers. The Irish Psalter called the "Psalter of Ballymote," was written at this friary. Friday is the market day. Fairs are held on the last Monday in January, the 11th May, the first Monday in June and November (old style), the 3rd September, and the second Monday in December (old style).

BALLYSADERE, or BALLYSODARE, a par. in the pars. of Tirerill and Leyny, in the co. of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 4 miles to the S.W. of Sligo, and 127 miles from Dublin. The Dublin and Sligo railway passes close to the town, and has a station at Ballysadere. It is situated on a bay or channel extending southward from Sligo Bay, at the mouth of the Ballysadere river, an outlet of Lough Arrow. This river, augmented by the Collooney river above the town, passes over several falls, and discharges itself into the bay. An abbey was founded here about A.D. 660, by St. Fechin, which became very wealthy. The house was twice destroyed by fire, and being rebuilt in 1188, continued till the Dissolution, when it was given to the family of Clanricarde. The parish contains a large extent of bog and waste land, with abundance of valuable limestone. Lead and silver have been found. There are several large flour-mills and a bleach-ground. A small but thriving export trade is carried on in corn and flour, and the salmon fishery is very productive. There is a small quay for the convenience of the vessels that come up to the town. A police force is stationed here. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, of the val. of £154, with good glebe house, in the gift of the bishop. The church is at Collooney, but a chapel of ease has recently been erected at Ballysadere, the living of which is in the patronage of E. J. Cooper, Esq. There is a Roman Catholic chapel and several schools. The ivy-covered walls of the ancient monastery are still standing near the river, above the falls, and there are traces of an old church. Markree, a modern mansion surrounded by beautiful grounds and woods on the banks of the river, is the principal seat. An observatory has been erected near the house. Several hundred acres in this parish have recently been taken in from the sea by Captain Olpherts, and are now covered with luxuriant crops. Fairs are held on the 8th February, the 30th May, the 11th July, the 4th August, the 24th October, the 12th November, and the 15th December.

BALLYSCULLION, a par. mostly in the bar. of Loughinsholin, in the co. of Londonderry, and partly in the bar. of Upper Toome, and co. of Antrim, in the prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 8 miles to the N.W. of Randalstown. It is situated on Lough Beg and the banks of the river Bann, and includes the vil. of Bellaghy. Above a fifth part of the parish consists of lake and bog; the remainder is fertile and cultivated. There are some flax mills. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, of the val. of £365 11*s.* 9*d.* gross income, or £210 7*s.* 11*d.* net, in the gift of the bishop. The church is at Bellaghy. The palace erected here by the Earl of Bristol (who was appointed to the see of Derry) was taken down, unfinished, at his death. The fine portico now adorns the parish church of St. George, Belfast. Ballyscullion House, a noble mansion recently erected by Admiral Bruce, Moyala Park, the seat of Captain Robert Peel Dawson, Bellaghy Castle, and Bellaghy House, are among the chief seats. There are ruins of an old church on Church Island, or Ynis Teda, in Lough Beg, where also a monastery was early established and flourished for many centuries.

BALLYSCULLION GRANGE, a par. in the bar. of Upper Toome, in the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Portglenone.

BALLYSEEDY, a par. in the bar. of Trughanacmy, in the co. of Kerry, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.E. of Tralee. It is watered by the river Maine, and includes some part of the Slievemish mountains, with abundance of limestone and a large tract of bog. Trout is found in the river. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, val. £62, in the gift of A. Blennerhasset, Esq. Ballyseedy House is the principal seat.

BALLYSHANNON, a market town and seaport in the pars. of Kilbarron and Inismacsaint, and bar. of Tirhugh, in the co. of Donegal, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 11 miles to the S. of Donegal, and 129 miles from Dublin. It is seated at the mouth of the river Erne, which enters Donegal Bay, and is crossed by a bridge of fourteen arches uniting the two parts of the town. The O'Donnells had a fortress here at an early period, which was besieged but not taken by the English in 1597. The Earl of Clanricarde took the castle in 1652. James I. granted the town a charter of incorporation and the elective franchise, and it returned two members to the Irish parliament till the Union. Owing to its position, the town has a thriving trade, exporting grain and salmon, and importing timber, coal, iron, salt, &c. The river is rich in salmon, and the neighbouring country in minerals. A fall of 16 feet suddenly stops the navigation of the river below the bridge. The port is subordinate to Sligo. There is a large distillery and a brewery. The town contains, according to the census of 1861, 668 inhabited houses, with a population of 3,183, of whom only 486 belong to the Established Church, 2,565 are Roman Catholics, 80 Presbyterians, and 52 of other denominations; thus showing that more than four-fifths of the inhabitants are attached to the Roman Catholic Church. The town has a market and court-house, custom-house, and dispensary. It is a chief police station, and petty sessions are held fortnightly. The places of worship are the parish church of Kilbarron, which stands on a hill near the town, and chapels for the Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyans. Ballyshannon is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and the Union house is in the town. Here are also small barracks. A weekly newspaper, called the Ballyshannon Herald, is published here. Tuesday and Saturday are the market days. Fairs are held monthly throughout the year.

BALLYSHANNON, a par. in the bars. of East and West Offaly, in the co. of Kildare, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Kildare. It is situated on the coast of the Atlantic Ocean, opposite to the Skerries, and includes the village of Portrush. The district is very rich in minerals, and has many attractions for the geologist. Basalt in all its forms, limestone, and ironstone exist in abundance, and many interesting fossils are found. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Connor, of the val. of £227, in the gift of the bishop. The church now stands in the town of Portrush. It is a plain building, nearly cruciform, having a tower and two transepts, but the chancel is very shallow, and not in proportion to the other parts. There is a neat painted window in the north transept, presented by a member of the congregation. On the summit of a steep rock, nearly 300 feet above the level of the sea, is Dunmull, said to have been a Druid circle, converted by the Danes into a fortress. Other remains of Celtic times are in the neighbourhood.

BALMACHY, a vil. in the par. of Panbride, in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 6 miles to the W. of Arbroath.

BALMACLELLAN, a par. in the co. of Kirkcudbright, Scotland, two miles to the N.E. of Galloway. It lies in a hilly country on the east side of the river Ken, and is one of four parishes called the Glenkens, i.e., dales by the Ken. It was formerly, as its name signifies, the seat of the Maclellans. In the river and small lakes are good trout. BALMERINO, or BAMIRNIE, a par. in the co. of Fife, Scotland, 3 miles to the W. of Newport. It is situated in a pleasant, hilly, and cultivated district on the south coast of the Frith of Tay, at the ferry to Dundee. A Cistercian monastery was founded here in the 13th century by Alexander II. and Emergarde his mother, who gave it rich endowments, and dedicated it to St. Edward and the Virgin Mary. The church of this abbey was the burial-place of Emergarde in 1233. A few ivy-covered remains still exist; they are next the old village, on ground projecting into the Tay. After the Reformation, Balmerino was made a barony by James VI., and given to Sir James Elphinstone, by one of whose descendants it was forfeited in 1746. The inhabitants of the village are employed in weaving and fishing. The living, val. £239, is in the presb. of Cupar, and in the patron. of the crown. In the vicinity of the village is Naughton Castle, the former residence of the Mays.

BALMORAL, seat of her Majesty the Queen, on the banks of the Dee, in the par. of Crathie, and district of Aincardine O'Neill, in the co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, miles from Ballater, and adjoining the estate of Abereldie, the property of her late Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This palace, when originally purchased by her Majesty of the Earl of Fife, was an old château pile, but it has subsequently been almost entirely rebuilt. The grounds, which are pre-eminently picturesque, include the ruins of Knock Castle and Loch Muick, and extend for several miles to the wooded heights of "dark Lochnagar," where the red roe roam wild, and which rise to the height of 3,777 feet above the level of the sea.

They are situated in the northern part of the county, and bounded on the N. by the co. of Meath and the Irish Sea, on the E. by the Irish Sea, on the S. by the bar. of Nethercross, detached portions of which also lie within their limits, and on the W. by the county of Meath. The eastern bar. comprises the pars. of Baldongan, Balrothery, Balscaddan, Holmpatrick, and Lusk, with the towns of Balbriggan, Balrothery, Loughshinny, Rush, and Skerries. In the western bar. are the pars. of Ballyboghill, Ballymadun, Clonmethan, Garristown, Grallagh, Hollywood, Naul, Palmerstown, and Westpalstown. The area of these bars. is about 55,200 acres.

BALROTHERY, a par. in the bar. of East Balrothery, in the co. of Dublin, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 16 miles to the N. of Dublin. It is situated in a fertile district on the coast of the Irish Sea, and contains the flourishing town of Balbriggan, which has superseded the old town of Balrothery, now in ruins. The coast is rocky, and good building stone is obtained in abundance. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare, val. £287, in the patron. of Sir Edward Grogan, Bart. There is a Roman Catholic chapel in the town of Balbriggan. Balrothery is the seat of a Poor-law Union. The principal residences are Hampton Hall, surrounded by extensive and beautiful grounds, with rich woods and fine sea views, Ardgillan Castle and Lowther Lodge. There are some interesting remains of a very ancient castle near the church, and in the neighbourhood are the ruins of another castle. The parish contains a mineral spring.

BALSALL, or BALSALL TEMPLE, a chplry. in the par. of Hampton-in-Arden, hund. of Hemlingford, in the co. of Warwick, 8 miles to the S.W. of Coventry. Birmingham is its post town. The manor belonged in the reign of Stephen to Roger de Mowbray, and was given by him to the Knights Templars, who made it a preceptory of their order. It passed subsequently to the Knights Hospitallers, and in 1565 to Dudley, Earl of Leicester. A century later it was held by Lady Katherine Leveson, who founded a hospital here for twenty poor women, and endowed it with the manor of Balsall. There are now thirty inmates, and the annual income is about £1,500. The living is a perpet. cur.* of the val. of £50 (which is paid out of the hospital endowment), in the dioc. of Worcester, and in the gift of the governors of the hospital. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. It was erected originally by the Templars, and has been thoroughly repaired since 1820. There are some remains of a hall of the Templars at Balsall Grange.

BALSCADDAN, a par. in the bar. of East Balrothery, in the co. of Dublin, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 1 mile from Balbriggan. The river Naul runs near the village. The living is a vic. of the val. of £58, in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Dublin.

BALSCOTT, a chplry. in the par. of Wroxton, and hund. of Bloxham, in the co. of Oxford, 4 miles to the N.W. of Banbury. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the vic. of Wroxton, in the dioc. of Oxford. The name of this chapelry, which at full length is Beletscott, is derived from Michael Belet, who lived in the early part of the 13th century, and founded a priory at Wroxton.

BALSDEAN, a vil. in the rape of Lewes, in the co. of Sussex, 4 miles from Brighton.

BALSHAM, a par. in the hund. of Radfield, in the co. of Cambridge, 4 miles to the N.E. of Linton, its post town. It lies not far from the border of Suffolk, and comprises part of the Gogmagog Hills, the loftiest ground in Cambridgeshire. On their summit is an ancient camp surrounded by a triple entrenchment and two ditches, and covering an area of thirteen acres. This camp is on the line of the Roman road called Via Devana. The seat of Lord Godolphin, with its pleasant grounds, is situated within the entrenchment. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, of the val. of £1,104, in the patron. of the Governors of the Charterhouse, London. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It is a very ancient edifice, and was rebuilt at the close of the 14th century by John de Sleford, master of the wardrobe to Edward III. It contains stalls of carved oak, two tombs of priests adorned with fine brasses, and one of a knight. This village was the birthplace of Hugh de Balsham, the founder of Peterhouse College, Cambridge. There are charitable endowments amounting to £49 per annum.

BALSOON, a par. in the bar. of Lower Deece, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the E. of Trim. It is situated in a fertile country on the banks of the river Boyne. The living is a rect. united with that of Assey, in the dioc. of Meath. Balsoon House is the principal residence.

BALSTON. See BAYSTON, Shropshire.

BALTEAGH, a par. in the bar. of Keenaght, and co. of Londonderry, in the prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the S. of Newtownlimavady. It lies on the eastern side of the river Roe, and is intersected by the Balteagh water, a feeder of the Roe. The mountains of Donald's Hill and Cedy extend into the eastern part of the parish, the former rising 1,315 feet above the level of the sea. Between these mountains and the Roe there is a tract of rich and cultivated land. Limestone is quarried near the Cedy mountain, and many interesting fossils are found in it. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, val. £437, in the patron. of the bishop. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics and Presbyterians.

BALTERLEY, or BATTERLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Barthomley, and hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 6 miles to the N.W. of Newcastle-under-Lyme.

BALTIMORE, a vil. and seaport in the par. of Tullagh and bar. of West Carbery, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 56 miles to the S.W. of Cork, and 218 miles from Dublin. It is situated on the coast of St. George's Channel, near the south-western extremity of the county, at the entrance of a fine harbour named after the village. It is an ancient place, and is conjectured from its name, which signifies "great house of Baal," to have been a seat of the Druids. A castle was erected at an early period, and many foreign traders frequented the harbour before the 16th century. The castle fell into the hands of the Spaniards for a short time in 1602, and in 1631 it was attacked by Algerine pirates, who effected a landing here, plundered and burnt the town, and took a great number of prisoners. In 1613, under a charter granted by James I., the town was incorporated, and from that time till the Union, returned two members to the Irish parliament. The corporation has ceased to exist. About 130 vessels belong to the port, and are chiefly engaged in the coasting trade. The exports are slate, copper ore, flax, wheat, &c., and the imports timber, iron, coal, &c. A small convenient pier has been erected. Within the jurisdiction of the port are the several sub-ports of Bantry, Bearhaven, Castletownsend, Crookhaven, and Skibbereen. The custom-house is at Castletownsend. The parish church, erected in the village in 1819, is a handsome edifice with a square tower. There is a parochial school, built in 1832 by the late Lord Carbery, and a dispensary. A coastguard station is established here. The scenery of the district is picturesque and beautiful. Extensive remains of the ancient castle occupy a commanding situation by the harbour. Baltimore never has recovered its prosperity since the visit of the Algerines.

BALTINGLASS, a par. and market town, chiefly in the bar. of Upper Talbotstown, in the co. of Wicklow, but partly in the bar. of Rathvilly, in the co. of Carlow, and prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 28 miles to the W. of Wicklow, and 37 miles from Dublin. It is situated in a pleasant valley on the banks of the river Slaney, which is crossed by a stone bridge of three arches. In early times it formed part of the kingdom of Leinster. A Cistercian monastery was founded here in the 12th century, by one of the Cavanaghs, kings of Leinster, which was afterwards constituted a mitred abbey. At the Dissolution, this house, and the castle and manor, were given by Henry VIII. to Thomas Eustace. On the subsequent forfeiture of their estates by his heirs, they were granted by Queen Elizabeth to Sir John Harrington. The town received the grant of markets and fairs from James I. and Charles II., and in 1663 it became a corporation. From that time it sent two representatives to the Irish parliament until the Union. The town is situated on the road from Dublin to Wexford, and has a good trade. Many hands are employed in silk winding and the neighbouring flour-mills. There are barracks for infantry, a court-house, and a bridewell. A police force is stationed here, and petty sessions are held weekly. Quarter sessions are also held here. A savings-bank, an infirmary, and a dispensary have been established. Baltinglass is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and the Union house is situated about 1 mile from the town. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, of the val. of £474, in the patron. of the Rev. William Norton, incumbent. The church stands on part of the site of the old abbey. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics and the Wesleyans. The ruins of the abbey are extensive, and include several fine Gothic arches, supported on circular and square columns. Some Norman gateways remain of the castle, which is now used as a farmhouse. There are two raths or entrenchments, with moats, on Baltinglass Hill, which is 1,256 feet in height. Coins and human remains have been found there. The seats are—Stratford Lodge, the residence of the Stratfords, who take the title of Viscount from Baltinglass: this ancient mansion is now in ruins, having been recently burned; Saunders' Grove and Golden Fort, seats of the Saunders; and Slaney Park, the seat of Captain Grogan. Friday is the market day. Fairs are held on the 9th January, the 2nd February, the 17th March, the 12th May, the 1st July, the 12th September, and the 8th December.

BALTONSBOROUGH, a par. in the hund. of Glaston-Twelve-Hides, in the co. of Somerset, 4 miles to the S.E. of Glastonbury. Bath is its post town. It is watered by the river Brue. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the vic. of Butleigh, in the dioc. of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Dunstan.

BALTRAY, a vil. in the bar. of Ferrard, in the co. of Louth, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Drogheda. It is situated on the sea-coast, at the mouth of the river Boyne. Fishing is the chief employment of the villagers.

BALVAIRD, a vil. in the par. of Abernethy, in the co. of Perth, Scotland. Balvaird Castle, the seat of the Earl of Mansfield, is not far from the village.

BALWEST, a vil. in the hund. of Kerrier, in the co. f Cornwall, 4 miles from Helston.

The living is a perpet. ır., of the val. of £150, attached to the vic. of Blackurn, in the dioc. of Manchester, and in the patron. of ıe vicar.

BAMBER GREEN, a vil. in the hund. of Uttlesford, ı the co. of Essex, 3 miles from Dunmow.

BAMBROUGH, or BAMBURGH, WARD, one of the x wards or subdivisions of the co. of Northumberland. , lies in the north-eastern part of the county, and is ounded on the N. by North Durham, comprising landshire and Norhamshire, a detached portion of the). of Durham; on the E. by the North Sea, on the S. Coquetdale ward, and on the W. by Glendale ward. was formerly called Bamboroughshire. There are ro divisions of this ward, the northern and southern. contains the following pars.: Bambrough and Belrd in the northern div.; Ellingham, Embleton, Long oughton, Howick, and Lesbury in the southern div. comprises an area of about 70,000 acres.

BAMBROUGH, or BAMBURGH, a par. in the rthern div. of Bambrough ward, in the co. of Northnberland, 5 miles to the E. of Belford, its post town, here there is a station on the York, Newcastle, and rwick railway. It is situated on the coast, and comises the chplries. of Beadnell, Lucker, and North Sunrland, with the tnshps. of Adderstone, Bambrough, ambrough Castle, Bradford, and 16 others. Bambrough, ough now only a village, was described by King Alfred "the kingly burgh which men name Bebbanburgh," d was once of some importance. It returned two presentatives to one of the parliaments of Edward I., d had the privilege of a market. An Augustine iory was founded here by Henry I., in 1127, as a cell Nostil priory, in Yorkshire. Its value at the Disolution was £124. A college, a monastery of Black iars, and a hospital dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene re also founded here. The village is pleasantly situated ır Budle Bay. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the c. of Durham, of the val. of £300, in the patron. of e trustees of Lord Crewe. The church is dedicated to . Aidan, and stands in the village, about half a mile m the ruins of the ancient one erected by King Oswald the castle. The churchyard contains the grave of e heroic Grace Darling, whose energy and exertions, th those of her aged father, were the means of rescug from shipwreck some of the crew of the Forfarshire amer. The annual value of the church estate charity £100. The par. extends over an area of 26,234 res.

BAMBROUGH, or BAMBURGH, CASTLE, a shp. in the par. and ward of Bambrough, in the co. of rthumberland, close to Bambrough. This tnshp. inides the site of the castle, which is one of the most cient forts in the kingdom. According to the Saxon ronicle, it was erected about the middle of the 6th ntury by Ida, King of Northumberland, and was veral times besieged before the Conquest. After that ent it was held by Robert de Mowbray, Earl of Northmberland, till, on occasion of an insurrection which headed, it was besieged and taken by William Rufus. stood many a rude attack in the reign of Stephen, and ny another during the fierce wars of the Roses, but ntinued in the possession of the crown till the 17th ntury. James I. conferred the castle and the manor John Forster, grandson of Sir John Forster, governor the castle in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. In 1709, y were purchased by Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, consequence of the creditors of William Forster having d a bill in Chancery in 1704. On his death, he gave se estates to trustees for charitable purposes, the ticular application of the funds being left to their retion. The surplusage of the rents of the estates at the disposal of the trustees, after the payments made by them in accordance with the will of the testator, did not at that time amount to £300 per annum, but the income has subsequently been much increased, and in 1830 the total income of Lord Crewe's estates was £8,126 8*s.* 8*d.* One of the objects kept in view has been the succouring of shipwrecked seamen; although many of the arrangements connected with the trust have been altered to meet the change of times and circumstances since the first trustees were appointed. A life-boat, always ready; signals for warning in stormy weather; storehouses for goods cast ashore, &c., are the chief elements of the provision made. The charity includes also a dispensary with a resident surgeon, a large and valuable library, and two schools, besides funds to spare for other charitable purposes. The castle had been in a state of dilapidation since the reign of Henry VII., but on the suggestion, and at the expense, of Dr. John Sharp, one of the first trustees, the keep was put in repair and made fit for the occasional residence of one of the trustees. The rock on which the castle stands rises perpendicularly from the sea to the height of 150 feet. The round towers on each side of the ancient gateway are still standing. A well was discovered in the keep in 1770, which was cut to the depth of 145 feet through the solid rock; and in 1773 the remains of an ancient chapel, built by King Oswald, were discovered. A curiously-carved font, found in it, is to be seen in the second library. The present name of the place is a corruption of the original Saxon name, Bebbanburgh, which, according to Bede, signified "town of Queen Bebba."

BAMPTON, a vil. in the hund. of Bucklow, in the co. palatine of Chester, not far from Northwich.

BAMPTON HUNDRED, one of the thirty-three hunds. or subdivisions of the co. of Devon, situated in the north-eastern part of the county, and bounded on the N. and E. by Somersetshire, on the S. by the hund. of Halberton, and on the W. by the hunds. of Witheridge and Tiverton. It contains the pars. of Bampton or Bathampton, Burlescombe, Clayhanger, Hockworthy, Holcombe-Rogus, Morebath, and Uffculme. The area of the hund. is about 29,430 acres.

BAMPTON, or BATHAMPTON, a par. and market town in the hund. of Bampton, in the co. of Devon, 20 miles to the N. of Exeter, and 161 miles from London. It is situated near the confines of Somersetshire, on a stream called the Batherm, or Batham, which joins the river Exe a little below the town. The par. contains the two hmlts. of Petton and Shillingford. It is a very old town, and is, by some antiquaries, considered to be the Saxon Beamdune, and the scene of the great defeat of the Britons by the Saxons in the year 614. At the Norman Conquest the manor was given to Walter de Douai, by whom a castle is said to have been built. Some vestiges of such a structure are still to be found. The government of the town, by a portreeve and constables annually chosen, is now merely nominal. The town is seated in a pleasant valley, the chief street forming part of the road between Tiverton and Dulverton. There are large quarries of limestone, and the production and sale of lime form an important part of the trade of the place. The manufacture of serge and of pottery is carried on. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, of the val. of £118, in the patron. of J. Chichester Nagle, Esq., of Calverleigh, near Tiverton. The church is a large structure in the early English style, with a low tower, a groined roof, and some defaced monuments of the Earls of Bath. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists and Bible Christians, and a free school founded and endowed by Mrs. Penton, in 1821; also an infant school, established in 1845, and supported by voluntary contributions. The charities of the parish amount to £9 a year. Petty sessions are held in the town. John de Bampton, a native of this place, who died in 1391, was a Carmelite, and the first lecturer on Aristotle's philosophy at the University of Cambridge. There is a valuable chalybeate spring in the parish. Wednesday and Saturday are the market days. Fairs are held on Whit-Tuesday, the Wednesday before Lady-day, the last Thursday in October, and the last Wednesday in November, for the sale of cattle and sheep. The sheep sold here are celebrated for their size and flavour.

BAMPTON HUNDRED, one of the fifteen hunds. or subdivisions of the co. of Oxford, situated in the western part of the county, and bounded on the N. by the hund. of Chadlington, on the E. by the hund. of Wootton, on the S. by Berkshire, and on the W. by Gloucestershire. It comprises the following pars.:—Alvescott, Asthall, Bampton, Blackbourton, Broadwell, Broughton Poggs, Burford, Clanfield, Ducklington, Kencott, Norton Brize, Standlake, Westwell, Witney, and Yelford, with parts of Langford and Shilton. The hund. extends over an area of 42,000 acres.

BAMPTON, or BAMPTON IN THE BUSH, a par. in the hund. of Bampton, in the co. of Oxford, 14 miles to the W. of Oxford, and 71 miles from London. It is situated on the north bank of the river Isis, a branch of which runs along the western border of the parish and falls into the Isis at Shilford. The par. contains the chplry. of Shilford, and the hmlts. of Aston, Brighthampton, Chimacy, Coate, and Weald. It is a place of great antiquity, its history running back beyond the time of the Norman Conquest. It appears in Domesday Book as a market town. It had a castle, erected, as is generally supposed, early in the 14th century, by Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, who held the manor of Bampton. The town is well built, and has a good supply of water. It has a new townhall. Its staple trade was formerly in fellmongery, and leather articles; but this trade has fallen off, and the market which was held on Wednesday is discontinued. The principal occupations of the place are now agricultural. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, divided into three portions, called Bampton, Bampton-Aston, and Bampton-Low—the first being of the val. of £550; the second, of £550; and the third of £300. The Dean and Chapter of Exeter possess the patron. of all three livings. The church is a fine cruciform edifice, very old and of great interest. Some parts of it are of Norman architecture, others of the early English style. It has a central tower surmounted by a lofty spire, and contains two monumental brasses, the oldest being of the year 1420. It is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a free grammar school, founded in 1670 by Robert Vesey, the income of which, derived from several endowments, is £54 per annum. The National school has also an endowment, and there are several other parochial charities. The remains of the castle are converted into a farm-house. Phillips, the poet, author of the "Splendid Shilling," was a native of this town (1676). A horse fair is held on the 26th and 27th of August.

BAMPTON, a par. in West ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, 9 miles from Penrith, its post town. It lies in a beautiful vale, surrounded on its east and west sides by hills, or "fells." Bampton and Bampton Grange are neighbouring villages, on the opposite banks of the river Lowther; this river flows northward through the vale, passes by Askham and Lowther, and empties itself into the Eamont, near Penrith. There are besides the hmlts. of Bonbey, Butterwick, Knipe, and Measand. About two miles to the S.W. of the village is the beautiful lake of Hawes-water and the sequestered glen of Mardale. The lake is 3 miles in length, and half a mile broad, and is surrounded on its east and south sides by fine hills, many of which are wooded. Agriculture and the rearing of stock are the principal employments of the inhabitants. In 1856 a company was formed for working a mine of copper ore at Measand, in the south part of the parish, and considerable progress has been made in the work, though the results are not yet apparent. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, of the val. of £101, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Patrick. A free grammar school was established here, in 1623, by Dr. Thomas Sutton, a native of the parish, which has now an income from endowment of £100, including the provision for school requisites and library. Several distinguished men have been among the pupils of this school—Dr. Mill, the biblical critic; Thomas Gibson, M.D., who married the daughter of the Protector, Richard Cromwell; and his nephew, Dr. Edmund Gibson, successively bishop of Lincoln and London, translator of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicles, and editor of two editions of Camden's Britannia; Judge Wilson; and latterly, Dr. James Prinstead, Bishop of Lichfield (1841). There is also a free school at Measand, founded in 1711 by Richard Wright, the income of which is at present about £70; and another small endowed school at Roughill, founded in 1662 by Edmund Noble, the endowment of which is about £12 10s. per annum. Besides the school and parish library, there is a library in the vicarage, founded by the Rev. Dr. Jonathan Tinclar, in 1750, which has been increased by some works, chiefly in divinity, given by Viscount Lonsdale. The charitable endowments of the parish amount altogether to £190. Not far from the village is Bampton Hall.

BAMPTON GRANGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Bampton, West ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, 1 mile from Bampton.

BAMPTON-KIRK. See KIRK-BAMPTON, Cumberland.

BAMPTON, LITTLE, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirk-Bampton, ward and co. of Cumberland, 7 miles to the W. of Carlisle.

BANADA, a vil. in the par. of Kilmacteige, and bar. of Leyny, in the co. of Sligo, 3 miles to the W. of Tobercurry. It is seated in a pleasant spot on the bank of the river Moy. A monastery of the Augustine order was founded here in 1423, and its lofty steeple is still standing. Near it is the modern mansion called The Abbey, the seat of D. Jones, Esq. A police force is stationed here, and fairs are held on the 17th January, the 19th May, and the 7th August.

BANAGH BARONY, one of the six bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Donegal, in the prov. of Ulster, Ireland, occupying the south-western part of the county, and bounded on the N. by the Atlantic Ocean and the bar. of Boylagh, on the E. by the bars. of Raphoe and Tirhugh, on the S. by Donegal Bay, and on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean. It contains the pars. of Glencolumbkille, Inver, Kilcar, Killaghtee, Upper Killybegs, and Kilmacrenard, with parts of Innishkeel and Lower Killybegs, and the town of Ardara. The bar. has an area of about 178,000 acres.

BANAGHER, a market town in the par. of Reynagh and bar. of Garrycastle, in King's County, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 7 miles to the N.W. of Parsonstown and 82 miles from Dublin. The town stands on rising ground on the south bank of the river Shannon, which here separates King's County from Galway, and is joined by the Little Brosna river, which falls into the Shannon just below the town. Banagher was formerly a corporate town and parliamentary borough, returning two representatives to the Irish parliament from the reign of Charles I. till the Union. The town, consisting mainly of one long street, occupies an important military position, and has strong defences. There are barracks for infantry, and two batteries, and on the Galway side of the river two towers, one of which is called Cromwell's Fort. These in former times were considered to be of great strength, and were strongly garrisoned in the Irish rebellion of 1798, but owing to the change of circumstances of the country, and of the whole system of military tactics, they are now practically useless; and though still kept in excellent repair are untenanted, ex pt by a few artillerymen attached to the coast brigade. ıe trade of the place has declined of late years, notthstanding the introduction of steamers and the imovements in the navigation of the river Shannon, ıich up to 1841 was crossed by a curious old bridge of arches. This has been replaced by a modern structre of very handsome proportions, erected among the rks of the Shannon commissioners which have added much to the improvement of this town, although they ıs said to have materially injured the neighbouring lds, owing to the quantity of water brought down and ıt sufficiently carried off. The construction of a railıy to Clara, connecting Banagher with the two great les of Ireland, will no doubt improve the commercial ıspects of the town. The parish church, which is near ı entrance of the town, is a handsome building, of kind of spurious Gothic, with tower and spire; it ıs been lately much improved internally by the induction of an organ, and other modifications. There ıs Roman Catholic chapel, a plain building; an excelıt Royal school, one of six in Ireland; parochial and ıtional schools, a dispensary, and a reading-room. A ıice station is established, and petty sessions are held ce a fortnight. Not far from the town is Cloghan stle, an ancient seat. Some ruins of Garry Castle are ır the Little Brosna. The market, chiefly for corn, ın Friday. Fairs are held on the 1st May, the 15th ptember and three following days, the 28th October, and th 8th November. The September fair is for cattle, &c.

BANAGHER, a par. in the bars. of Keenaght and Ikeeran, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 2 miles to the S.W. of Dungiven. It lies in a ıountainous country, near the sources of the river Roe, ıd contains the vil. of Feeny. The par., which includes a small tract of bog, was formerly more extensive th at present, embracing an area of 32,475 acres, ıich is now reduced to 23,896; the change being ıcasioned by a new parochial district having been ıned of parts of Banagher and of the adjoining ırish of Upper Cumber, which at the last avoidance ı Banagher, in 1850, was constituted into a distinct ırish. Limestone and a beautiful freestone are obtained ı abundance. The beautiful crystals called Irish diamnds are found here, many of them of large size and ıbriant colour. One found in 1796, named the Dungm crystal, is of extraordinary size, weighing 84lbs. T linen manufacture and bleaching, once carried on in he parish, have been discontinued for many years. Th living is a rect. in the dioc. of Derry and Raphoe, o he val. of £550, in the patron. of James Ogilby, Esq., ldee of the Skinners' Company. The church, a handsme structure, with a tower and spire, was erected in 12. In addition to the parish church, a small but tastefly-built chapel of ease has lately been erected in the vage of Feeny, two miles from the parish church. In th chapel evening service on Sundays is regularly conducted by the incumbent or his curate. In a secluded vley, watered by a small stream, stand the beautiful rns of the ancient church, and those of a small buildin called the Abbey. There are remains of two other chrches in the parish, a vitrified fort, an old cross, and a nonument to St. O'Heney, the traditional founder of th church. Among the pleasant residences are Ashpk, Knockan, Banagher Cottage, &c.

BANBRIDGE, a market town in the par. of Seapatrick, and bar. of Upper Iveagh, in the co. of Down, prv. of Ulster, Ireland, 12 miles to the N. of Newry, an 76 miles from Dublin. It is connected with the Dblin and Belfast Junction railway by a branch line to Scva. The town is situated in a fertile and well-cultivated country, on the banks of the river Bann, which is crossed by a handsome stone bridge, erected in the yr 1832. It is one of the principal manufacturing tns in Ireland. Linens of all kinds are made, bleached, an finished here. The number of webs completed in a yr has exceeded 66,000. There are extensive thread mnufactories, and great chemical works. The town is w in three miles of the Newry canal, and contains, ac rding to the census of 1861, 777 inhabited houses, with a population of 4,032, of whom 1,198 belong to the Established Church, 1,018 are Roman Catholics, 1,650 Presbyterians, 70 Methodists, and 96 of other denominations. There is a handsome market-house and a townhall, both erected by the Marquis of Downshire. The parish church is a fine modern structure in the form of a cross, with a tower and spire. The Presbyterians, of various sections, have three chapels in the town, and there are others for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists. A school for boys and girls has a revenue of £50 per annum, paid by the rector to the teachers. The Provincial Bank of Ireland and the Ulster bank have branches here. A dispensary has been established. Banbridge is the seat of a Poor-law Union and of a presbytery. It has a chief police station, and petty sessions are held once a fortnight. There is a handsome cenotaph in memory of Capt. Francis Crozier, who commanded H.M. ship Terror, in the expedition to the northern regions under Sir John Franklin; it is erected in the square opposite the parish church, and near the house in which Captain Crozier was born. The town contains many good residences, and in the vicinity are numerous seats of the gentry and superior farm-houses. Among the seats are Ballievey House, Chinauly, The Rectory, Millmount, Huntley Glen, &c. The Marquis of Downshire is proprietor of the town. Monday is the market day. Fairs are held once a month throughout the year, and a great horse fair is held in January. This town was formerly called Ballyvally, but received its present name on occasion of the building of the original bridge in 1712.

BANBRUSNA, a hmlt. in the bar. of Corkaree, in the co. of Westmeath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles from Rathowen.

BANBURY HUNDRED, one of the fourteen hunds. or subdivisions of the co. of Oxford, situated at the northern extremity of the co., and bounded on the N. by the cos. of Warwick and Northampton, on the E. by the co. of Northampton, and on the S. and W. by the hund. of Bloxham. There are two detached parts of this hund., one nearly enclosed by the hund. of Bloxham, the other by the hunds. of Chadlington and Wootton. It contains the chief part of the pars. of Banbury, Charlbury, and Cropredy, the whole of Clattercote and Swalcliffe pars., and the ext. par. libs. of Cornbury Park and Prescott. The hund. comprises an area of about 21,200 acres.

BANBURY, a par., market town, and municipal and parliamentary borough, chiefly in the hund. of Banbury and co. of Oxford, but partly also in the hund. of King's Sutton, in the co. of Northampton, 23 miles to the N. of Oxford, and 73 miles to the N.W. of London, or 77 miles by the London and North-Western railway, with which it is connected by a branch line from Bletchley. It is also a station on the Oxford and Birmingham section of the Great Western railway. The town stands in a pleasant valley on the banks of the river Cherwell, and includes the hmlts. of Neithrop, Grimsbury, Nethercote, Wickham, and Hardwick. It is a place of great antiquity, and was called by the Saxons Banesbyrig. Roman relics have frequently been found in the town and neighbourhood. In the first half of the 12th century a fortress was founded here by Alexander de Blois, Bishop of Lincoln, then lord of the manor of Banbury. It continued to be the occasional residence of the bishops till the reign of Edward VI. Danesmore, a level tract 3 miles from Banbury, was the scene of the battle of Banbury in 1469, when the Yorkists, led by the Earl of Pembroke, were totally defeated by the great Earl of Warwick, the kingmaker, and last of the Barons. Pembroke and his brother, and several other gentlemen, were captured the day after, and beheaded. The manor came into the possession of the crown in the reign of Edward VI., and the castle was granted by Queen Elizabeth to the Saye and Seles of Broughton. During the Civil War of the 17th century the castle was first garrisoned for the parliament, but was surrendered to the royalists in 1642, after the battle of Edgehill. It stood a siege of thirteen weeks in 1644, and another of ten weeks in 1646, when it was given up to the parliament, and was a short time afterwards dismantled. Scarcely any traces of it are visible. A fragment of the strong wall now forms the foundation of a lowly human dwelling-place, and garden vegetables grow on the site of the vanished fort. The market-cross, famous in all nurseries, no longer exists: it was destroyed by the Puritans in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Banbury, which was a borough by prescription, received a charter of incorporation from Queen Mary, which was subsequently confirmed and enlarged. It is now governed, under the Reform Act, by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, with the style of "the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Banbury." The borough has returned one member to parliament since the reign of Queen Mary. The mayor is the returning officer. The limits, however, of the municipal and parliamentary boroughs are not co-extensive, the former comprising, according to the census of 1861, only 790 inhabited houses, with a population of 4,055, while the latter includes 2,067 inhabited houses, with a population of 10,194. The borough magistrates hold petty sessions once a-week, and general sessions every half-year. Banbury is the seat of a Poor-law Union and of a County Court district. The town is generally well built, and the streets are broad, paved, and lighted with gas. Great improvements were made under the authority of an act passed in the reign of George IV. And the continued prosperity of the borough is shown by the rise of its population from 8,715 in 1851 to 10,194 in 1861, showing an increase in the decennial period of 1,479. The trade of the town has long flourished, and is greatly indebted to the Oxford and Coventry canal, by which it is connected with the general system of inland communication. The district is one of remarkable fertility, and the principal occupations of the people are those connected with agriculture. There is a manufacture of plush, shag, and girth webbing, though of less extent than it was formerly. Farming implements are made. The "cakes" are still famous, and are exported in large quantities, and a superior cheese is made, though it is doubted by some whether it be the kind so much in repute in the 16th century. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, and in the patron. of the bishop. The church is a large modern structure, erected in 1797, on the site of a fine ancient one which, with its monuments, was entirely demolished. There is also a district church in South Banbury, called Christ Church, the living of which is a perpet. cur. of the val. of £180, likewise in the gift of the bishop. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics, Unitarians, Friends, Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists. A free grammar school here attained such reputation that it served as a model for St. Paul's School, and the Manchester Free Grammar School. It has long ceased to exist. Here is a blue-coat school founded in 1705, and subsequently united with the National school. The former has an income from endowment of £70 a-year. There is an almshouse for twelve persons, and some other charitable institutions. The annual value of the parochial charities is £263. The town has an ancient gaol, a modern town-hall, a savings-bank, a mechanics' institution, a library, and a racecourse. The principal seats in the neighbourhood of Banbury are—Wroxton Abbey, the seat of Colonel North; Broughton Castle, the seat of Lord Saye and Sele; and Northrop House, that of Miss Milward. Two hospitals, dedicated, one to St. John, the other to St. Leonard, formerly existed here. The remains of the former are converted into a dwelling-house: of the latter no ruins are left. The market, which is held on Thursday, is large and well attended. Fairs are held in every month throughout the year except February and November.

BANBURY LANE, a hmlt. in the hund. of Gayton, in the co. of Northampton, 4 miles from Towcester.

BANCHORY-DEVENICH, a par., partly in the co. of Aberdeen, partly in that of Kincardine, Scotland, 3 miles to the W. of Aberdeen. It is situated on the sea-coast, and on the banks of the river Dee, which is crossed by a suspension bridge 305 feet in length, constructed for foot passengers. The par. contains the vils. Dounies, Findon, and Portlethen, the last of which is station on the Scottish North-Eastern railway. The s is of various characters, and the district is partly in and heathy. Blue granite of very firm texture is fou but little used on account of the difficulty of working Some of the inhabitants are employed in the fisher The living, of the val. of £159, is in the presb. of Ab deen, and in the patron. of the crown. The kirk stan on the left bank of the Dee. There are several endow schools. Banchory House is the chief residence. Tw Druid circles and several tumuli exist here.

BANCHORY-TERNAN, a par. in the co. of Kin dine, Scotland, 17 miles to the W. of Aberdeen. It a station on the Deeside railway. It lies on both ba of the Dee, at the junction of the Aven with that ri and contains an area of 18,950 acres, including th of Arbeadie. Part of the district is hilly, the elev of the hill of Fare being 1,500 feet, and there are s small lakes. There is much pleasant scenery. living, of the val. of £288, is in the presb. of Kincar and in the patron. of Sir T. Burnet, Bart. The In pendents have a chapel here. Besides two ancient s Crathie Castle, near Ley's Loch, and the castle of T whilly, there are several modern mansions, of wh chief ar Inchmarle and Banchory Cottage. Fairs held in February, March, June, July, August, a December. Banchory is a Gaelic word, signifying "op ing between two hills."

BANDERWIC, a vil. in the hund. of Faircross, i the co. of Berks, 4 miles from East Ilsley.

BANDON, or BANDON-BRIDGE, a parliamentar borough and market town, in the par. of Ballymod in the bars. of Kinalmeaky and East Carbery, and par in the par. of Kilbrogan, in the bar. of Kinalmeaky of Cork, and prov. of Munster, Ireland, 20 miles to S.W. of Cork, and 180 miles from Dublin. It is nected with Cork by the Cork and Bandon rail which was completed in 1850. This town was f by the first Earl of Cork in the reign of James I., granted it a charter of incorporation. It was defe by walls with several forts at the entrances, and was asylum of the English Protestants during the Civil W in the reign of Charles I. The walls were razed at the revolution of 1688, but some portions of them remain. The town is situated on the banks of the ri Bandon, in a pleasant and fertile country, not far fr the sea-coast. At Inishannon, 4 miles to the N.E., river becomes navigable, and falls into the sea at Kins Bandon is a well-built town, containing many h houses. Most of the buildings are of stone, but number of inhabited houses has gradually decreased fr 1,180 in 1841, to 982 in 1861. A bridge of six ar crosses the river and connects the two parts of the to the principal streets on both sides of the river ter nating at the bridge. The railway station is on t south side of the river. The linen manufacture, wh was formerly an important branch of the local indus has ceased to be carried on. Woollen and cotton goo camlets and stuffs, are made to a small extent. Th are distilleries and breweries, and numerous tan-yar A small import and a large export trade in corn a butter is carried on. Bandon is famous for the beau of its churches. The new parish church of Ballymod is an elegant structure in the Gothic style of archite ture, built (partly at the expense of the Ecclesiast Commissioners for Ireland, and partly by voluntary su scription) at a cost of over £10,000. It is capable accommodating 1,150 persons, and is erected on the s of the old church, which had been built at the founda of the town. It has a very fine organ, presented by t late Hon. and Very Rev. Richard B. Bernard, Dean Leighlin. There are also places of worship for Roma Catholics, Presbyterians, the Scotch Church, and t for Wesleyan Methodists. A convent was establish in 1829; and there are two free schools, one of wh was founded and endowed by Viscount Boyle. T town contains a court-house, a corn-market, a fi market, barracks, and a bridewell. It has also t blic libraries, a savings-bank, a branch of the Provincial Bank of Ireland, an infirmary, and a fever spital. The borough returns one representative to rliament. The government of the corporation has ased, and the management of the borough is now sted in commissioners. Its revenue is about £580, d its population 6,218, according to the census of 61, of whom 1,553 are returned as belonging to the tablished Church, 4,294 are Roman Catholics, 264 ethodists, 84 Presbyterians, and 27 of other denonations. Bandon is the seat of a Poor-law Union, d contains the union-house. It is also the head of an cise and a police district. Quarter and petty sessions e held here. The Duke of Devonshire and the Earl of ndon are the chief proprietors of the town, the latter whom has his seat at Castle Bernard, near Bandon. he Boyle family take from this place the title of Baron Bandon-Bridge. The market is held on Saturday. irs are held on the first Wednesday of each month, cept May and November, on the 6th and 25th y, on Holy Thursday, the 29th October and the 8th vember.

BANFFSHIRE (pronounced Bamffshire), a co. in the E. part of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the Moray ith, on the E. and S.E. by the co. of Aberdeen, and the W. by the co. of Elgin and the river Spey. It s between 57° and 57° 40′ N. lat., and between 35′ and 3° 10′ W. long. Its greatest length, from oup Head in the N.W. to Ben Macdhu at the head Glen Avon in the S.W., is nearly 70 miles. Its atest breadth is at the N., whence it gradually narws and terminates southward in a point. It has a ast-line of about 34 miles, and comprises an area of square miles, or about 414,080 acres. Next the sea surface lies low, but gradually rises to the S., where attains a considerable elevation. The county is generlly hilly, but has a pleasing variety of scenery—in the level fertile lands highly cultivated; in the S. lofty anite mountains: and between these extremes hills of ver elevation, with good pasture, and valleys of great tility, with many rivers and streams, and noble woods. n Macdhu and Cairngorm, which are among the ltiest mountains in Great Britain, are partly within s county. The former has an elevation of 4,362 feet ve the sea, the latter of 4,080 feet. Near the conf nce of the Avon with the Spey is Ben Rinnes, which s to the height of 2,750 feet. Knockhill, the Buck of Corach, and Corryhabies are also in this county. The prevailing rocks are granite, gneiss, mica-slate, Old Red sandstone, and limestone. The "Portsoy marble" is a d of serpentine. Slate is quarried in the neighbourhd of Banff and Keith. Ichthyolites have been found ar Banff. Rock crystals and topazes are abundant Cairngorm, but they have a much lower market lue than formerly. Hones or whetstones are obned near Balvenie, on the Fiddich.—The rivers of nffshire are the Spey, the Doveran or Deveron, the on or Aven, and the Fiddich. The Spey has its rces among the Grampians, and is one of the chief rers of Scotland. It forms part of the western boundary of this county. The Doveran rises on the eastern der, enters Aberdeenshire, and afterwards forms the ndary of the county, and enters the sea at Banff. e Avon runs down from a small lake between rngorm and Ben Macdhu, and joins the Spey near veraven. There are several smaller streams.—The mate of this county is very variable. In the level dists of the north it is tolerably dry and mild, and in the ntainous parts of the south it is severe and damp. A ge extent of waste land has been of late years brought er cultivation, and more will probably be reclaimed. e most approved methods of farming have been introd and applied with good success. Oats, wheat, barley, turnips are grown extensively. The crops in the hilly rict are sometimes not harvested till the beginning winter. Cattle, and other stock of the best kinds, are oduced in the lowlands and reared for exportation, the ve breed being pastured on the hills. The farms are ally leased for 19 years, and contain from one to two hundred acres of arable land, besides pasture.—The chief town of the county is Banff, situated on the coast, at the mouth of the Doveran. The other principal towns are Cullen—which like Banff is a royal burgh, Keith, Portsoy, Dufftown, Buckie, and Tomantoul. Macduff, a thriving seaport near Banff, is a burgh of barony.—No manufactures of importance are carried on in Banffshire. There are extensive distilleries in various districts. Large quantities of salmon are taken in the Spey and the Doveran, which are mostly sent to London. The fisheries are said to be worth about £10,000 a-year. Five hundred boats are employed in the herring fishery, which is pursued successfully along the coast. A brisk coasting trade is carried on at the several ports, corn and cattle being exported, and timber, iron, &c., imported.—The county, which contains a population of 59,234, returns one representative to parliament, and the parliamentary burghs are contributory to Elgin in returning another member. The local government is entrusted to a lord-lieutenant, 39 deputy-lieutenants, a sheriff, and substitute. The county contains 19 parishes, with parts of several others, and is the seat of three presbyteries; those of Aberlour, Fordyce, and Strathbogie. The parochial schoolmasters share with those of Aberdeenshire and the county of Elgin, the munificent endowment founded by James Dick, in 1827, who bequeathed his entire fortune, amounting to £130,000 for the benefit of the schools of those three counties, in one of which he was born, and in the others educated. Besides those of the Establishment, there are places of worship belonging to the Free Church, Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Independents, and Roman Catholics.—There are but few important remains of antiquity in Banffshire. The most noteworthy are castles, cairns, funeral monuments of the ancient Scots and of the Northmen, and some stones erected on the site and in memorial of a battle. Three miles from Aberlour is Balveny Castle, a stronghold of the Douglases, on the river Fiddich. It now belongs to the Earl of Fife, and gives the title of Baron to the Duke of Atholl. Other castles are at Findlater, Boharm, and Rothes. At Mortlach, under Ben Rinnes, is an ancient church, once a cathedral, a bishopric having been established there for above a century, when it was removed in 1139 to Aberdeen. The church of Gamrie was built in 1010.—The principal seats are Gordon Castle, the seat of the Duke of Richmond; Duff House, that of the Earl of Fife; Cullen House, that of the Earl of Seafield (to these three noblemen the larger part of the county belongs); Letterfourie, of Sir W. Gordon, Bart.; Birkenbog, of Sir R. Abercrombie, Bart.; Edingight, of Sir J. Milne Innes, Bart.; Ballindalloch, of Grant, Bart.; Dalgaty Castle, of M. E. Duff, Esq., M.P., &c.—The Great North of Scotland and Inverness and Aberdeen Junction railway crosses the county, with stations at Keith, Grange, and Rothiemay. A branch line from Grange runs to Portsoy and Banff; another line connects Banff with the Aberdeen and Turriff railway.

BANFF (pronounced Bamff), a par., borough, market town and seaport, and the county town of Banffshire, Scotland, 45 miles to the N.W. of Aberdeen, and 156 miles to the N. of Edinburgh. It is situated in a pleasant and fertile district on the sea-coast, at the mouth of the river Doveran, and is connected by branch railways with Aberdeen and Inverness at Turriff and Grange. It is a place of some antiquity, and was made a royal burgh, by Robert II., in 1372. Few of the ancient houses are now remaining. The town is remarkably clean, and has several good streets. There is a townhouse, with an elegant spire, which was erected in 1798, a market-house, custom-house, prison, savings-bank, and six branch banking-houses, besides Chalmers' hospital for the sick, &c., one of the handsomest buildings in Scotland; it has only been recently finished, and has a noble endowment of £1,800 a year from land left by a worthy citizen of Banff. The river is crossed by a stone bridge of seven arches.—Banff is a bonding port and a coastguard station. Since the improvement of the harbour, more ships resort to it, but the trade is still very limited. The herring and salmon fisheries are carried on with success, the latter fishery belonging to the Earl of Fife, by whom it is now conducted. The number of vessels belonging to the port is about 115, which are almost entirely engaged in the coasting and colonial trade. The jurisdiction of the port of Banff extends to the following sub-ports:—Buckie, Cullen, Garmouth, and Fraserburgh.—The living, which is of the val. of 19 chalders, or about £300, is in the presb. of Fordyce, and in the patron. of the Earl of Seafield. The kirk is a large edifice with a very handsome spire, lately finished, and was erected in 1790. The other places of worship are chapels belonging to the Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. There is an academy supported by the corporation, a scientific institution, and a good library.—The government of the burgh is vested in a provost, 3 bailies, and 5 councillors. Under the Reform Act, Banff forms, with Macduff, a town on the east bank of the Doveran, one parliamentary burgh, contributory to Elgin in returning one member to parliament. It contains, according to the census of 1861, 1,259 inhabited houses, with a population of 6,780, distributed into 1,718 separate families. The revenue of the municipal burgh is £935. A newspaper is published in the town, called the Banffshire Journal.—Near the town, and within view from the bridge, is Duff House, a modern mansion in the Roman style, seated on a plain in the midst of a large and beautiful park, on the banks of the river, the seat of the Earl of Fife. It is built of freestone, and adorned with elaborate sculpture. It contains a valuable and interesting collection of pictures, including many portraits of eminent persons. Banff Castle, of which the fortress walls and moat remain, was the birthplace (1613) of James Sharp, Archbishop of St. Andrew's; his father was sheriff-clerk of the county. James Macpherson, the famous robber, was imprisoned and executed at Banff in 1700-1. When at the place of execution, he played on his fiddle a lively tune, which he had composed in the prison.—The town suffered to a serious extent from the floods of August, 1829, when some of the lower grounds were covered with water 14 feet deep, and many houses were undermined and washed away. Friday is the market day. Fairs are held on the 7th January, the first Tuesday in February, the first Friday in August (old style), and the Friday before the 22nd November.

BANGLEY, a lib. in the tnshp. of Fazeley, in the par. and hund. of Tamworth, in the co. of Stafford, 3 miles from Tamworth.

BANGOR, a par., city, borough, and market town, in the hund. of Uwch-gorfai, in the co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, 9 miles to the N.E. of Carnarvon, and 238 miles by railway from London. It is situated on the north coast of the county, at the head of the bay of Beaumaris, and at the entrance to the Menai Strait, and is a station on the Holyhead railway, which is carried across the strait by the great Britannia Tubular Bridge, not far from the city. This place has existed from a very early period; but the precise time of its foundation is not known. It is the oldest see in Wales, except Llandaff, its first bishop having been appointed about A.D. 550. King Edgar confirmed the privileges of the bishopric, and added to its endowments. The original cathedral was destroyed in 1071 by the English army, and was not rebuilt till after 1102, when contributions were made for that purpose at a synod at Westminster. When King John invaded the principality, in 1211, he captured the bishop at the altar, and only released him on payment of a large ransom. The city suffered greatly from the wars in the reigns of John and Henry III. Edward I. restored the endowments of the see, and granted further privileges. The cathedral was again destroyed during the insurrection under Owain Glyndwr, and lay in ruins nearly a century; being then restored by Bishop Dean.—The city, which formerly consisted chiefly of one long street in a beautiful valley, protected on the south by rocks and mountains, is now considerably enlarged, and is divided into Upper and Lower Bangor. Since the formation of the Holyhead railway many new residences have been built, and the city has grown in population and prosperity. Its situation near the sea and the mountains, the fine views, and the beautiful scenery of the neighbourhood, make it an attractive watering-place. The bay of Beaumaris, the Isle of Anglesey beyond it, the Snowdon range of mountains, and the two marvellous bridges over the Menai, combine to make it a spot of more than common interest.—Within 8 miles of Bangor are the great slate quarries of Llandegai, the property of the Pennants, which employ above 2,000 hands, and yield a gross annual revenue of £250,000. The principal trade of the city and port depends on these mines. There are several manufactories, in which various articles, useful and ornamental, are made of slate; but the larger part of the produce of the mines is exported. There are several shipping places, the chief of which is Port Penrhyn. The city contains a market-house, assembly rooms, a museum, several banks, and some good hotels.—The borough, with three others, is contributory to Carnarvon in returning one member to parliament. It comprises within its limits, which nearly coincide with those of the parish, 1,572 inhabited houses, with a population of 6,795, according to the census of 1861, against 6,338 in 1851, showing an increase of 457 in the decennial period. It is the seat of a County Court district, and of a Poor-law Union. The Union house is about half a mile from the city.—The dioc. of Bangor, which is in the province of Canterbury, comprises Carnarvonshire, Merionethshire, Anglesey, and part of Montgomeryshire. It includes the two archdeaconries of Bangor and Merioneth, and about 130 benefices. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bangor, val. with the chapelry of Pentîr, which is annexed to it, of £800, in the patron. of the bishop. It consists of undivided moieties, shared by two incumbents, who, though in receipt of all the tithes of the parish, both small and great, are called vicars. The cathedral is dedicated to St. Deiniol, or Daniel, by whom it was founded; and a portion of the building is appropriated and used as the parish church. It is a plain structure, in the form of a cross, with a low tower at the west end, and is chiefly in the perpendicular style of architecture. It is 233 feet in length, and 96 feet in breadth through the transepts. The interior is simple and unadorned, but it contains a few monuments. The most interesting are those of the two princes, Ap Cynan and Owain Gwynedd. In the library is preserved the missal of Bishop Anian, a curious folio volume of the year 1291. The cathedral has been recently restored, and a handsome stained window placed at the east end. The bishop's palace stands near the cathedral. Among the Bishops of Bangor have been Hoadly, Sherlock, Herring, Moore, Randolph, and Bethell. This diocese was prospectively united with St. Asaph by order in council, dated 13th December, 1838; but the arrangement was annulled by Stat. 10 and 11 Vict. c. 108. Arrangements have been made to build two new churches in this place—one in Upper, the other in Lower Bangor. The latter has been recently commenced, and is in the geometrical Gothic style of architecture. The parish has also, for ecclesiastical purposes, been divided between the senior and junior vicars into two districts—Upper and Lower, with that of Pentîr shared jointly by both. The population of the Lower district, according to the last census, amounts to 5,574; Upper, 3,966; Pentîr, 953—total, 10,193. A free grammar school was established here, in 1557, by Dr Geoffry Glynn, advocate, which has a revenue from endowment of about £580. It has two scholarships in Jesus College, Oxford. There are also three National schools, one Wesleyan, and one British school, in the parish. The Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyans have chapels here. An almshouse for six men was founded by Bishop Rowlands in the 17th century, the revenue of which is now £216. In 1809, the Carnarvonshire and Anglesey Royal Dispensary was founded on the 50th anniversary of the accession of King George III.; it has been converted into an infirmary. Near the city is Penrhyn Castle, the fine seat of the Pennants. There are many handsome residences in the neighbourhood. From Garth Point is a ferry to Anglesey, and there is egular communication by steam with Liverpool and ther ports. Friday is the market day. Fairs are held n the 5th April, the 25th June, the 16th September, nd the 28th October.

BANGOR, a par. in the hund. of Troedyrawr, in the . of Cardigan, South Wales, 5 miles to the E. of New-stle-Emlyn, its post town. It is situated in a fertile d beautiful country, on the banks of the river Teify. he living is a rect. in the dioc. of St. David's, of the l. of £163, in the gift of the bishop. The church is a nall building, standing above the river, and is dedicated St. David. The principal seat is Blaen Dyffryn. ot far from the church is Castell Pistog, a moated ount, conjectured to be the site of the family house of e Pistogs, to whom the manor once belonged.

BANGOR, a par., seaport, municipal borough, and arket town, in the bars. of Ards and Lower Castle-agh, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 12 iles to the N.E. of Belfast, and 114 miles from Dublin. is situated in a pleasant and cultivated district, on e south coast of Belfast Lough, and contains the and of Copeland, with the villages of Groomsport, nlig, and Crawfordsburn. Bangor was famous for its bey of canons, founded by St. Congall, a native of unty Antrim, in the year 559; in connection with which school grew up and became widely celebrated. The bey perished by fire in 674. It was captured by the nes in 818, and a massacre of the monks followed. was rebuilt in 1125, and an oratory was added to it, lilt of stone, from which circumstance the place re-ved the name Bean-choir (Bangor), or "white church." 1469 the establishment was given by the Pope to the anciscans. After the Dissolution, it was held by the Nials, and was subsequently granted by James I. to James Hamilton, who settled there with a colony of ts, accompanied by their minister, Robert Blair. The eliest record of the residence of a bishop of Bangor rs date 810; but it is highly probable that bishops l been stationed there before that period.—The district ntains slate, coal, copper, and lead, but the last only is rked. Some of the inhabitants are engaged in fishing. ere were formerly two cotton mills in the town; but only trade now carried on is the sewed muslin and ton weaving.—The town received a charter of incor-ation from James I., and returned two members to Irish parliament till the Union. It contains, accord-g to the census of 1861, 578 inhabited houses, with a pulation of 2,525, of whom 677 are returned as be-ging to the Established Church, 149 Roman Catholics, 56 Presbyterians, 110 Methodists, and 23 of other suasions. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight in town. Police and coastguard stations are also esta-lished here. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of wn, Connor, and Dromore, val. £100, in the gift of Vcount Bangor and R. E. Ward, Esq. The church is a ndsome modern edifice in the perpendicular style, nding within the precincts of the old abbey, and ble of containing 500. It is of modern structure, cepting the tower and steeple; the former no doubt of the building erected in 1617. There are several ol monuments about the church, but the most remark-al is that erected to the memory of the first Protestant d of Down, the inscription of which deserves quota-ti here—"Heir lies belowe ane learned and Reverend Fher in Gode's Church, Mester John Gibson, sence Rormatione from Popery the first Deane of Downe se by his Majestye into this kingdom, and received by my Lord Clandeboye to be preacher at Bangor. A his entry had xi. communicants, and at his departure th lyf, 23 Junii, 1623, left 1,200, being of age 63 years. So hryst was his advantage, bothe in lyfe and death." The are two Presbyterian meeting-houses, a Roman Catholic chapel, and one each for Wesleyan and Primi-tiv Methodists. There are several schools, supported by endowments and subscription, a savings-bank, and a dis nsary.—The principal seats in the neighbourhood, the scenery of which is very agreeable, are Clandeboye, the eat of Lord Dufferin; Bangor Castle, that of R. E. W l, Esq., one of the proprietors of the town; Crawfordsburn, of J. Sharman Crawford, Esq., &c. In the parish are many ancient military and other remains. Bangor gives the title of viscount and baron to the Wards. Tuesday is the market day. Fairs are held on the 12th January, the 1st May, the 1st August, and the 22nd November.

BANGOR-ISCOED, or BANGOR-IS-Y-COED, a par. partly in the hund. of Bromfield, in the co. of Flint, partly in the hund. of Maylor, in the co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 5 miles to the S.E. of Wrexham, its post town. This place is sometimes called Bangor-Monachorum, or "Bangor of the monks." Its usual name signifies "Bangor below the wood." It is situated on the border of Cheshire, in a rich and beautiful country on the river Dee. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and was, at a very early period, the seat of a large and important monastery. Two thousand one hundred monks are said to have been settled here, who divided their time between work and worship. On the occasion of the mission of St. Augustine they made a daring stand against the claims of the Romish Church. The saint threatened them with some terrible manifestation of God's wrath if they remained obdurate, and within a few years the Northumbrian king, Ethelfrith, having won a victory over the British, committed a great slaughter of the monks of Bangor. The number massacred is stated by Bede to be 1,200, but in the Saxon Chronicle it is given as 200. The death of Augustine is said to have taken place previously. The fact of the massacre appears to be beyond doubt, and the monastery never recovered from the fearful blow. No traces of the buildings are now to be found. Pelagius was one of the numerous learned and pious teachers who were sent out from this monastery. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of St. Asaph, of the val. with the cur. of Overton, of £1,200, in the gift of the Marquis of Westminster. The church is dedicated to St. Dinoth. It contains an ancient font, octagonal in form, and adorned with much curious and interesting sculpture. There is a free school for boys, endowed in 1728 by Lady Jeffreys, widow of Judge Jeffreys, with a revenue of £39, and some other charities.

BANHAGLOG, a chplry. in the par. of Llandinam, and hund. of Llanidloes, in the co. of Montgomery, North Wales, 4 miles to the N.E. of Llanidloes. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bangor, and in the gift of the bishop.

BANN, THE, a river in the north-eastern part of Ireland, which rises among the Mourne mountains, near the southern coast of the co. of Down, and flows in a north-westerly direction to Lough Neagh, into which it falls not far from the mouth of the Blackwater. It quits Lough Neagh at its northern extremity, pursuing a course in the same direction as before, and finally falls into the North Sea, a little below the town of Coleraine. The length of the upper section of the river is about 25 miles; that of the lower about 33 miles. Its total length, including the lough, is about 75 miles. The upper river divides, through the greater part of its course, the counties of Down and Armagh, and the lower river forms the boundary of the counties of Antrim and Londonderry from the lough to within a few miles of Coleraine. It receives the waters of several small streams. The navigation of the river begins at Portadown, where it is joined by the Newry canal. The stream is rapid, and there are several falls. From its source to the ocean the total fall is about 370 feet. The towns it passes are Banbridge and Gilford, in the county of Down; Portadown, in the county of Armagh; Toome and Portglenone, in Antrim; and Kilrea and Coleraine, in Londonderry. The Belfast and Armagh railway crosses the river at Portadown. There is a valuable salmon fishery near Coleraine. The entrance to the river is impeded by the bar at the mouth. Important works have been established for improving the navigation and the drainage of the country on the lower river.

The register dates from 1709.

BANNOCKBURN, a vil. and quoad sacra par. in the par. of St. Ninian's, in the co. of Stirling, Scotland, 3 miles to the S. of Stirling. It is a station on the Scottish Central railway. The village is situated in a glen on the banks of a small stream which has given name to the village, among the braes that slope up from the Firth of Forth, into which the Bannockburn falls. The village lies on the high road from Stirling to Falkirk and Edinburgh, and has a thriving trade. The manufacture of tartans, carpets, and other woollen articles is carried on to a considerable extent. There are several tan-yards. Bannockburn has a place in history as the scene of the great and decisive battle between the Scotch under Bruce and the English led by Edward II. on the 24th of July, 1314: in which the English were defeated with immense loss, and Scottish independence was established. Memorials of that fierce struggle abound in the neighbourhood. There is the Bore Stone in which the Bruce set up his standard; Randal Field, the scene of a skirmish on the eve of Bannockburn; Ingram's Crook, named after an English commander; and Gillies' Hill, where Bruce had placed the baggage and camp followers. Within a mile is Sauchie-burn, where James III. was defeated in 1488.

BANNOW, a par. in the bar. of Bargy, in the co. of Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 17 miles to the S.W. of Wexford, and 95 miles from Dublin. It occupies the peninsula tract between Bannow Bay on the N.W. and Ballyteigue Bay on the S.E., and contains the vil. of Carrig. Bannow was a town of importance before the reign of Edward I., and sent two members to the Irish parliament. It is not known at what time it became a borough. The old town is said to have been covered with drifted sand; and a few traces of it now exist on the isthmus at the entrance to the bay. A fragment of stone, supposed to have formed part of the chimney of the townhall, was removed to the churchyard, and upon it the burgesses elected the members of parliament until the Act of Union, in 1800. The inhabitants are now principally engaged in agriculture. The harbour only admits small craft. A coastguard station is established here. The living is a vic., which, with the rect. of Kilkevan, constitutes the union of Bannow, in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin. The neighbourhood attracts many visitors in the summer, and has many pleasant residences for their accommodation. The principal seat is Grange, the residence of the Rev. Richard Boyse, proprietor of great part of the parish. The agricultural school, opened here in 1821 by the Rev. W. Hickey, ceased to exist when he left the parish in 1826; but the good it effected is still perceptible in the improved mode of agriculture, and the liberal use of sea-weed, which is occasionally thrown in on the coast in great abundance. There is a Roman Catholic chapel, and a parochial school maintained by the incumbent. There is no dispensary in the parish of Bannow, but one in Kilkevan, for the use of the adjoining parishes.

BANSHA, or TEMPLENEIRY, a vil. in the par. of Templeneiry, in the bar. of Clanwilliam, and co. of Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Tipperary. It is situated on the banks of the river Arra, and is a station on the Waterford and Limerick railway.

BARDON PARK, an ext. par. place in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, in the co. of Leicester, 9 miles to the N.W. of Leicester. It was formerly the estate of the Lords Beaumont, and came by purchase, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, to the Hoods, who still possess it. It is a station on the Burton and Leicester branch of the Midland railway. This estate forms part of the ancient Charnwood Forest, a hilly tract about 20 miles in circuit. Bardon Hill, which is included within the limits of the park, is the highest point of the hills of Charnwood, and though not of great elevation (about 850 feet), forms a noted landmark, and commands probably a wider prospect than any other ground in Great Britain. As it stands far apart from any hills of equal height, the view from it is panoramic. Visible from it are Lincoln Cathedral, nearly 50 miles distant; the Derbyshire mountains, the Malvern hills, and the hills of Shropshire and North Wales, at from 70 to 100 miles distant. It is conjectured that the space included within lines joining the various points of view would be nearly equal to one-fourth the area of England and Wales. The hill itself has been seen at a distance of 50 miles.

BARDSEA, a chplry. and tnshp. in the par. of Urswick, hund. of Lonsdale, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 5 miles to the E. of Dalton. The chief residence is Bardsea Hall.

BARDSEY ISLAND, an island in St. George's Channel, off the coast of Carnarvonshire, North Wales. It is an ext. par. place in the hund. of Commitmaen, and co. of Carnarvon, situated near the extremity of the peninsula which forms the north boundary of Cardigan Bay. It is between 2 and 3 miles in length, and 1 mile in breadth, comprising an area of about 370 acres, and is separated from the mainland by a channel about 3 miles broad. This channel, from the rapidity of the current through it at times, is called Bardsey Race. From the same circumstance the island received the name of Inys Enlli, or "isle of the current." From a very remote period it was a favourite resort of such as desired religious retirement. The Culdees are said to have had an establishment here before the 6th century, and in 516, after the massacre of the monks of Bangor-is-y-coed, Dubricius, Archbishop of Caerleon, resigned his see and took up his abode in this lonely island. It thus acquired the designation of the "Isle of Saints." Its present name is of Saxon origin, and denotes that it was a retreat of the bards. An abbey was founded here at an early period, probably by St. Dubricius, which flourished till the Dissolution, under Henry VIII., when its revenue was £58. There are no remains of the building, but near its site graves have been discovered lined with stone or tile. Ruins of an ancient oratory exist in the island, consisting of an apartment with a stone altar, in which religious services are occasionally performed. The north-east part of the island is mountainous, with perpendicular cliffs, which bold climbers explore for the eggs of sea-fowl deposited among them. The natives are chiefly employed in fishing, and their boats are secured in a small harbour on the south-east side of the island—the only side accessible from the sea. A lighthouse was erected in 1821; it is 146 feet high, and the light is visible at the distance of 15 miles.

BARKING, a par. and market town in the hund. of Becontree, in the co. of Essex, 7 miles to the E. of London. It is a station on the London, Tilbury, and Southend railway. It is situated on the river Roding, a little above its junction with the Thames, and includes the wards of Chadwell, Great Ilford, and Ripple. The origin and signification of the name Barking are doubtful. The town is of considerable antiquity, and grew into importance with an abbey founded there near the close of the 7th century, on the dissolution of which the prosperity of the place began to decline. Barking abbey was one of the most ancient and most wealthy in England. The date of its foundation is A.D. 677; its founder was St. Erkenwald, Bishop of London, and his sister Ethelburga was its first abbess. It was established for nuns of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. The appointment of the abbess was in the hands of the king for several centuries, and afterwards the nuns had the privilege of electing her. She was one of four abbesses who were baronesses in virtue of their office, and many noble and even royal ladies held the government of the abbey. Several of the earliest abbesses received canonisation. From the year 870, when the Danes burnt the town, destroyed the abbey, and massacred or dispersed the nuns, the house lay in ruins for nearly a century; until it was rebuilt with many others by King Edgar. William the Conqueror is said to have resided here for a time before the Tower of London was completed. At the Dissolution the revenue of the abbey was £1,081. Of the extensive buildings connected with it little now remains except a gateway, consisting of a square tower with a pointed arch. In the upper part of it is the chapel of the Holy Rood. This tower stands at the entrance to the churchyard, and is called Fire-Bell Gate. Barking Level is an extensive tract of ground in the parish, lying below the high-water level of the Thames, and protected by a dyke. It has been so protected from a very early period, and the keeping up of the dyke was the duty of the abbess; a duty discharged at an immense expense, by reason of the frequent inundations. In 1707 a destructive flood occurred, breaking down the dyke, and covering 1,000 acres of valuable land. The embankment was restored and strengthened at a cost of £40,000, by Captain Perry, and the care of it is now entrusted to commissioners. Part of the parish of Barking was included within the ancient Hainault Forest; and here stood the ancient oak (12 yards in girth, and covering an area 300 feet in circuit) beneath which was held Fairlop Fair. This fair, which was held on the 1st Friday in July, owed its origin to one Day, a Wapping blockmaker. The oak was destroyed by a gale in 1820, and the last fair was held on the spot in 1853. The pulpit of the church of St. Pancras, Middlesex, was made of part of the venerable Fairlop Oak. The principal occupations of the inhabitants of the town are fishing, market-gardening, and the carrying of coals and timber up the Roding, which is navigable to Ilford. There is a market-house and townhall, built of timber in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of London, of the val. of £767, in the patron of the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. It is a handsome building, in the perpendicular style, containing several Norman pillars, four monumental brasses, and a beautiful stained window in the chancel; this window is new, having been added on occasion of a partial restoration of the church. There are chapels belonging to the Independents, Wesleyans, and Plymouth Brethren. The Friends have a burial-ground here and a meeting-house, only used on occasions of interments. A free school was founded in 1641 by Sir James Campbell, and endowed by him with a rentcharge of £20. There are National and infant schools, some almshouses, a hospital for aged men at Ilford, and an endowment by John Fowke, for the education of two boys of the parish at Christ's Hospital, London. The charitable endowments amount altogether to £330 per annum. At Uphall farm, near the town, are remains of an ancient camp, of a square form, probably of Roman origin. It extends over nearly 50 acres. A mile to the south-east is Eastbury House, a fine specimen of the Elizabethan style. The market, now discontinued, was held on Saturday. A fair is held on the 22nd October.

BARKING, a par. in the hund. of Bosmere and Claydon, in the co. of Suffolk, 1 mile to the S.W. of Needham-Market, its post town. It is situated on the river Orwell, and contains the chplry. of Needham-Market, and the hmlt. of Darmsden. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with that of Darmsden, £840, in the gift of the Earl of Ashburnham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is also a district church at Needham-Market, the living of which is a perpet. cur., in the gift of the rector. A free school was established here in 1650, by Francis Theobald, which has now a revenue from endowment of £55. The parish has the benefit of several other charitable bequests, amounting (with the school) to £132 per annum.

BARMING, or BARMING, EAST, a par. in the hund. of Maidstone, lathe of Aylesford, in the co. of Kent, 2 miles to the W. of Maidstone, its post town. It is situated in a beautiful and highly cultivated district on both banks of the river Medway, and comprises valuable hop-grounds and fruit-gardens; the produce of the latter being sent to the London market. Two bridges cross the river. There are quarries of the stone called Kentish rag. The abbess of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate-street, had a residence here, this place being among the possessions of that nunnery. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, of the val. of £598, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is a small edifice with a good spire, and is dedicated to St. Margaret. Remains of a Roman villa, and many ancient coins, Roman and English, have been found here. Dr. John Harris, who wrote a history of the county, was once rector of Barming; and here, too, was the residence of the Smarts, the family to which belonged Christopher Smart, the poet.

BARMING, WEST, a hmlt. in the par. of Nettlestead, hund. of Twyford and lathe of Aylesford, in the co. of Kent, adjoining East Barming. It is on the north bank of the river Medway, and was once a separate parish. The living is consolidated with the rectory of Nettlestead.

BARMOOR, a tnshp. in the par. of Lowick, ward of Glendale, in the co. of Northumberland, 8 miles to the N. of Wooler. Here was the rendezvous of the Lords Marchers, in 1417, with a powerful force, before which the Scots retired. Flodden Field is not far from Barmoor. The principal seat is Barmoor Castle.

BARMORE, a vil. in the hund. of Desborough, in the co. of Buckingham, 3 miles to the W. of Marlow.

BARMOUTH, or ABERMAWDDOCH, a tnshp. and seaport in the par. of Llanaber, hund. of Ardudwy, in the co. of Merioneth, North Wales, 10 miles to the W. of Dolgelly, and 222 miles from London. It is seated on the coast of Cardigan Bay, on the north bank of the river Maw (or Mawddoch). Lofty hills shelter it on the north and east sides. The town is built in an irregular and picturesque manner at the base and up the slope of the bare rock. For several miles northward the beach is a fine sand, and the views are magnificent over the bay, the coast of Carnarvonshire, and the Snowdon range. The neighbourhood abounds in fine scenery. About 10 miles to the N., along the coast, is Harlech Castle. Dolgelley is 10 miles to the E. The road to the latter passes along the mountain side (which rises from the river), and afterwards through a less elevated country, embracing prospects of wonderful grandeur and endless variety. Cader Idris is seen rising above the mountains to the south of Dolgelly. Barmouth attracts many visitors as a watering-place, and contains a good hotel, lodging-houses, baths, and other accommodations. The living is a cur. annexed to the rect. of Llanaber. There is a chapel of ease, an elegant cruciform building in the perpendicular style. The Independents, and Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. The harbour is subordinate to Carnarvon, and is made rather dangerous by a bar across the entrance to it. The vessels belonging to it are chiefly engaged in a small export and import trade along the coast. There is a ferry across the entrance of the harbour, where a small low island, called Ynys-y-Brawd, divides it into two channels. Ship-building is carried on in the town, and there are large tanneries. An extensive peat ground in the neighbourhood yields abundance of fuel, which is conveyed by canal to the Maw, and along the river to Barmouth and Dolgelly. The sea has gained on the coast, and now covers a considerable tract of ground, near the town, which was formerly fertile and cultivated. Markets are held twice a week—on Tuesday and Friday. The fairs are on Shrove Monday, Whit Monday, the 7th October, and the 21st November.

An ancient anuscript of the Gospels in the Irish language was scovered in a cave here in 1790. The living is a rect. ited with that of Kilfithmone, in the dioc. of Cashel, nly, Waterford, and Lismore.

BARNARD CASTLE, a parochial chplry. and market wn in the par. of Gainford, south-western div. of e ward of Darlington, in the co. palatine of Durham, miles to the S.W. of Durham, and 246 miles from ndon. It is a station on the Stockton and Darlington ilway, and is situated on the edge of Yorkshire. The plry. comprises the tnshps. of Barnard Castle, Mar- od, Streatlam with Stainton, and Westwick. Barnard stle proper is situated on a hill which rises sharply m the north bank of the river Tees. The river ws with a rapid current, nearly round the town, tween rocky wooded banks, giving a picturesque pearance to the neighbourhood, which is rich in wild d striking scenery. The town has taken its name, chaps also its origin, from the castle founded soon er the Conquest by Bernard Balliol, a Norman noble, n of Guy Balliol, a follower of the Conqueror, and cestor of the Scottish kings. It was the birthplace John Balliol, the competitor with Robert Bruce. In his time the lordship was forfeited to the crown, and was afterwards conferred by Edward I. on the Earl of Warwick. By the marriage of Richard III. with Anne Neville, the daughter of the kingmaker, it became again the possession of the crown. The town and castle still bear many figures of the boar, the cognizance of Richard III. The manor, which was originally included in the large district called Marwood, granted by William I. to Guy Balliol, is now held by the Duke of Cleveland, having been purchased, with the castle and surrounding domain, by one of his ancestors. During the Civil War in the reign of Charles I., this castle was garrisoned for the king, but was besieged and taken by Cromwell. The fine ruins of this feudal fortress, which once stood so "stately upon Tees," occupying the summit of a lofty and precipitous rock at the foot of which the river rushes on, cover a space of nearly seven acres. Sheep feed within the outer area, and fruit-trees flourish in the inner area, which was partly moated. Rich masses of ivy beautify parts of the ruins.—Barnard Castle is a well-built town, the houses being mostly of stone. It is about a mile in length, and is situated on the southern slope of a hill, descending steeply to the river Tees. The main street consists of the Cattle Market, Horse Market, and Market-place, at the southern extremity of which last stands the townhall, nearly in the middle of the street; opposite to this is Newgate-street, stretching to the east, and joining the Westwick road. To the south of the main street are Thorngate and Bridgegate streets, the latter forming the only road into the town from the south. The principal branches of industry are the manufacture of carpets and thread, plaids and hats. A fine leather is also prepared here. There is a considerable trade in corn, the corn market being one of the most important in the northern counties. The market cross, or townhall, was built in 1747, and is an octangular edifice of stone; around the basement story is a piazza, inclosed with an iron railing, and in the upper story the magistrates were accustomed until recently to hold their meetings for the transaction of the town business. The bridge which connects Barnard Castle with the village of Startforth, on the Yorkshire side of the Tees, consists of two strong groined arches, that on the Durham side being a little the highest.—The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Durham, of the val. of £224, in the gift of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is cruciform, with an embattled tower, partly of Norman, but chiefly of various styles of English architecture. A spire, which formerly surmounted the tower, having become insecure, was taken down at the commencement of the present century. In the chancel is a curious old tomb. The register dates from 1609. The Independents, Unitarians, Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels here. Of the charitable endowments, the principal is that of the ancient hospital dedicated to St. John, founded by John Balliol in 1229.—There is a mechanics' institute, a dispensary, a savings-bank, and two National schools, one of which is supported partly by a small endowment, and an infant school.—Barnard Castle is the seat of a Poor-law Union, a Board of Health, and a County Court district. Polling for the south division of the county takes place here, and petty sessions are held on the last Wednesday of every month. It is also the head-quarters of the county militia. The Union poorhouse, a good stone building, erected in 1838 at a cost of £2,500, is situated in the town, and will accommodate 138 inmates.—The Duke of Cleveland takes the titles of Viscount and Baron Barnard from this place, and holds his court-baron in October every year. William Hutchinson, the county historian, was born here in 1732. There is a chalybeate spring two miles from the town. The market for provisions and corn is held on Wednesday, and fortnightly markets for cattle on alternate Wednesdays. Fairs are held on Easter Monday and Whit-Wednesday for pedlery and fancy goods, and on the Eve and Day of St. Mary Magdalene for horses, cattle, and sheep.

It is on the border of Lincolnshire, on the banks of the river Witham. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £184, in the patron. of the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The tithes are commuted at £220, and the great tithes at £70, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners being impropriators. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is in the early Saxon style, with old carved oak fittings. There is a National school, built in 1850, and a Wesleyan chapel.

BARNBY-MOOR, a tnshp. in the par. of Blyth, wap. of Bassetlaw, in the co. of Nottingham, 3 miles from East Retford. It includes the hmlt. of Bilby.

BARNBY-ON-DON, a par. in the southern div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the N.E. of Doncaster, its post town. It is a station on the South Yorkshire railway. Thorp-in-Balne is a tnshp. of this par. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £115, in the patron. of J. N. Newsome, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The charitable endowments amount to £59. They consist chiefly of the Countess of Sutherland's bequest for the benefit of the poor, and of endowments of a free school. The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

BARNES, a par. in the western div. of the hund. of Brixton, in the co. of Surrey, about 1 mile from Mortlake, and 5 miles to the S.W. of London. It is a station on the Richmond railway. A loop line crosses the river by an iron bridge and connects this station with the Windsor railway at Hounslow. It is pleasantly situated on the Thames, along the bank of which is a handsome terrace. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of London, of the val. of £375, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The church, one of the most ancient in the vicinity of London, is built of flint and freestone in the early English style of architecture, with a brick tower of more recent date. It is dedicated to St. Mary. There is also a small proprietary chapel, known as Castlenau Chapel, belonging to Major Boileau, proprietor of the estate adjoining. Edward Rose, who died in 1653, bequeathed an acre of land for the benefit of the poor, still called "Roseacre," part of which the railway company have purchased, and it now yields about £16 a-year. The condition was annexed that a monument to his memory should be kept in repair, and rose-trees be kept upon his grave; these may be seen on the south side of the church. There is a small endowment for education, and some other charities. The manor was granted by King Athelstane to the canons of St. Paul's, and it has continued in their possession ever since. This village is mentioned by the name of Barne in Domesday Book. It has interesting associations with many distinguished men. Barn Elms, the manor-house, was once the seat of the Walsinghams, who several times entertained Queen Elizabeth there. The poet Cowley was a resident there. It was the seat of the bookseller, Jacob Tonson, secretary of the famous "Kit-Cat Club," who formed a gallery of the portraits of the members of the club, painted by Sir Godfrey Kneller. Handel and Fielding lived in this village. Near the village is Barnes Priory, a modern residence.

BARNES, WEST, a hmlt. in the hund. of Kingston, in the co. of Surrey.

BARNESLEY, LOWER, a hmlt. in the manor of Kingston Lacy, in the par. of Wimborne Minster, and hund. of Badbury, in Dorsetshire, 2 miles from Wimborne Minster.

BARNET, CHIPPING, or HIGH BARNET, a par. and market town, chiefly in the hund. of Cashio, in the co. of Hertford, but partly in the hund. of Edmonton, in the co. of Middlesex, 11 miles to the N.E. of London, and 8 S. from Hatfield. It is a station on the Great Northern railway. It is situated on a lofty hill, on the great coach road to the north, and was formerly among the possessions of the abbey of St. Alban's. The abbots obtained from Henry II. the privilege of holding a market here, from which circumstance the place took the name of Chipping, i.e., cheaping or marketing. Within a mile of the town is Gladesmore Heath, the field of the decisive battle of Barnet in 1471, in which the Lancastrians were defeated and the great Earl of Warwick slain, Edward IV. being thenceforth seated on the throne. An obelisk in commemoration of the battle was erected in 1740. A previous battle had also been fought here in 1461. The situation of the town, which consists chiefly of one long street, is pleasant and healthy. There are a police station, gas-works, brewery, and brickfields. Many gentry reside in the neighbourhood, and a race-course is formed on Barnet Common, where the annual races take place on the 7th September. The living is a perpet. cur.* annexed to the rect. of East Barnet, in the dioc. of Rochester. The church, built by John Moote, one of the abbots of St. Alban's, about 1400, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. It is a very old building, with square embattled tower and six bells, and contains some monuments of the Ravenscrofts. There is also a church at Hadley, which forms part of the town of Barnet, and a new church on Barnet Common. The Independents have a chapel here. There is a grammar school, partly free, founded by Queen Elizabeth, and subsequently endowed by several benefactors; its revenue is about £30. In 1679 James Ravenscroft founded a hospital for six poor women, the endowment of which was augmented by a bequest of Mrs. Barcock in 1731; it has a revenue of £273. There are also six almshouses for widows, and six for aged persons, liberally endowed. The entire mount of the parochial charities is £870. Barnet is the eat of a Poor-law Union, and of a County Court district, nd petty sessions are held here. There is a mineral pring on Barnet Common, which was once much re-orted to, and for the care of which a small annual sum as bequeathed by Alderman Owen. The market is on Monday; but now obsolete. Fairs are held on the 8th, th, and 10th of April, and the 4th of September and hree following days. At these fairs there is a large ale of horses and cattle, many beasts being sent up rom Scotland.

BARNET, CHRIST CHURCH, a chplry. and considerable vil. in the par. of South Mimms, in the co. of Middlesex. Barnet is its post town. The living is a perpet. cur. in the gift of the Bishop of London.

BARNET, EAST, a par. and small vil. in the hund. of Cashio, in the co. of Hertford, 2 miles to the S.E. of Chipping Barnet, and 10 from London. The Great Northern railway passes close to the village. It formerly belonged to the abbey of St. Alban's, and the abbots occasionally resided in a house at Monk's Frith Garden, hill near the church. The village is beautifully situated in a pleasant country, about one mile east of the high road to St. Alban's, and the houses are well built. It is bounded on the S. by Southgate, and on the E. by Enfield Chase, which extends from Enfield in Middlesex. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val., with the cur. of Chipping Barnet, of £1,042, in the gift of the crown. The church, which is very ancient, is dedicated to St. Mary. There is also a chapel of ease recently erected at Arkley, and a National school for girls. There are mineral springs in the vicinity of the village, which, although so near the metropolis, is remarkably quiet and retired, there being no traffic through, or conveyance from, it. Oak Hill is a fine mansion, situated on an eminence.

BARNET, FRYERN, a par. and small vil. in the Finsbury div. of the hund. of Ossulstone, in the co. of Middlesex, 8 miles to the N. of London, and a short distance from the Colney Hatch and Southgate station, on the Great Northern railway. It lies in a pleasant district on the east side of Finchley Common, about 1½ mile from Whetstone, and may also be approached by the green lanes from Ball's Pond and Hornsey. It includes the hmlt. of Colney Hatch, with the newly-erected Middlesex Pauper Lunatic Asylum, and part of the hmlt. of Whetstone. The manor of Fryern Barnet originally belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem. The ancient manor-house, which was taken down many years ago, is conjectured to have been the occasional seat of the abbots. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of London, and the val. of £255, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The church, a small Norman edifice, is dedicated to St. James. It was enlarged and almost rebuilt in 1853, and now holds 460 persons. National and infant schools have been built adjacent to it. A school church has also been built near the station at Colney Hatch. There are almshouses for 12 persons, founded in 1612 by Lawrence Campe, and endowed with £7 a year. Fryern Barnet was the birthplace (1732) of Walker, author of the "English Pronouncing Dictionary."

BARNETBY-LE-WOLD, or BARNET-BY-THE-WOLD, a par. in the southern div. of the wap. of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles from the N.E. of Brigg. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BARNEY, or BERNEY, a par. in the northern div. of the hund. of Greenhoe, in the co. of Norfolk, 6 miles from the N.E. of Fakenham railway station, and 24 from Norwich. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £129, in the patron. of Lord Hastings, impropriator. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an old building with a tower; it contains a very handsome font. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. The vicarage was rebuilt in 1848 by the present incumbent. The vicarial rent-charge is commuted at £108 12*s.* 6*d.*, with 38 acres of glebe.

BARNFIELD, EAST, one of the 16 hunds. or subdivisions of the lathe of Scray, in the co. of Kent, situated in the southern part of the county, on the edge of Sussex, and bounded on the N. and E. by the hund. of Kingshamford, on the S. by the hunds. of Eastry, and Bridge and Petham, and on the W. by the hunds. of Downhamford and Preston. It contains the larger part of the par. of Hawkhurst, and has an area of about 6,500 acres.

BARNHAM, or BARNHAM ST. GREGORY, a par. in the hund. of Blackbourn, in the co. of Suffolk, 2½ miles to the S. of Thetford, its post town and nearest railway station, and 10 N. of Bury St. Edmund's. The village, which consists of a number of scattered houses, is situated on the Little Ouse, near which is a windmill for corn, and there is a large tract of sandy heath in the parish. The living is a rect., consolidated with that of Euston, in the dioc. of Ely, and at present held by the Hon. and Rev. Augustus F. Phipps, non-resident. The church, dedicated to St. Gregory, is a small, neat building with a tower. There is a free school chiefly supported by the Duke of Grafton, who is lord of the manor and owner of the parish. This parish comprises the old par. of Barnham St. Martin's, the church of which has long been in ruins. Its old square tower, covered with ivy, is a romantic feature in the prospect. Several tumuli are found in the neighbourhood, about one mile and a quarter to the north of the town, which are supposed to mark the spot where a great battle was fought in the Saxon times between King Edmund and the Danes.

BARNHAM, a par. in the hund. of Avisford, rape of Arundel, in the co. of Sussex, 4½ miles to the S.W. of Arundel, and 7 E. of Chichester, its post town. It is situated near the coast, not far from the South Coast railway, which skirts the northern boundary of the parish, and has a station at Woodgate, about one mile distant from the village of Barnham. The Portsmouth and Arundel canal intersects the parish. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £67, in the gift of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

BARNHAM-BROOM, a par. in the hund. of Forehoe, in the co. of Norfolk, 10 miles to the W. of Norwich, and 5 N.W. from Wymondham, its post town. It lies on the banks of the river Yare, about 3 miles to the E. of Hardingham railway station. The living is a rect.* united with that of Bixton (an ancient parish now merged in this) to the vic.* of Kimberley, and of the val. of £600, in the patron. of Lord Wodehouse, who is lord of the manor and chief landowner. The church, dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, is a very neat building, with square embattled tower. It contains a handsome screen, and was repaired in 1851, when a new organ was presented by Lady Wodehouse. The register dates from 1630. There is a small endowment for education, and a National school, erected in 1841, for the education of 100 children. Barnham Hall is a seat of Lord Wodehouse.

BARNSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Silkstone, wap. of Staincross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 33 miles to the S.W. of York, and 185 miles from London by railway. It is a station on the Midland, Manchester and Lincolnshire, Lancashire and Yorkshire, and South Yorkshire railways, and is connected by a canal with the river Calder near Wakefield, and by the Dearne and Dove canal with the river Don, at Swinton. It is the seat of an extensive linen manufacture, and the centre of a rich and important mining district. Its staple trade was formerly wire-drawing, which had been carried on from the reign of James I. The wire supplied from the works here was considered the best in the kingdom, but its production has now almost ceased. The linen manufacture was introduced about the end of the last century, and has risen to great importance, above 2,000 hands being employed in its various branches. The fabrics of its looms are linen cloth, damasks and drills, ducks, diapers, &c. There are extensive iron foundries, dye-works and bleaching-grounds, and many coal mines. Freestone is abundant in the neighbourhood, and most of the houses in the town are built of stone. The town stands on a hill, and used to be called Bleak Barnsley. The streets are narrow; but paved and lighted. There are three churches. The old parish church, dedicated to St. Mary, has been rebuilt since 1850; the extension of the mines having rendered it no longer secure. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Ripon, of the val. of £225, in the patron. of the bishop. Two new district churches have been erected—one dedicated to St. George, with a perpet. cur., val. £150, in the gift of the bishop; the other dedicated to St. John, a cur., val. £150, in the alternate gift of the crown and the Bishop of Ripon. There are chapels belonging to the Society of Friends, Roman Catholics, Independents, Baptists, and four to the Wesleyans. There is a free grammar school, which was founded by Thomas Keresforth in 1665, with a revenue of about £17 per annum. The National school was erected in 1813 by the trustees of Ellis's charity, founded in 1711, for the promotion of education. Bosville's charity was established in 1558 for the benefit of the town, and produces a revenue of £180. The total value of the charitable endowments of Barnsley is £306. Two scientific institutions are established. The corn market is on Wednesday, and a provision market on Saturday. There is a large market use. Barnsley is the seat of a County Court district, d a polling-place for the Riding. Near the town, on e north side, are the ruins of Monk Bretton priory. unded in the reign of Henry II., now the property of r C. Wood, Bart. Wentworth Castle is about 2 miles m Barnsley. Fairs for the sale of cattle, &c., are ld on the last Wednesday in February, the 13th May, d the 11th October.

BARNSLEY, OLD, a hmlt. in the par. of Silkstone, p. of Staincross, in the West Riding of the co. of rk, near Barnsley.

BARNSTAPLE, a par., borough, seaport, and market wn, in the hund. of Braunton, in the co. of Devon, 39 iles to the N.W. of Exeter, and 192 miles from Lon- n by road, or 233 by railway. It is a station on the rth Devon railway, which passes through Exeter. It seated near the northern extremity of the county, in a autiful district on the north bank of the river Taw, 6 iles from the coast of the fine bay of Barnstaple, into ich that river falls. It is a place of considerable tiquity, and is said to have been a borough and an portant trading place in the Saxon age. Whether ng Athelstan did really erect a fortress here, and grant harter under which the town sent two representatives parliament, remains uncertain. At the Conquest the nor was given to Joel, of Totnes, who probably nded or rebuilt a castle here. By him was also nded a Cluniac monastery, the value of which at the ssolution was £130. The trade of the town was con- derable in the reign of Henry I., at which time it s first incorporated. It is not known when it was nstituted a market town. In 1588 three vessels were uipped here to join the fleet against the Armada. In e civil war of the 17th century the town, which hered to the parliament, was the scene of several con- ts, and was finally taken by Fairfax, in 1646.—Barn- aple is a pleasant, well-built, and thriving town, and s of late years been much extended and improved by owing back the old shop fronts in the High-street, and moving the vegetable market, which was formerly held the open High-street. The streets are regular, well- ved, and lighted with gas. There is a quay, a quarter a mile in length, forming a fine promenade along the st bank of the Taw, which is here broad and winding. fine old bridge of 16 arches crosses the river, sup- sed to have been erected in the 12th century. A foot- y has been added on each side of the bridge, which ntributes to its handsome appearance. Several bequests ve been left in trust for its repair. The manufactures baize and coarse woollens was formerly the staple de of the town; but it has, in modern times, fallen , though there is still one large woollen factory at wleigh, which gives employment to a large number of e inhabitants. The chief manufactures at present rried on are those of pottery and lace. There are, sides, several extensive woolstaplers, malting-houses, extensive shipbuilding establishment, bonding ware- uses, paper mills, a foundry, and several tan-yards. e general trade of the place is extensive and pros- rous. The town contains the guildhall and market- use, a large, handsome edifice, situate in High-street, here the quarter and petty sessions are held, and the unty court sits monthly; also a fruit and vegetable mar- t, recently erected at the back of the guildhall, between gh-street and Boutport-street, a theatre, assembly oms, and spacious music hall, an infirmary and dis- nsary, a prison, a custom-house, and the Union poor- use, capable of accommodating 300 inmates. The rail- y station is a neat stone edifice, situated just without e town, on the road to Bideford. A literary and scientific stitution was established in 1845; and the harmonic iety holds its meetings at the guildhall. The harbour nits only small vessels, having a bar and a great umulation of sand. It is a bonding port, with an reasing foreign trade, and many respectable mer- nts import goods from distant parts. The principal icles of export are corn, bark, wool, leather, pottery, .; and of import, timber, coal, fruit, &c. Ilfracombe a subport to Barnstaple.—The government of the borough under the Reform Act is vested in a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, under the style of the "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough and parish of Barnstaple;" the term of office for aldermen is six years, and for councillors three years—the mayor being annually chosen from the town council. The limits of the borough, which is divided into two wards, north and south, extend beyond those of the parish, and comprise part of the pars. of Pilton and Bishop's Tawton, including the important southern suburb of Newport. It has returned two members to parliament since the reign of Edward I. The borough revenue is about £1,380; and its population, according to the census of 1861, 10,738, against 11,371, in 1851, showing a decrease of 633 in the decennial period, while the number of inhabited houses has risen from 2,116 to 2,187, which would seem to show a great improvement in the social condition of the inhabitants. Barnstaple is the head of an extensive excise district, the seat of an archdeaconry in the dioc. of Exeter, of a County Court district, and a Poor-law Union. It is also the headquarters of the North Devon militia, and a polling-place for the county elections.—There are three churches. The ancient parish church is an antique Gothic structure, situated nearly in the centre of the town, and dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. The church itself has no pretensions to architectural beauty, but is very commodious, and contains a handsome stained glass window over the communion table, inserted in 1854, and a parochial library, which is kept in a room over the vestry. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, of the annual val. of £245, in the patron. of Lord Wharncliffe. Of the two new churches, one is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene; it was erected in 1847 by public subscription, with a cur. of the val. of £150, in the alternate gift of the crown and the Bishop of Exeter. The other is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and has a fine tower 133 feet high, with a cur. of the val. of £120, in the gift of the Rev. C. Haggard. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. New chapels have also been recently built for the Roman Catholics and Bible Christians. The charitable endowments of Barnstaple amount to the annual sum of £630. They comprise the following institutions:—A free grammar school, founded in 1649, by Richard Ferris, and subsequently further endowed by John Wright. Among its pupils have been the Poet Gay, Bishop Jewel, Judge Dodderidge, and Dr. Musgrave. The school-house is of considerable antiquity, having once been the chantry to the ancient monastery; its present master is the Rev. George Johnston, B.D., of Christ's College, Cambridge. A free school, called the Blue Coat schools, established in 1710 for educating and clothing 50 boys and 30 girls, which has a revenue of £120, has been recently rebuilt by subscription, with residence for the master and mistress. There are also National and infant schools; a large almshouse, with a chapel, endowed by John Penrose for 40 men and women, and having an income of £228; and other almshouses founded by Horwood, in 1658, and by Paige, in 1553. Salem Almshouse, built in 1834, by Charles Roberts, is designed for 24 poor men and women. The North Devon Infirmary, erected in 1824, is supported by subscription. There are no vestiges of the monastery; but an ancient building on the quay is supposed to have been a chantry house.—Three weekly newspapers are published at Barnstaple, the North Devon Journal, which is published on Thursday, and is considered the leading organ of this district; the North Devon Advertiser, and the Barnstaple and Bideford Times. Tuesday and Friday are the market days for the sale of corn, provisions, &c. A fish market is held daily, and a large cattle market once a month. Fairs are held in April, September, and December. The September fair is the most important, and lasts three days. It is famed for the sale of the North Devon cattle, and commences on the first Wednesday after the 19th September. Races take place occasionally in the vicinity, although there is no regular Barnstaple race-course.

t. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. with the cur. of Twyford, of £105, in the patron. of J. Moore, Esq. The church, a venerable edifice, with a battled tower, is dedicated to St. Wilfrid. There are National schools at Barrow and Twyford; the former, erected in 1843, has a small endowment. Barrow Hall is the principal seat; it is a large stuccoed mansion, built in 1809 by the late John Beaumont, Esq. Henry Le Vœux, Esq., is lord of the manor.

BARROW, SOUTH, a par. in the hund. of Catsash, in the co. of Somerset, 6 miles to the N.E. of Ilchester. Castle Carey is its post town. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £80, in the patron. of Mrs. Toogood. The church is dedicated to St Peter.

BARROW, THE, a river, in the south-east of Ireland, which rises in the Slievebloom mountains on the borders of King's County and Queen's County, and after an easterly course, of about 15 miles, runs southward to the sea at Waterford harbour. Its entire length is about 100 miles, and between Portarlington and Waterford it has a fall of about 227 feet. It forms, for a few miles, the boundary of King's County and Queen's County; then that of the latter and Kildare; crosses a corner of Kildare, and separates Queen's County from Wicklow; crosses Carlow, then forms the boundary of that county and Kilkenny, and finally that of Kilkenny and Wexford. In its course the Barrow passes the towns of Portarlington, Monasterevan, Athy, Carlow, New Ross, and several others. Near Monasterevan it receives the waters of the Little Barrow; above New Ross it is joined by the river Nore, and near Waterford by the river Suir. It has several smaller tributaries. It is navigable for large vessels up to New Ross, and for barges as far as Athy. At Athy a branch of the Grand canal connects it with Dublin. The name of this river is from a Celtic word signifying "boundary."

BARROWBY, a par. in the wap. of Winnibriggs and Threo, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 2 miles to the W. of Grantham, its post town. An abbey was founded here at the close of the 12th century, which flourished till the Dissolution, when its val. was £115. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £1,200, in the patron. of the Duke of Devonshire. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BARROWFORD COLNE, or BARROWFORD BOTH, a tnshp. in the par. of Whalley, and hund. of Blackburn, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles to the W. of Colne, its post town. The East Lancashire railway passes through the tnshp., and the Leeds canal near it. Most of the workpeople are employed in the cotton factories. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, of the val. of £150, in the patron. of Hulme's Trustees. The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

BARROWMOUNT, a vil. in the par. and bar. of Gowran, in the co. of Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 1 mile from Goresbridge. It is seated on the west bank of the river Barrow, near Gowran Castle, the seat of Viscount Clifden. In the vicinity are ruins of a monastery, and an ancient circle of stones. Fairs are held on the 3th April, the 15th June, the 1st August, and the 15th October.

BARRY, a par. in the hund. of Dinas-Powis, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 9 miles to the S.W. of Cardiff, its post town. It is situated in a pleasant country, fertile and well wooded, on the north coast of the Bristol Channel, and includes the small island of the same name lying opposite to it. The living is a rect. united with that of Porthkerry, in the dioc. of Llandaff. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Here are some remains of a castle.

BARRY ISLAND, a small island in the par. of Barry, hund. of Dinas-Powis, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales. It is in the Bristol Channel, opposite to the vil. of the same name, and is connected with the shore by a narrow bank left dry at low water. It is let as a farm; but a large part of it is a warren abounding in rabbits. The name of the island is said to be derived from St. Baruch, a hermit, who resided here, and was interred in a chapel, of which remains still exist. This island belonged at one period to the family of Barry or De Barri, who took their name from it, and afterwards settled in Ireland. Of this family was Giraldus Cambrensis, or De Barri, the historian and ecclesiastic of the 12th century. There is a holy well at Nell's Point, to which superstitious women resort on Holy Thursday, washing their eyes, and throwing pins into the well. The island has an area of about 300 acres.

BARRY, a vil. in the par. of Tashinny, and bar. of Shrule, in the co. of Longford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Ballymahon. The village has a small charity school and a police station. A castle formerly stood in the vicinity, of which scarcely any traces are left. Fairs are held in January, April, July, and October.

BARRYMORE BARONY, one of the 20 bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, situated near the middle of the county, and bounded on the N. by the bar. of Fermoy, on the E. by the bar. of Kinnatalloon, on the S. by Cork harbour, and on the W. by the north libs. of Cork and the bar. of Barretts. BARSHAM, a par. in the hund. and union of Wangford, in the co. of Suffolk, 2 miles to the W. of Beccles, and 4 miles E. of Bungay, its post town. It is situated in the vale on the south bank of the river Waveney. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £531, in the patron. of the Rev. A. J. Suckling, whose family have held the manor for a long period. The church, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an antique structure, with thatched roof and round tower. It contains a monumental brass of the year 1380. The rectory house is a fine old mansion, standing near the church and surrounded by 82 acres of glebe. It was once the residence of the Rev. Alfred Suckling, LL.B., author of the "History and Antiquities of Suffolk." It was here that Miss Suckling, the mother of the renowned admiral, Lord Nelson, was born. Lawrence Echard, the historian and antiquary, was also a native of this village.

BARSHAM, EAST, a par. in the hund. of Gallow, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the N. of Fakenham, its post town. The village is pleasantly seated in a deep and narrow valley, watered by a small stream which falls into the sea at Stiffkey. The Fakenham and Wells railway passes through the par., on which there is a station 3 miles from the vil. The living is a vic.* united with the rect. of Little Snoring, in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £645, in the patron. of Lord Hastings, who is also lord of the manor. His son, the Hon. and Rev. Delaval Loftus Astley, M.A., is the present vicar. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small antique structure, with a porch formed out of the remains of the tower. In the interior are monuments to the Calthorpe family. Barsham Abbey, a picturesque old manor-house, was built in 1538. It is chiefly of brick, and forms an interesting example of the architecture of the period, with its towers and turrets. The old gatehouse and other portions of the original building still remain, and there is a fine, richly moulded cluster of ten chimneys. Henry VIII., on occasion of his pilgrimage to Our Lady of Walsingham, in 1510, walked barefoot from this village to the shrine, a distance of above 2 miles.

BARTHOLOMEW'S (ST.) HOSPITAL, an ext. par. place in Estry hund., lathe of St. Augustine, in the co. of Kent, 1 mile from Sandwich. It is the site of a hospital, founded at the close of the 12th century, and subsequently endowed by Sir Henry de Sandwich. It is for the support of 16 persons, consisting of a master, brethren, and sisters, and has a revenue of £766. The old chapel contains a monument of the founder.

BARTHOLOMEW (ST.), HYDE, a par. in the suburbs of Winchester, partly within the city, and partly in the lib. of Soke, in the co. of Southampton. It is the site of Hyde abbey, a Benedictine house founded by Alfred the Great, and re-founded in 1110 by Henry I. The abbey was largely endowed, and had at the Dissolution a revenue of £876. The abbey church is still standing.

BARTHOMLEY, a par. partly in the hund. of Nantwich, in the co. palatine of Chester, and partly in the north div. of the hund. of Pirehill, in the co of Stafford, 7 miles to the E. of Nantwich. The Crewe, Stoke, and Uttoxeter section of the North Staffordshire railway passes through it. Alsager, Crewe Green, and Haslington are chplries., with their several district churches, and Batterley a tnshp. of this parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, of the val. of £824, in the gift of the Trustees of the late Lord Crewe. The church is ancient, and is dedicated to St. Bertoline. It has a Norman porch, and a carved and richly ornamented roof, put up in 1589. It contains a sculptured altar-tomb, with an effigy of Sir Robert Fitzhurst, who died in 1389, and several other monuments. The charitable endowments amount to £51, including £10, the revenue of a small school founded in 1[illegible]. The principal seat is Barthomley Hall, situated on Alsager Heath.

BARTLEY. See BISTERN, Hampshire.

BARTLEY REGIS, a tythg. in the par. of Eling, and hund. of Redbridge, in the co. of Southampton, 2 miles to the W. of Southampton. The principal seats are Bartley House and Bartley Lodge—the former a residence of Lord Vivian; the latter, of the Hon. J. Blaquiere.

BARTLEY YIELD, or BARTLEY GREEN, a vill. in the par. of Northfield, and hund. of Upper Hundred, in the co. of Worcester, 7 miles to the N.E. of Bromsgrove. Birmingham is its post town. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes near it. The living is a perpet. cur. attached to the rect. of Northfield, in the dioc. of Worcester.

BARTLOW, a par. in the hund. of Chilford, in the co. of Cambridge, 2 miles to the S.E. of Linton, its post town, 13 from Cambridge, and 8 from Audley-End railway station. It lies on the border of Essex, near it from the Great Eastern railway, which company is about to bring a new line through the parish from Haverhill to Shelford, near Cambridge, and for which they obtained an Act of Parliament in the session of 1862. It will connect the Colne Valley line with the main line from London to Yarmouth, and will pass between the smallest to the next of the hills. The village of Bartlow is in the co. of Cambridge; but the hmlt. of Bartlow, or, as it is sometimes called, Steventon End, is in the co. of Essex. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, of the val. of £259, in the patron. of R. Watkins, Esq. The church has a round tower, and contains a fresco painting of St. Christopher. It is dedicated to St. Mary. Bartlow Cottage and Bartlow House are the principal residences. Near the village are Bartlow Hills, in the parish of Ashdon, formerly supposed to be the monuments of the slain at the great battle of Assandune, in which Edmund Ironsides was defeated by Canute; but the excavations made in them in the years 1832, 1835, and 1838 distinctly prove them to be Roman works. Many curious and valuable sepulchral relics were discovered in them, which have since been lost in the fire at Easton Lodge, near Dunmow, the seat of Viscount Maynard, on whose estate the hills are situated, but a complete account of them has been preserved by the late Rokewode Gage, Esq., in vols. xxv. xxviii. of the "Archæologia."

It is situated in Westmoreland, on borders of Cumberland, near the river Eamont and lleswater lake; and contains the chplries. of Hartsop h Patterdale, and Martindale, and the tnshps. of High rton, Stockbridge with Tirrel, Low Winder, High nder, Yanwath, and several hamlets. The parish, hich is 24 miles in length, by 2 to 4 in width, includes me of the grandest scenery of the lake district. Hel- lyn overlooks it from the south-west; Patterdale and rtindale are surrounded by majestic hills, among hich are many beautiful valleys; part of Ulleswater e is within the parish, and there are fine woods, and ky chasms and waterfalls, pleasant seats, and secluded ages. The parish abounds in game, and the rivers are celebrated for their trout. Slate is quarried in Patterdale, and Barton Fell is rich in precious stones and various petrifactions. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £180, in the patron. of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, which is situated about a mile west of Stockbridge, in a charming spot near the Eamont, is dedicated to St. Michael. It has recently been repaired and greatly improved, and has monuments of the Lancasters, former proprietors in the parish, and two ancient brasses to the memory of the Dawes, of Barton Kirke. An excellent vicarage has been built by the present incumbent, the Rev. G. C. Hodgson. In addition to the parish church there are two district churches, one at Martindale and the other at Patterdale, the livings of both being perpet. curs.,* the former, val. £80, in the gift of A. W. Clarke, Esq., of Armathwaite Hall, and the latter, val. £70, in that of the Earl of Lonsdale. The parochial charities, including the revenue of the free grammar school, founded in 1649 by Dr. Langbaine, the antiquary, and Dr. Dawes, amount to £113 per annum. The ancient grammar school has been much improved of late, and a trained master appointed; it is free to all children in the parish, and is governed by the vicar and certain trustees, under government inspection. A new school has lately been erected at Yanwath for the villages of Tirril, Yanwath, and Stockbridge, and is a neat and commodious building, with a dwelling-house for the master; the scholars pay according to a graduated scale—yeomen, farmers, and labourers. There are also two Sunday-schools in the parish, one at the parish church for the upper part of the parish, and the other at the Wooden Chapel at Eamont. The parish has several remains of antiquity. Near Eamont Bridge, which was erected by general subscription in the reign of Henry VI., are King Arthur's Round Table, and Mayburgh Hill. The latter is a mound of stones enclosing a circular area, with a tall red stone near the centre. Sir Walter Scott referred to it as "Mayburgh's mound and stones of power." Barton belongs chiefly to the Earl of Lonsdale, who is proprietor of Yanwath Hall, a fine old border tower. A fair for cattle and sheep is held at the village of Pooley Bridge, in this parish, on the third Monday in September.

BARTON-MILLS, or BARTON, LITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Lackford, in the co. of Suffolk, 1 mile S. from Mildenhall, its post town, and 8 E. from Newmarket. The village is small, but there are several corn mills worked by steam and water, gunflint making, an agate powder grinding mills, besides several neat villa residences. It is situate near the border of Cambridgeshire, in a pleasant district on the banks of the river Larke, which joins the Ouse near Ely. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, of the val. of £520, in the gift of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an old stone building, and was thoroughly repaired in 1840. It contains an antique font, and a curiously carved oak pulpit. The register dates from the year 1663. There is a chapel belonging to the Baptists, erected in 1844, and a National school, built in 1845. The parochial charities amount to £14 a year. Barton Place is the principal seat. The Rev. Charles Jenkins, D.D., is lord of the manor.

BARTON-ON-HUMBER, a par. and market town in the north div. of the wap. of Yarborough, in the co. of Lincoln, 35 miles to the N. of Lincoln, and 166 miles by road from London, or 180 miles by rail. It is a station on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway. The town is seated on the south bank of the river, at the northern limit of the Wolds, and had attained considerable importance at a very early period. The so-called "Castle Dykes" are supposed to be the remains of a rampart and ditch by which it was fortified against the attacks of the Danes, who frequently made incursions into the districts on the Humber. At the Conquest it had a large and flourishing trade, for which it was chiefly indebted to its situation on the great line of communication between Hull and London. Its ferry is referred to in Domesday Book, and has existed from time immemorial. The tolls and regulations of the ferry were minutely defined in the reign of Edward III., and attempts to alter and adapt them to changed circumstances and times have met with stout resistance on the part of the inhabitants. The river here is from 2 to 3 miles in breadth. The introduction of steamboats necessarily interfered with the ancient rights and rules, and the subsequent extension of the railway system has resulted in changing the line of communication. Under the new arrangements, completed in 1849, the steam-ferry is established at New Holland, a station on the railway about 4 miles to the east of Barton. The town contains many good houses; but the streets are irregularly laid. The principal branches of industry are the corn and malt trade, brick and tile making, and the manufacture of pottery, of rope and sailcloth. There are also a large foundry, and quarries of oolite and chalk. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £250, in the gift of G. C. Uppleby, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It is a spacious edifice, erected probably in the 13th century, and has a tower of far earlier date than the body of the church. The tower, which presents on its front a mixture of round and pointed arches and windows, is an interesting specimen of Anglo-Saxon architecture. The church contains a brass of 1433, and an effigy of Lord Beaumont, who received a grant of the manor from King Henry II. There is another large and handsome church, dedicated to St. Mary, supposed to have been originally a chapel of ease. It was built in the 11th century, and is chiefly in the early English style. There are chapels belonging to the Independents, Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £250 per annum, and include the blue-coat charity, founded in 1669 by John Trippe, the produce of which is £135; a similar charity established by Magdalen George; a free school founded in 1722, and almshouses founded by Thomas Holland, in 1669, besides others. Monday is the market-day. A cattle market is held once a fortnight, and a fair on Trinity Thursday.

chire, 7 miles to the W. of Manchester, its post town. Barton Moss is a station on the Liverpool and Manchester railway. The Bridgwater canal is here carried across the Irwell on an aqueduct of three arches, the first of the kind constructed in England. It is of stone, and 4 feet in height. Here are extensive manufactories of ico and nankeen, and several collieries. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Manchester, of the val. of £150, in the patron. of the bishop, the Vicar of Eccles, and others. There are two Dissenting chapels.

BARTON-ON-THE-HEATH, a par. in the Brailes div. of the hund. of Kington, in the co. of Warwick, 5 miles to the S. of Shipston-on-Stour. Moreton-in-the-Marsh is its post town. It is situated at the southern extremity of the county, on the south side of the river Stour, and near the point of junction of the four shires of Warwick, Worcester, Gloucester, and Oxford. The spot is marked by a massive stone, called the "Four-shire Stone." The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £364, in the patron. of the President and Fellows of Trinity College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, was originally of the Norman style of architecture, but has undergone so many alterations that it is now of a mixed style. It contains an ancient carved font. Here is a fine old mansion, formerly the seat of the Overbury family, but now the property of Frederick Acton Colville, Esq.

BARTON REGIS HUNDRED, one of the 28 hunds. or subdivisions of the co. of Gloucester, situated at the south-western extremity of the county, and bounded on the N. and W. by the hund. of Henbury, on the N.E. by the hund. of Langley and Swinehead, and on the S. by Somersetshire, from which it is separated by the river Avon. It comprises the pars. of Clifton, Mangotsfield, and Stapleton. The city of Bristol, also, is locally within the hund., which extends over an area of 8,030 acres.

BARTON-SEAGRAVE, a par. in the hund. of Huxloe, in the co. of Northampton, 2 miles to the S.E. of Kettering, its post town. A castle was founded here in the reign of Edward II., by Sir Nicholas de Seagrave, of which there are no traces except the moat. The parish took the addition to its name from this family. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, of the val. of £492, and in the patron. of the Duke of Buccleuch. The church is an ancient structure, dedicated to St. Botolph, and contains monuments of John Bridges, historian of the county, who died here in 1724, and of his son. Humphrey Henchman, Bishop of London in the reign of Charles II., was born in this village, 1592. The principal residences are Barton-Seagrave Hall and Barton Lodge.

BARTON-STACEY, a hund. and par. (co-extensive with each other), in the Andover div. of the co. of Southampton, 5¼ miles to the S.E. of Andover, 8 N. from Winchester, and 5 S.W. from Whitchurch railway station. Stockbridge is its post town. It includes the tythgs. of Bransbury, Drayton, and Newton Stacey. It is situated on the ancient Roman road from Winchester to Marlborough. At Bransbury are traces of a camp, and in the neighbourhood are some ancient barrows. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, of the val. of £266, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a fine specimen of early English architecture; it is built in the form of a cross, and has a perpendicular tower containing a peal of six bells. There is a chapel belonging to the Methodists, and a National school; also an endowment of about £40 a year, bequeathed by Dorothy and Elizabeth Wright, which is applied to the support of a free school, and other charitable purposes. A fair is held in the village on the 31st July.

BARTON-STAFFORD, a vil. in the hund. of North Tawton with Winkleigh, in the co. of Devon, 7 miles from Torrington.

BARTON-STEEPLE, a par. in the hund. of Wootton, in the co. of Oxford, 5 miles to the N. of Woodstock. It is watered by a small stream, a branch of the Evenlode, and contains the hmlts. of Middle Barton and Barton-Seswells. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, of the val. of £112, in the patron. of the Duke of Marlborough and H. Hall, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains monuments of the Dormers. The manor-house, erected in 1524, by John Dormer, is an interesting example of Tudor architecture. One of its spacious upper apartments is adorned with frescoes. The village is a meet for the Heythorpe hounds.

BARTON-TURF, a par. in the hund. of Tunstead, in the co. of Norfolk, 4 miles from Cottishall, its post town, 6 miles to the S. of North Walsham, and 11 N.E. from Norwich. The navigable river Ant passes through the parish, and expands in one place into a fine sheet of water. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. with the rect. of Irstead, of £360, in the gift of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a fine building with lofty tower, situated near the centre of the parish. The poor's allotment land is about 30 acres. Sir J. H. Preston is lord of the manor.

BARTON-UNDER-NEEDWOOD, a tnshp. and chplry. in the par. of Tatenhill, northern div. of the hund. of Offlow, in the co. of Stafford, 5 miles to the S.W. of Burton-on-Trent, its post town, and 8 N.E. from Lichfield. It is situated near the west bank of the river Trent, which here divides the counties of Derby and Stafford. The Birmingham and Derby railway and the Grand Trunk canal pass through the parish, the former having a station at Barton and Walton, about one mile east of the village. Barton lies within the limits of the ancient forest of Needwood, and constitutes one of the five wards into which it was divided on being enclosed. The land is extremely fertile, principally pasture and meadow land, in a high state of cultivation, studded with numerous farm-houses. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £135, in the patron. of the Dean of Lichfield. The church, which was built in 1528 by John Taylor, a native of Barton, is in the perpendicular style, with a large square tower and six bells. It is dedicated to St. James. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. There is a free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1593 by Thomas Russell, with a revenue of about £50 per annum, in the patron. of the Drapers' Company. A school for girls was also erected here in 1831, and endowed with canal shares, formerly producing £20 per annum, but now depreciated about £5 per annum. There are other charitable endowments, amounting to about £50. Barton is in the honour of Tutbury, Duchy of Lancaster, and in the County Court district of Burton-on-Trent. Fairs are held on the 3rd May and the 28th November for cattle. In the neighbourhood of the village are several very handsome villas; among others, Silver Hill, the residence of C. BASCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Pimhill, in the co. of Salop, 7½ miles to the N.W. of Shrewsbury, its post town. It is a station on the Chester and Shrewsbury railway. The Ellesmere canal passes through the parish, which contains the chplry. of Little Ness and numerous tnshps. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. of £205, with 14 acres of glebe land in Baschurch, and 32 acres in Little Ness, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an old stone structure. Besides the parish church there is a district church at West Felton. Lillingfield, the living of which is a perpet. cur.,* val. £210, in the patron. of Miss C. Barrett. The parish has the benefit of an endowment by Eleanor Harris in 17— for the education and clothing of poor children, the yearly produce of which is now about £324. There are other small charities. The par. comprises an area of about 8,273 acres, exclusive of Little Ness, chiefly the property of Rowland Hunt, Esq., who is lord of the manor.

BASCOTE, a hmlt. in the par. of Long Itchington, hund. of Knightlow, in the co. of Warwick, 2 miles to the N. of Southam.

BASFORD, a tnshp. in the par. of Wybunbury, and hund. of Nantwich, in the co. palatine of Chester, 3 miles to the E. of Nantwich. It is a station on the London and North-Western railway, about 3 miles from Crewe.

BASFORD, a town and par. in the wap. of Broxtow, in the co. of Nottingham, 32 miles to the N.W. of Nottingham, and 132 from London. It is a station on the Nottingham and Mansfield branch of the Midland railway. The parish is situated in a pleasant district on the banks of the river Leen, and comprises the town of Basford, with the chplries. of New Basford and Carrington. The latter now forms a suburb of Nottingham, and has its separate ecclesiastical establishment. Basford is a Poor-law Union, and is said to be built on the site of a Roman station. The manufactures of lace and cotton hose are carried on here extensively. There are several bleaching and dyeing establishments, cotton factories, brickfields, and corn-mills. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £280, with 146 acres of glebe land, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Leodigarius, is a fine old building. At New Basford, which is situated about half a mile to the south of the old town, is the district church, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £130, in the alternate patron. of the crown and the Bishop of Lincoln. The General and Scotch Baptists, and Methodists of several denominations, have chapels in the town. There is a free school, erected in 1845 on land given by the Duke of Newcastle, who is lord of the manor, and several denominational schools attached to the chapels.

BASFORD, a tnshp. in the par. of Cheddleton, hund. of Totmonslow, in the co. of Stafford, 4 miles to the S. o Leek. It lies near the Uttoxeter canal and the river Churnet, a branch of the Dove. Basford Hall is the principal mansion.

BASHALL-EAVES, a tnshp. in the par. of Mitton, western div. of the wap. of Staincliffe and Ewcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the W. of Clitheroe. It is situated on the confines of Lancashire, and was at an early period the seat of the Talbots and Lacys.

BASILDON, a chplry. in the par. of Laindon, and hund. of Barstable, in the co. of Essex, 4 miles to the S. of Billericay. The living is a rect., united with that of Laindon, in the dioc. of Rochester. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

BASILDON, or BASSILDON, a par. in the hund. of Bereton, in the co. of Berks, 7 miles to the N.W. of Reading. It is pleasantly situated on the south-west bank of the river Thames, on the Great Western railway. Two churches were in existence here at the period of the Norman Conquest, and the privilege of a market was granted to the town by Edward II. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of London, of the val., with the chap. of Ashampstead, which is annexed to it, of £255, in the patron. of Sir F. W. Sykes, Bart., and C. Simeon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There is a school with a small endowment. Basildon Park, about 3 miles in circuit, and containing much beautiful scenery, is the seat of the Sykes family.

BASING, or OLD BASING, a par. and considerable village in the hund., div., Union, and County Court district of Basingstoke, in the co. of Southampton, 2 miles to the N.E. of Basingstoke, and 44 miles from London by the South Western railway, which, as well as the Berks and Hants railway, passes through the parish. It is situated on the river Loddon and the Basingstoke canal. This place was the scene of the victory gained by the Danes, in 871, over Ethelred I. and Alfred. At the Norman Conquest it was the head of the numerous lordships given by the Conqueror to Hugh de Port, from whom the Paulets are descended. Basing Castle was rebuilt by Sir William Paulet, treasurer of the household to Henry VIII., and first Marquis of Winchester, who had the honour of receiving Queen Elizabeth there in 1560. The queen was again a guest at the castle in 1591. The siege and defence of Basing House forms one of the most striking and memorable episodes of the civil war in the reign of Charles I. It was held for the King by John, the fifth marquis, and bravely defended against the attacks of the parliamentary forces for above two years, from August, 1643, to October, 1645. It was then stormed by Cromwell and burnt to the ground. The words, Aimez loyaulté, which, by order of the marquis, were cut on every window, have become the family motto. Of the magnificent fortress, which, with its outworks, covered above 14 acres, nothing remains but a gatehouse and a fragment of the wall. The personal property destroyed with the castle was estimated at £200,000, equal to £1,000,000 in these days. The noble marquis lived till the Restoration, but received no recompense for his losses. During the latter part of his life he resided at Englefield, in Berkshire, and was buried in the parish church, where the following epitaph, from the pen of Dryden, is inscribed to his memory:—

"He who in impious times undaunted stood,
And 'midst rebellion durst be just and good—
Whose arms asserted, and whose sufferings more
Confirmed the cause for which he fought before—Rests here:—rewarded by a heavenly Prince
For what his earthly could not recompense.
Pray, reader, that such times no more appear;
Or, if they happen, learn true honour here.
Mark of this age's faith and loyalty,
Which, to preserve them, Heaven confined in thee,
Few subjects could a king like thine deserve,
And fewer such a king so well could serve.
Blest king, blest subject, whose exalted state
By sufferings rose, and gave the law to fate.
Such souls are rare; but mighty patterns given
To earth, and meant for ornaments to Heaven."

Nor was it only by the Cavaliers that the marquis was loved and honoured, for while Dryden thus sings in praise of his loyalty and truth, Milton, the first of epic poets, and Latin secretary to the Commonwealth, no less eloquently extols the home virtues and loveliness of his countess, Jane, the accomplished daughter of Lord Savage, in the epitaph which he wrote on occasion of her dying in her confinement:—

"Summers three times eight, save one,
She had told: alas! too soon,
After so short a time of breath,
To house with darkness and with death.
* * * * *
Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quietness ever have."

The site of the castle is now crossed by the canal. The living of Basing is a vic., united with that of Basingstoke, in the dioc. of Winchester. The church, an ancient and spacious edifice, contains several monuments of the Paulets, and is dedicated to St. Mary. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £51 per annum. Hackwood Hall, about 2 miles from Basing, is the seat of Lord Westbury, and belongs to Lord Bolton, the present representative of the Paulet family.

BASINGSTOKE HUNDRED, one of the 48 hunds. or subdivisions of the co. of Southampton, situated in the northern div. of the co., and bounded on the N. by the hund. of Holdshott, on the E. by those of Holdshott and Odiham, on the S. by the hund. of Bermondspit, and on the W. by the hunds. of Overton and Chuteley. It contains the following pars.:—In the upper part of the hund., Basing, Cliddesden, Eastrop, Maplederwell, Nately-Scures, Nately Upper, Newnham, Tunworth, and Winslade; and in the lower part, Bramley, Pamber, Sherborne St. John, Sherborne Monk, Sherfield-on-Loddon, Wootton St. Lawrence, and Worting. The hund. extends over an area of 26,330 acres.

BASINGSTOKE-INFRA-HUNDRED, one of the 48 hunds. or subdivisions of the co. of Southampton, situated in the northern div. of the co., and wholly surrounded by the hund. of Basingstoke. It contains the par. of Basingstoke and part of Basing, and has an area of 3,970 acres.

BASINGSTOKE, a par., market-town, and municipal borough, in the hund. of Basingstoke-Infra-Hundred, in the co. of Southampton, 19 miles to the N.E. of Winchester, 46 miles to the S.W. of London by the old road, and 48 by railway. It is a station on the London and South-Western railway, and is connected with the Great Western railway by a branch line from Reading. Basingstoke is a very ancient town, being referred to in Domesday Book as a royal manor, which had never paid tax or been distributed into hides, with the privilege of a market worth 30*s*. It is there named Basingtoches. The conjecture that at an earlier period the town was of inferior rank to Basing is founded on the addition "stoke," signifying hamlet. It is seated in a fertile and beautiful country, with fine woods and rich pasture land, near the source of the river Loddon, which flows by the town, and is called the Town Brook. The houses are well built, the streets paved and lighted with gas, and there is a good supply of water. The trade of the town has long been extensive and flourishing, owing, in great measure, to its situation at the junction of four railways, and the meeting of five important roads. The woollen manufacture was at one time carried on here, and the place obtained a name for its druggets and shalloons; but this manufacture is almost extinct. Its chief trade now is in corn, malt, coal, and timber, the facilities for carrying on which are materially increased by its having a ready communication with London by means of the Basingstoke canal and the Berks and Hants canal, besides the South Western and Great Western railways. Here is an extensive brewery and foundry.—Basingstoke received a charter of incorporation from James I., which was confirmed by Charles I. The government of the town is now vested, under the Reform Act, in a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors. A large and handsome townhall was built in 1833, which includes a corn-market and a large hall for public meetings. By an Act passed in 1829, the market was constituted a pitched market. The revenue of the borough is about £1,800, and its population, according to the census of 1861, 4,664, against 4,263 in 1851, showing an increase of 401 in the decennial period, while the inhabited houses have risen from 892 to 938. The town returned representatives to parliament in the reigns of Edward I., Edward II., and Edward III., when, at the solicitation of the inhabitants, it is supposed, the privilege ceased. It is a polling-place for the north division of the county, the seat of a Poor-law Union, and of a County Court district. Petty sessions for the borough are held weekly, and for the county once a fortnight.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, of the val. with those of Basing and Up-Nateley, which are annexed to it, of £572, in the patron. of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church, a handsome edifice, in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a low tower at the west end, is dedicated to St. Michael. The chancel and Lady-chapel are of earlier origin than the remainder of the church, which was mostly built in the reign of Henry VIII. It is noticed as a singular circumstance, that while the south wall is entirely of stone, the north is built in alternate squares of flint and stone. The roof is of panelled oak, and the spandrils are adorned with armorial shields. The interior has been recently repaired and repewed, and galleries erected round three sides of the church. There are chapels belonging to the Society of Friends, the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, the Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The charitable endowments of the parish are of considerable amount. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Henry VIII. by Sir William Sandys, in connection with a chapel for the Guild of the Holy Ghost. The guild was dissolved in the following reign, restored by Queen Mary, and again suppressed by Cromwell. Finally, at the instance of Bishop Morley, in 1670, the estate, which had been seized by the parliament, was restored and appropriated to its present uses. The revenue of the school is about £160. The master is appointed by the lord chancellor. The mastership was once held by Thomas Warton, vicar of the parish, and father of Dr. Joseph Warton, poet and critic, and Thomas Warton, poet-laureate, both natives of Basingstoke, and pupils in this school. There is a blue-coat school for 10 boys, established and endowed by Richard Aldworth in 1646; the revenue of which is £170. Another school for 12 boys is supported by the Skinners' Company; and there are National schools for boys and girls, supported partly by endowment. Three endowed almshouses were founded in 1808 by Joseph Page, and there are several other charities, the principal of which is an endowment by Sir J. Lancaster, the Arctic navigator, for the benefit of the poor, the annual value of which is £252. There is a mechanics' institution, with a library and reading-room. Below the bridge are traces of the old hospital for poor priests, founded in the reign of Henry III., at the request of Walter de Merton, Bishop of Rochester, and founder of Merton College, Oxford. On a hill, near the railway station, are the ruins of the Holy Ghost chapel. Aubrey Camp, or Winklebury, is an ancient embankment of an irregular oval form, and about 1,100 yards in circuit; it is on the west side of the town.—Basingstoke was the birthplace of John de Basingstoke, a Greek scholar of the 13th century, Sir James Lancaster, and of the Wartons.—The canal, which is 37 miles in length, was completed in the year 1706; it connects the town with the river Wey and the Thames, and was made at a cost of £180,000. Near Odiham it is carried through a tunnel three-quarters of a mile long. It passes 29 locks, and has a total fall of 195 feet. The corn market is held on Wednesday. There is a market for provisions on Saturday. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, the Wednesday in Whitsun week, the 23rd September, and the 11th October. Annual races take place in September.

There are several quarries of limestone. Th living is a vic., forming part of the union of Ballintobe in the dioc. of Kilmore, Ardagh, and Elphin. The c church is in ruins. There are several gentlemen' seats.

BASLOW, a chplry. in the par. and union of Bake well, and hund. of High Peak, in the co. of Derby 3 miles to the N.E. of Bakewell, and 10 W. from Ches terfield railway-station. The chplry. includes the tnshp of Calver, Curbar, Froggatt, and Bubnell, which for the north-east part of the par. of Bakewell. The villag of Baslow, which is of considerable size, is pleasan seated on the banks of the river Derwent, over which an ancient stone bridge of three arches. It is about 1¼ mil to the north of Chatsworth, and on the N.E. and W a range of lofty hills, with extensive moors abounding grouse. Many of the inhabitants are employed in t mills of the Calver Cotton-Spinning Company, which situated a little lower down the river, at the villag Calver, where there is another bridge across the D went of modern construction. The living is a perp cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £115, in the patro of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated t St. James, is in the perpendicular style, with a towe surmounted by a spire. The Wesleyan Methodists ha a chapel in the village. There is a National school established in 1839 by the Duke of Rutland, who i lord of the manor. Baslow belongs to the honour Tutbury, in the Duchy of Lancaster. The charitie amount to £10 a-year. In the vicinity is Bubnell Ha a large mansion of the early part of the 17th century.

BASS, THE, a lofty and rugged island-rock of t east coast of Scotland. It is situated about 2 miles t the N. of the old castle of Tantallon, in the co. of Had dington, and in the entrance to the Frith of Forth. It form is nearly circular, and it is about a mile in circum ference. To the north it rises sharply from water great depth to a height of 420 feet, while on the sout side, facing the land, it has a gradual slope. The sub stance of the rock is greenstone and trap, and it is penetrated by a great cavern running through it from north-west to south-east. It is inaccessible except at one part on the south-east side. At that part of the rock stand the ruins of the small fort or prison. A few sheep find pasture on a small grassy tract of the island, and a whole population of sea-birds make it their summer haunt. The beautiful solan geese are the most numerous they visit no other island on the east coast of Great Britain. The minister of North Berwick, in the character of vicar of the Bass, still receives annually, according to very ancient custom, "twelve solan geese entire, with their feathers on." The schoolmaster also receives two. The Bass belonged in ancient times to a family called Lauder of the Bass. It subsequently became the property of the crown, and in 1706 was granted to Sir Hew Dalrymple, whose descendants still hold it. It is let to a keeper, who has the key of the castle, and conducts visitors to it. A deep human interest attaches to this rock since the 17th century, when Charles II. erected a state prison upon it, and made the cells of its dungeons memorable by immuring in them the persecuted Covenanters. Such was the purpose it was made to serve during the reigns of the last two Stuarts; and it acquired the name of the Bastile of Scotland. Unlike its greater prototype, which early fell before a roused and angry nation, the Bass possesses the distinction of being the last spot that held out in Great Britain for James II. The cell in which the pious Blackadder was confined is still pointed out to the visitor. There are some remains of a small chapel halfway up the slope of the rock. In this the garrison kept their ammunition. The name of St. Baldred, the apostle of East Lothian, who died early in the seventh century, is associated with several places on the coast of Haddington, and a doubtful tradition asserts that he made the Bass his residence.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small Gothic building situated at the extreme end of the village. The parish is within the division and Union of Cerne, and Dorchester County Court district.

BATCOMBE, a tythg. in the par. of Nyland, and hund. of Glaston-Twelve-Hides, in the co. of Somerset, 5 miles from Wells.

BATCOMBE, a par. in the hund. of Whitstone, in the co. of Somerset, 3 miles to the N. of Bruton. It is situated in a pleasant hilly country, and commands, from Portway and Walter's Hill, extensive and beautiful prospects. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, of the val., with the cur. of Upton-Noble, which is annexed to it, of £690, in the patron. of the Rev. J. Brown, the incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists.

BATH, a city, municipal and parliamentary borough, in the hund. of Bath Forum, in the co. of Somerset, 12 miles to the S.E. of Bristol, and 107 miles from London. It is a principal station on the Great Western railway, and is connected by a short branch line through Bradford with the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth railway. It is situated on the river Avon, and the Kennet and Avon canal. The great natural feature of the place is its mineral waters, which have been known and valued from a very remote antiquity, and from which the city has taken its name in ancient and modern times. It is needless to repeat the myths of the prehistoric age, although they have still a stone memorial in the shape of a statue of the British king Bladud, set up in 1699 in the King's Bath, and bearing an inscription to his honour. What is certain is, that Bath was an important Roman station, and was called by the Romans Aquæ Solis, or Aquæ Calidæ. Two of the principal ancient ways passed through it: the Fosse Way, which extended from the coast of Devonshire to the north coast of Lincolnshire; and the great road between London and Wales, called by the Romans the Via Julia, and by the Saxons Akeman Street. In the numerous and interesting remains which have been discovered from time to time, we have evidence that the Romans erected here a fane-temple, extensive baths, altars, &c. The walls with which the city was defended were of immense strength, and about 20 feet in height. There were four gateways, through which roads passed to neighbouring stations. For about one hundred and fifty years after the Romans withdrew from Britain, the Britons had peaceable possession of the city. Attacks were made on it by the Saxon Ella in 493, and by Cerdic in 520, without success. But in 577 it was captured, plundered, and laid in ruins. It was ultimately rebuilt, and once long regained its importance. The Saxons gave it the name of Akeman Ceaster, or "town of invalids." In 775, the city was taken by Offa, King of Mercia, who founded here a monastery on the site of the nunnery which had been built by Osric in 676, and was destroyed by the Danes. Offa rebuilt at the same time the church of the monastery. In this church took place the coronation of Edgar as king of England, by the famous St. Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury. The monastery was refounded in 970 by Edgar for Benedictine monks; and though subsequently destroyed by the Danes, was restored, and flourished till the Dissolution, under Henry VIII., when its revenue amounted to £965. In the year 1107, the city was honoured by the presence of King Henry I., who was the guest of John de Villula, the bishop of Wells, by whom the see was transferred to Bath. The bishop had about eighteen years previously bought the city of the king. During the civil war in the reign of Stephen, Bath was in the possession alternately of the forces of the king and the Empress Maud, whose head-quarters were at Bristol. It was garrisoned for Charles I., taken by the parliament, recovered by the royalists after the battle of Lansdown, and finally given up to the parliament in 1645. Charles II. visited the city in 1663. Queen Charlotte resided here some time in 1817.—Bath is one of the most beautiful of English cities. For situation and the elegance of its buildings it is perhaps unrivalled. It is seated in a deep and picturesque valley crossing the fine range of limestone hills which extend along the western side of England. The hills encircle it like an amphitheatre, and the river Avon winds through the valley, skirting the city on the east, south, and south-west sides. Lansdown, the highest ground in the neighbourhood, is a little to the north, and rises to the height of 813 feet above the level of the sea. The views from it are extensive, and of remarkable beauty. From North Stoke brow, the prospect includes the two cities of Bath and Bristol. There are fine views in the neighbourhood. The city is built for the most part of the oolite, or fine white freestone, quarried extensively at Combe Down, and at other points to the south and east, and largely exported to all parts of the kingdom. Till near the middle of the 18th century, Bath occupied no larger area than that enclosed by the Roman walls, and lay wholly in the valley; but Queen Anne and Prince George of Denmark having conceived a partiality for the place, it grew into favour, and since that time it has been greatly extended, and now spreads up the sides and along the summits of the hills. The extension and improvement of the city was commenced under the superintendence of John Wood, a local architect, who laid the foundation of Queen's-square in January, 1729. Some of the handsomest ranges of buildings in Bath were erected from the plans of Mr. Wood, and his son and successor. Among these are the Circus, the Royal-crescent, North and South parades, &c. Other enterprising men followed the example thus set, and many fine streets and splendid buildings were specially planned and erected. The Lansdown, Camden, and Cavendish crescents may be mentioned, all finely situated, and commanding beautiful prospects. In the eastern suburb are Laura-place and Great Pulteney-street, leading to Sydney Gardens. The principal public buildings are the Abbey church, the guildhall, the Great Pump Room, the assembly rooms, the theatre, and the Literary Institution. The Great Pump Room, situated in the Abbey churchyard, adjoining the King's Bath, was erected by the corporation in 1797. It is a handsome edifice with a Corinthian portico, and measures in the interior 60 feet in length by 56 in breadth, and 34 feet in height, with semi-circular recesses, in which are statues, busts, and paintings. It contains a marble statue of Beau Nash, long master of the ceremonies there in the heyday of Bath gaieties, and forms a fashionable promenade during winter season, having an excellent band of music tioned in the gallery. The hot springs and public hs are four in number, besides several private baths. ey are named the King's Bath, the Kingston or New ths, the Cross Bath, and the Hot Bath, and are all ar the centre of the old Roman city. The Queen's th adjoins the King's, and is supplied from it. The ing supplying the Hot Bath has a temperature of 117°, highest of all, and yields 128 gallons of water per nute. The King's Bath is 114° (yielding 126 gallons), l the Cross Bath 109°. The four springs together charge nearly 185,000 gallons daily. The waters, when alysed, are found to contain carbonic acid gas 2·4 hes, sulphate of lime 18 grains, chloride of sodium , sulphate of soda 3·0, carbonate of lime 1·6, and all quantities of silica and oxide of iron. The specific vity is 1·002. The waters are valuable in cases gout, rheumatism, palsy, diseases of the skin, and ofula affecting the joints. The King's Bath has a dsome colonnade, and the statue of the mythical nder of the baths, King Bladud. It is supposed to be lt on the site of the ancient Roman baths (as are also Kingston Baths, in Church-street), and took the name now bears in the 13th century. The bath itself is 65 t 10 inches long, by 40 feet 2 inches wide. Under the th Improvement Act, the corporation expended much ney in the repair of the baths, pump-rooms, and ilar edifices; and within the year 1855, the Cross ths, Kingston Baths, and the Queen's Private Baths, re entirely restored. The assembly rooms, the scene the principal amusements of the city, are situated at east end of the Circus. They were completed in 1, but burnt in 1820. They were afterwards rebuilt, d form a handsome suite of rooms, including a ball- m, card-rooms, library, and refreshment-rooms, mag- icently furnished and decorated. The ball-room is 106 t in length and 43 feet in breadth. The theatre, which s opened in 1805, has been lately (1862) burnt, and was koned one of the finest provincial houses. There are club-houses, billiard-rooms, and two riding-schools. ere is a race-course, 1½ mile in circuit, on Lansdown ll, and races take place twice in the year.—Bath is not seat of any important manufacture, but it has a good neral trade. The manufacture of a coarse woollen th, called Bath coating, was once carried on to a at extent in the city, and gave employment, in the h century, to sixty looms in one of its parishes alone. per-making is carried on in the vicinity. An abun- nt supply of coal is obtained from beds a few miles tant. The Avon is navigable to Bristol, and the nnet and Avon canal connects the city with the ames at Reading.—The first charter of incorporation s granted to the city by Queen Elizabeth, on her it to Bath in 1590, and has been modified from time time, as circumstances required. Under the Reform d Municipal Corporation Acts, Bath is divided into en wards, and the government of the borough is sted in a mayor, 14 aldermen, and 42 councillors, h the style of the "mayor, aldermen, and citi- s of the city of Bath." It has exercised the elec- e franchise from the reign of Edward I., returning members to parliament. The mayor is the returning- cer. The limits of the municipal and parliamentary roughs, which are conterminous, include the original y, covering 980 acres, and the parishes of Bathwick, ncombe, Walcot, and Widcombe, comprising altо- ther 3,534 acres. It has a revenue of above £23,000, sing from lands, the hot springs of the baths and mp-rooms, the cold springs of the water-works, and e market tolls. The population, according to the nsus of 1861, is 52,525, against 54,240 in 1851, show- g a decrease in the decennial period of no less than 12, while the number of inhabited houses have in- eased in the same period from 7,744 to 8,021. Borough sions are held quarterly, and courts of record and quest once a week. The guildhall, erected in 1775, is pacious and elegant stone structure with a Corinthian tico, containing, besides numerous offices of the cor- ation, a fine banqueting-hall, 80 feet by 40, hung with the portraits of George III., Queen Charlotte, the Earls of Chatham and Camden, who once represented the city in parliament, besides other celebrities. Here is preserved the brass head of Minerva, dug up in 1727 in Stall-street, and the silver cup and salver presented by Frederick, Prince of Wales, to the corporation in 1734. At the back of the guildhall is the market-place, with a convenient market-house. The borough gaol stands about 1 mile from the city, and was built in 1842 at the cost of £23,000. The local police number about 80 strong. Bath is the seat of a Poor-law Union and a County Court district, the head of an excise district, a polling place for the county elections, and the head-quarters of the 2nd Somersetshire militia. The Union poorhouse is situated on a hill to the south of the city.—Bath is, with Wells, the head of a dioc. in the prov. of Canterbury, including within its limits the entire county of Somerset. It is divided into the three archdeacs. of Bath, Wells, and Taunton; but the episcopal palace is situated at Wells. The living, a consolidated rect. known as the Abbey rect., is in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, of the val. of £750, and in the patron. of Simeon's Trustees. The Abbey church, once cathedral, is a noble cruciform building in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a fine central tower 162 feet in height, and contains a peal of ten bells. The length of the church is 210 feet, and its breadth through the transepts 126 feet. It stands on the site of the old conventual church, on the spot where once stood the Roman temple of Minerva. It was rebuilt by Bishop Oliver King and Bishop Montague; the work being commenced by the former about the close of the 15th century, and completed by the latter at the beginning of the 17th century. The original purity and simplicity of its architecture has been marred by faulty restorations. On the west front are sculptures representing Jacob's ladder, or, as some say, the dream by which Bishop King was called to rebuild the church. The windows are numerous and of large dimensions; that at the east end being square. A beautiful screen was erected in 1825, after a design by Mr. Manners, an architect of the city, under whose direction much was done subsequently towards restoring the church to its first simplicity. Near the altar is the oratory of Prior Bird, who died in 1525—a richly-ornamented chapel in the Tudor style, which was exquisitely restored by Davis in 1833. A new organ was erected in 1838, by Mr. Smith, of Bristol, and which is said to be the fourth in size in the United Kingdom. The church contains a very large number of fine and interesting monuments, among which is conspicuous that of Bishop Montague, who died in 1618, and was interred here. The monuments include several works by Bacon, others by Flaxman, Nollekens, and Chantrey. The church dedicated to St. James was rebuilt in 1848, and contains sittings for 1,200 people. It is in the Italian style of architecture, with a noble clock tower and peal of eight bells. St. Michael's was rebuilt in 1837; it has a fine tower and spire, resembling Salisbury cathedral. Its living is a rect. in the patron. of Simeon's Trustees. The parish church of Walcot, dedicated to St. Swithin, stands within the liberties of the city; it was rebuilt in 1780. The living, val. £350, is in the gift of the Rev. S. H. Widdrington. Christ Church, a handsome structure in the perpendicular style, was built in 1798; it has a handsome Gothic altar-piece, and organ in the same style. The living is a cur. in the gift of the Rector of Walcot, within whose parish it is situated. St. Saviour's, Walcot, is a modern structure, opened for public worship on the 28th April, 1832. It contains 700 free sittings, and 400 rented seats. Its architecture is of the decorated style, and its beauty is almost unrivalled by any building of modern date in this part of the country. The body of the church is surrounded with graduated buttresses, surmounted with pinnacles; the tower, 120 feet high, is divided into three stages, ornamented and embattled, and the roof is canopied and ornamented with bosses. The living is a rect., val. £390, in the gift of the Rev. Dr. Stamer. St. Matthew's, Widcombe, is a handsome new church, erected in 1847, capable of accommodating 1,000 people. It is in the decorated style of architecture, of the 14th century, and has a handsome tower 155 feet high. The communion table was presented by the present incumbent in 1860. The old church, Widcombe, is a picturesque object with its ivy-mantled tower. It is the oldest church in Bath, and well merits the care which the architect, C. E. Davis, Esq., has bestowed on its restoration, which is still, however, incomplete. There are also new churches dedicated severally to the Holy Trinity (James-street), St. Stephen (Lansdown-road), St. Mark (Lyncombe), St. Mary, and St. John the Baptist (Bathwick). The principal chapels in connection with the Establishment are St. Mary's (Queen's-square), the Octagon Chapel (Milsom-street), Margaret Chapel, St. Mary Magdalene's (Beechen Cliff), the Penitentiary Chapel, St. John's Chapel, All Saints (Lansdown-place), and Laura Chapel. There are also many large and handsome chapels belonging to the various bodies of Dissenters and the Roman Catholics. A Jewish synagogue was erected in 1841. Bath has several new cemeteries, besides the Abbey, consecrated in 1844, and the Lansdown in 1848; the latter is on part of the Beckford estate, the gift of the Duchess of Hamilton. Bathwick cemetery lies in the vale of Smallcombe, and was consecrated in 1856. The Roman Catholic cemetery, situated at Perrymead, about 1 mile to the south-east of the city, was consecrated in 1859. There is also a very extensive cemetery in the Lower Bristol-road, for the parishes of Lyncombe, Widcombe, and St. James's. It was completed in 1861, and contains two chapels. In the Walcot cemetery is the tomb of William Beckford, author of "Vathek." Bath has a free grammar school, founded in 1552 by Edward VI., and endowed with part of the possessions of the ancient monastery. The corporation are entrusted with the management of the school, which has a revenue from endowment of £84. The school-house was erected about the middle of the 18th century. The blue-coat school was founded by Robert Nelson in 1711, for 50 scholars of each sex. There are several other free schools, National schools, and others. The charitable institutions of Bath are numerous and important. St. John's Hospital, the most ancient, was founded in 1180, and endowed by Reginald Fitz-Jocelyn, for a master and 12 poor men and women. Its revenue is between £8,000 and £9,000, and the corporation exercise the patronage of it. A chapel is attached to the hospital. The Bath General Hospital, or Infirmary, now called the Bath Mineral Water Hospital, was established in 1738, and is largely endowed. It is open to poor patients from all parts of the country who are certified to require the use of the baths. The hospital affords accommodation for 134 patients, 86 males and 48 females; the average number in the house for the last nine years has been 113. A spacious building has been recently (1861) added, at an expense of £18,000, containing the chapel, board-room, patients' day rooms, officers' apartments, &c.; and the older building which it adjoins is devoted to the sleeping and bathing apartments, into which the water is introduced direct from the springs. The president and governors are a corporate body, and its income is about £700 per annum. The large hospital called the United Hospital and Dispensary was founded in 1747. It is a large and commodious building, erected at a cost of £7,000, by voluntary subscription, and is capable of accommodating upwards of 100 patients. Partis's College, founded and endowed by Mrs. Partis in 1827, is for the reception and maintenance of 30 poor gentlewomen, 10 of them being clergymen's widows or daughters. In addition to these institutions, there are St. Catherine's Hospital; St. Mary Magdalene's, founded before the middle of the 14th century, and having a revenue of £118; Bellott's Hospital, founded in 1609, and rebuilt in 1859, with accommodation for 12 poor persons, having separate apartments; a penitentiary; an eye infirmary, erected in 1811; the Eastern Dispensary, erected in 1845, and several other benevolent institutions. There are two literary and scientific institutions, one known as the Royal Bath Literary and Scientific Institution, founded in 1823; the other the Commercial and Literary Institution, founded in 1847. In connection with the first-named is a museum, containing a large and very valuable collection of local Roman remains, and many British and Saxon relics. The Roman include tesselated pavements, an altar, fragments of columns, urns, and coins of eight or ten emperors. The Atheneum was formerly the Mechanics' Institution. It has a library of 5,000 volumes, and a museum of natural history. New Kingswood College, for Wesleyan Methodists, and the Lansdown and Bath Proprietary College, are both new stone buildings, in the early English style of architecture, situated on the highest point of Bath, towards the north. In connection with the former are a chapel, school-house, house for the governor, &c. A new savings-bank in the Italian style of architecture was erected in 1842.—Sydney Gardens and Victoria Park are the principal public walks and resorts of pleasure seekers. The Gardens, comprising 16 acres, are on the east side of the Avon, and were opened in 1795. They are tastefully laid out, and in them, alternately with the Botanical Gardens, the Bath Horticultural Society holds its fruit and flower shows. They have succeeded to the fame of the old Spring Gardens, the site of which has been required for building ground. Victoria Park is on the west side of the city, and was opened in 1830 by her Majesty, then Princess Victoria. The Victoria Column is of freestone, and was set up in 1837. At the north-west corner of the park is a colossal bust of Jupiter, by the late John Osborne, a self-taught sculptor. Orange-grove, formerly a favourite pleasure-place, is now planted with trees, and contains many lodging-houses. An obelisk erected there commemorates the restoration to health of the Prince of Orange in 1734, by the use of the baths waters. Another obelisk stands in Queen's-square, which was erected by Beau Nash in memory of the visit of Frederick, Prince of Wales, in 1737. On the summit of Lansdown is Beckford's Tower, a square structure 154 feet in height, surmounted by a lantern, and commanding a magnificent prospect over the Severn, Salisbury plain, and the surrounding country. It is now used as the chapel to Lansdown cemetery. On Lansdown is the column set up in 1720 by Lord Lansdown to the memory of Sir B. Granville, who fell in the battle which took place here in 1643.—The Avon is crossed by several handsome bridges of stone and iron — that of St. Lawrence, at the southern extremity of the city, is an ancient structure of stone; the Pultency bridge, also of stone, with three arches, leads from the centre of the city to Laura-place and the Sydney Gardens; and the Cleveland bridge, an elegant structure of iron, connects Walcot with Bathwick; it was completed in 1827; besides several handsome suspension bridges. There are several drinking fountains in various parts of the city, but perhaps the handsomest is the one adjacent to the Abbey, facing the High-street, and contiguous to the markets. It was opened in June, 1861, and represents Rebecca at the Well. The figure is of Italian marble, standing on a pedestal of red Pennant stone, ascended by a flight of three steps of blue Pennant stone, the water flows from a bottle into a marble basin, very chastely finished, the work of Thomas Sheppard, of the Kingston Marble Works.—Bath was the birthplace of the following eminent men:—Gildas, the old historian of the 6th century; John Hales, professor of Greek at Oxford in the 17th century; Benjamin Robins, the mathematician, author of "Anson's Voyage round the World," who died in 1751; and William Hone, author of the "Every-day Book." Prior Park, near Combe Down, was the seat of Ralph Allen, Esq., long an influential member of the corporation of Bath. Many literary men visited there, and Fielding is said to have portrayed the generous host in the character of Allworthy, in his novel of "Tom Jones." Prior Park was afterwards the residence of Bishop Warburton. Bath gives the title of Marquis to the Thynne family, of Longleat.—The markets are held on Wednesday and urday; and fairs on the 14th February and the 10th y. These latter, however, are now falling off, except f the sale of cattle.

The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. Some teresting Roman remains have been found in the parish, luding a hypocaust, or hot air chamber, an altar, ns, and coins. The river was formerly crossed by a d here.

BATHGATE, a par. and market town in the co. of lithgow, Scotland, 19 miles to the W. of Edinburgh, l 24 miles to the E. of Glasgow. It is on the great d between these two towns, and is connected by branh es with the Edinburgh and Glasgow and the Monkld railways. The par. includes the vil. of Armadale. e town stands in a pleasant situation at the south foot a range of hills, and is a place of some antiquity. The church and land belonging to it were given by Malcolm IV. to the abbey of Holyrood, and were subsequently transferred to Newbottle abbey. The barony belonged to Robert Bruce, and was given by him to Walter Stewart, who married his daughter. It was this marriage which opened the path for the Stewarts to the throne of Scotland. In 1663 Bathgate was made a burgh of barony by Charles II., and in 1821 it became an independent burgh of barony, its government being vested in a provost, 3 bailies, and 12 councillors. The town consists of two parts: the old town, built on a steep hill, with narrow and irregular streets; and the new town, the streets of which, though unpaved, are regular, and lighted with gas. The surrounding district is rich in mineral wealth, containing abundance of ironstone, freestone, limestone, and coal. The entire working population of the parish, with the exception of a few hand-loom weavers and the agricultural population, is employed in the coal, iron, and lime works, and in the chemical works of Edward Meldrum and Co., where Young's patent parafine oil is manufactured in large quantities. These works employ from six to eight hundred men. Silver also is found, and extensive mines were formerly worked. The living, val. £132, is in the presb. of Linlithgow, and in the patron. of the Earl of Hopetoun, to whom the barony belongs. Besides the Established Church there are four places of public worship in the town, viz., Free Church, and United Presbyterian, Evangelical Union, and Roman Catholic chapels. In Armadale there is a Free church, an Episcopal chapel, and a mission in connection with the Established Church, for which a church is in process of erection. A good academy was founded and endowed by John Newlands, of Jamaica, a native of Bathgate, which serves as a free school for all the children of the parish. The market is held on Tuesday. Of the six annual fairs the most important are those held at Whitsuntide and at Martinmas.

BATHLEY. See BALE, Norfolk.

BATHLEY, a tnshp, in the par. of North Muskham, and wap. of Thurgarton, in the co. of Nottingham, 3 miles to the N.W. of Newark.

BATHWICK, a par. in the hund. of Bath Forum, in the co. of Somerset, forming the eastern suburb of the city of Bath. It lies on the east side of the river Avon, which is crossed by two fine bridges—one of stone, the other of iron—connecting the parish with Bath. The Great Western railway, the Kennet and Avon canal, and the Warminster turnpike road pass through it. Bathwick is believed to have formed an important part of the old city, and it contains now some of the best streets and most elegant buildings of the modern city, including Sydney-place and Gardens, Laura-place, and Pulteney-street. One hundred and fifty years ago the district near the river was little more than a marsh, often flooded, and with a few houses scattered over it. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, of the val. with the rect. of Woolley annexed to it, of £209, in the patron. of Lord W. Paulet. The church, a large and beautiful structure in the decorated style, was finished in 1820, and is dedicated to St. Mary. It contains a handsome altar-piece. A new church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, with a handsome stained glass east window, has lately been built as a chapel of ease to the parish church. There is a Proprietary college in Bathwick parish, numbering about 100 pupils, under a principal, vice-principal, and under masters, graduates of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham. Laura Chapel was built by subscription in 1796. The living is in the patron. of the trustees of the late Rev. E. Tottenham. Some Roman remains have been found here, among which is a pig of lead stamped with the name of the Emperor Hadrian, supposed to have come from the lead mines in the Mendip hills. Many stone coffins have been dug up, and the tombstone of a priest of the presiding goddess of the ancient city, Sul-Minerva.

BATLEY, a par. and town partly in the lower div. of the wap. of Agbrigg, and partly in the wap. of Morley, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 1½ mile to the N. of Dewsbury. It lies near the Manchester and Leeds section of the London and North-Western railway, and contains the chplries. of Gildersome and Morley, the tnshps. of Batley and Churwell, and several hmlts. The township of Batley had in 1861, 14,173 inhabitants, having increased during the last 20 years at the rate of 100 per cent. The population are chiefly employed in the various branches of the woollen manufacture—blankets, carpets, cloth, &c. There are above thirty factories. The Public Hall is a stone edifice, erected in 1853, at a cost of about £2,000. The upper part of the building affords every accommodation for the giving of lectures, concerts, &c. The lower part is occupied by the mechanics' institution, whose library contains about 700 volumes. The chamber of commerce holds its meetings in the hall once a month. A local board of health for the Batley district was established in 1853, and through its exertions an Act of Parliament has been obtained for supplying the town with water. The Birstal gas-works are situated at Smithies, in this township, and the Dewsbury and Batley gas-works at Batley Carr, a populous suburb of Dewsbury, but partly in Batley parish. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ripon, of the val. of £300, in the patron. of the Earls of Cardigan and Wilton alternately. The church, which is in the perpendicular style, was erected in the reign of Henry VI., and contains a fine alabaster tomb with figures of a knight and his lady, and several other monuments. It is dedicated to All Saints, and has been recently embellished with a fine peal of bells, and an east window put in by Samuel Beckett, Esq., in 1855, to the memory of his wife Mary. The Wesleyans, Roman Catholics, and Independents have chapels here. A free school, founded by William Lee in 1612, for 60 children, has an income, from endowment, of £197. There are two other endowed schools, and a new National school, erected in 1861 at a cost of £2,000. The entire charitable endowments of the parish amount to £237 a year. The Leeds, Bradford, and Halifax Junction Railway Company are making a line from Adwalton to Batley, and the Bradford, Wakefield, and Leeds Railway Company are making a branch from their line at Ossett to Batley, where it will effect a junction with the above branch of the Leeds, Bradford, and Halifax Junction railway and the London and North-Western railway. A commodious station for all the lines is now in contemplation.

BATLEY CARR, NEW BATLEY, and UPPER BATLEY, hmlts. in the par. of Batley, waps. of Agbrigg and Morley, in the West Riding of the co. of York, near Batley. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £150, in the patron. of the Vicar of Dewsbury. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BATSFORD, a par. in the upper div. of the hund. of Kiftsgate, in the co. of Gloucester, 2 miles to the N.W. of Moreton. It is situated at the northern part of the Cotswold hills, not far from the Stratford branch of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton railway. The Fosse Way passes near the parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, of the val. of £370, in the patron. of Lord Redesdale. The church was rebuilt by Lord Redesdale in 1822, and is dedicated to St. Mary. Batsford Park is the seat of Lord Redesdale.

BATSON, a hmlt. in the par. of Malborough, and hund. of Stanborough, in the co. of Devon, 4 miles to the S. of Kingsbridge. It is pleasantly seated on the coast of the Channel.

BATTERJOHN, a hmlt. in the bar. of Lower Deece, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles to the E. of Trim.

BATTERSBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Ingleby Greenhow, in the lib. of Langbaurgh, North Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles to the E. of Stokesley. It lies in a moorland district.

BATTERSEA, a par. and populous suburb of London, chiefly in the western, partly also in the eastern div. of the hund. of Brixton, in the co. of Surrey, 4 miles to the S.W. of London. It is a station on the West End branch of the South Coast and Crystal Palace railways. It lies on the south bank of the Thames, which is here crossed by two bridges, connecting the village with Chelsea. The par. includes the chplries. of Battersea Newtown, Christ Church, and Penge. It was anciently of greater extent, and was among the possessions of St. Peter's abbey, Westminster, whence it is called, in the Norman survey, Patricesy or Peterssy. The land is chiefly laid out in market gardens, from which a large supply of vegetables is sent to London. These gardens are less extensive than they were formerly. Asparagus was first grown here. Some of the inhabitants are employed in the soap manufacture. There is also a vitriol factory and several others. In 1790 a horizontal air-mill was erected, which was employed in crushing linseed, for the extraction of the oil, and afterwards in grinding malt.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, of the val. of £[illegible], in the patron. of Earl Spencer. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a plain brick edifice with a tower and spire, erected in 1777 on the site of an old one, and stands close to the river. On the stained east window, preserved from the former church, are portraits of King Henry VII., Margaret Beauchamp, his grandmother, and Queen Elizabeth. In the church are several interesting monuments, the principal of which is to Henry, Viscount Bolingbroke, and his lady, by Roubiliac. Others are in memory of Sir Edward Winter, a distinguished officer of the East India Company; Thomas Astle, the antiquary, who died in 1802; Arthur Collins, author of the "English Peerage," who died in 1760; William Curtis, the botanist. Newtown church, or also Battersea-in-the-Fields, is dedicated to St. George. The living is a perpet. cur., val. £158, in the gift of the vicar. The church was built in 1828, and is in the perpendicular style of architecture. There are two other district churches—one called Christ Church, the other at Penge. The livings of both are perpet. curs., the former in the patron. of the vicar, and the latter in that of trustees. There are chapels belonging to the Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The training school of the National Society is established in this parish. The charitable endowments of Battersea amount to £281 per annum, of which £160 is the revenue of the free school for boys, established by the St. Johns in 1700. There are also National and infant schools.—Bolingbroke House, taken down in 1778, was the ancient residence of the St. John family. It was here that Lord Bolingbroke, the friend of Pope, died in 1751. Pope was a frequent guest, and wrote some of his poems in a room wainscoted with cedar, which is still preserved. The vicarage of Battersea was once held by Bishop Patrick. There are many pleasant seats and villas in the neighbourhood. Battersea Rise was the seat of the late Sir R. H. Inglis, Bart. In 1829, a duel was fought in Battersea Fields between the Duke of Wellington and the Earl of Winchelsea. These fields have been recently formed into a park, containing 186 acres, with a fine sheet of ornamental water in the centre. The Act was obtained in 1846, but the source from which funds were expected having failed, the undertaking was deferred till 1857, when a vote of £200,000 was made for this purpose, but the total cost was estimated by Sir Benjamin Hall in 1857 at £376,999. The necessary improvements have since been effected, including a handsome new bridge connecting Battersea Park with Chelsea, from which latter place it takes its name, to distinguish it from old Battersea bridge, which crosses the river considerably higher up. This latter bridge, nearly 800 feet in length, was erected in 1771, and cost £22,500. The former, known as Chelsea Chain Bridge, is close to the railway bridge, and its appearance is not at all improved thereby. The works were commenced in May, 1851, and have been four years finished. The bridge is 47 feet between the railings, including the chains; it contains 41,[illegible] superficial feet of roadway and footway, and cost £88,000. The girders and plates for the roadway are of iron instead of timber. The towers are of iron instead c brick, and the casing of an ornamental character, nted light green and relieved by gilding. The Pim- railway bridge, which adjoins the suspension bridge, s designed by Mr. T. Fowler, to carry the South Coast l Crystal Palace railways across the Thames to the toria station. That portion of the river where the w bridge crosses is about 900 feet in width, and the ucture consists of four openings, each having a clear n of 175 feet, and one side-opening at each land side 70 feet each. These openings are covered with seg- ntal arches in iron, and rest on massive piers, the porting stones of which average a weight of 8 tons ch. Each river pier measures 63 feet in length, by a dth of 19 feet. The new bridge, which is constructing the West London railway, to connect the North- estern and South-Western lines, is not yet sufficiently vanced to enable us to give a detailed description. e par. of Battersea is very extensive, embracing an a of 31,183 acres, consisting of some of the richest d in England. The fields in the vicinity are well own to botanists as containing above one quarter of the cies of English plants. In July, 1862, an interna- nal agricultural and cattle show was held in the park.

BATTISFORD, a par. in the hund. of Bosmere and ydon, in the co. of Suffolk, 2½ miles to the N.W. of edham-Market railway station, and 3 from Stowmarket. preceptory of the Knights Templars was founded here the reign of Henry II., which was valued at the Dis- ution at £53 10*s.*, and was granted to Sir R. Gresham. e living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. £400, in the patron. of the Rev. E. Paske, vicar. The urch, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small Gothic struc- re, without a tower or bells. The register commences m the year 1711. Near the village is Battisford Hall, e beautiful residence of E. Lingwood, Esq.

BATTLE HUNDRED, one of the 13 hunds. or sub- visions of the rape of Hastings, in the co. of Sussex; surrounded by Netherfield, Staple, Baldslow, and nfield hunds., and contains the pars. of Battle and hatlington. It has an area of 9,480 acres.

BATTLE, a par. in the hund. of Merthyr, in the co. Brecknock, South Wales, 3 miles to the W. of Breck- ck. It is situated in a district of great beauty, near e junction of the river Yschir with the Usk. This ce once belonged to the priory of Brecknock, which s made a cell to Battle abbey, in Sussex. Its name most probably explained by this circumstance. The ing is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. 3, in the patron. of Browne's Trustees. The church dedicated to St. Cynog, and stands on high ground by e Yschir, commanding a fine view. Penoyre, a modern nsion, in the midst of beautiful grounds, overlooking gnificent scenery, is the seat of J. Watkins, Esq.

BATTLE, a par. and market town, in the rape of stings, in the co. of Sussex, 8 miles to the N.W. of stings, and 56 miles to the S.E. of London. It is a tion on the Tunbridge Wells and Hastings section the South-Eastern railway, and gives name to the nd. in which it is situated. This place, which was iently called Epiton, derived its present name from e decisive battle, usually called the Battle of Hastings, ich was fought here on the 14th of October, 1066, tween the Normans and the English, in which the ter were defeated, and Harold slain. A magnificent bey was erected by the Conqueror on the field, and e high altar was raised on the spot on which Harold ll, or on which his standard was taken. It was muni- ently endowed, and possessed many great and extra- dinary privileges. In its church were preserved the ord and coronation robe of the Conqueror, and the mous roll or list of his principal comrades, a document ich appears to have been largely altered from time to e by its appointed guardians, and of which there is bably now no authentic copy. The house was for nks of the Benedictine order, and the abbot was red, and invested with the high prerogative of par- ning a criminal on the way to execution. The privi- e of sanctuary was conferred on the church, and the sessions of the abbey included all the lands lying within one league of it, besides numerous churches and estates in other parts of the country. The revenue of the house at the Dissolution was £987. Houses were gradually erected near the abbey, and by the reign of Henry I. a town had grown up of sufficient importance to obtain the grant of a weekly market. Battle is situated in a valley of great beauty, surrounded by gentle hills, with rich woods and fertile meadows. It has one principal street. Most of the houses are old and poor-looking. In the neighbourhood are extensive works for the manufacture of fine gunpowder, for which the place has been celebrated from a remote period. Hops are grown in the parish.—Battle is the seat of a Poor-law Union; and the town contains the Union workhouse, fitted for 250 inmates, a house of correction, which will contain 12 prisoners, and a savings-bank. It is a polling-place for the eastern division of the county of Sussex; and petty sessions are held in the town by the county magistrates.—The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chichester, of the val. of £396, in the patron. of Sir Godfrey Webster. It also constitutes an exempt deanery, the vicar having the title of "Dean of Battle." The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is large and handsome, chiefly in the early English, but with some portions in the Norman style. It contains five monumental brasses, the earliest of which bears the date 1425, and several of them are finely executed. It has also an old font, monuments of the Brownes, to whom the manor once belonged, and some interesting stained windows. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and Swedenborgians. A free school for 30 children of both sexes, founded in 1791, by Elizabeth Langton, has an income from endowment of £68 per annum. There are several other charities, the produce of which, with the school, is £148 a year.—The ruins of the abbey are very extensive, forming three sides of a quadrangle, and entirely contained within the grounds belonging to the modern mansion, the seat of Sir Godfrey Webster, who has a fine painting of the Battle of Hastings, by Wilkins. They stand on rising ground, commanding a charming prospect down the winding valley. The best-preserved part of the pile is the great gateway, a square building in the decorated style, surmounted with octagonal turrets. This entrance fronts the town, and was at one time occupied as a townhall. Of the abbey church nothing is left but some fine arches, now forming part of the residence. There are remains of two large halls, probably refectories, one being 106 feet long and 35 feet wide; beneath this hall are stone crypts, with graceful pillars and arches.—The market is held on Thursday. According to the original grant, Sunday was the market day, and the change to Thursday was made by Act of Parliament about 1600. A cattle market is held on the second Tuesday in each month, and fairs on Whit-Monday and the 22nd November, for cattle, fancy goods, and pedlery.

BATTLE-BARROW, or BATTLEBURGH, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Michael's, Appleby, East ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, separated from Appleby by the river Eden. A short distance to the E. of the village is the Appleby station of the Eden Valley railway. This railway was opened in June, 1862, and connects the county of Durham with the Lancaster and Carlisle railway at Clifton, near Penrith. Here stood the monastery of White Friars, founded in 1281 by Lords Clifford, Vesey, and Percy. On the site of the ancient monastery is erected a fine modern mansion, called The Friary, the residence of Robert Addison, Esq.

BATTLE-BRIDGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Islington and hund. of Ossulstone, in the co. of Middlesex, near the Great Northern railway terminus. The Midland West Branch railway passes near this place, and has a station at Atherstone. In early times this manor belonged to the Grendons, and in the reign of Edward I. was granted by Sir John Lovell to Sir John de Chetwynd. In the 19th of Edward III. it was given to the abbey of Merivale, and at the Dissolution was purchased by Lord Ferrars of Chartley, from whom it passed to the Earls of Essex. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £262, in the patron. alternately of the crown and F. Boultbee, Esq. Baxterley Hall is the principal residence. There are several coal mines worked in this parish, the property of W. S. Dugdale, Esq., who resides at Merevale Hall.

BAXTON-MOOR, a hmlt. in the par. of Whitwell, and hund. of Scarsdale, in the co. of Derby, 10 miles to the E. of Chesterfield.

BAYARD'S LEAP, an ext. par. lib. in the wap. of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 5 miles from Sleaford.

BAYDEN, a chplry. in the par. of Llangonoyd, hund. of Newcastle, in the co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 4 miles to the N. of Bridgend.

BAYDON, a par. in the hund. of Ramsbury, in the co. of Wilts, 8 miles to the N.E. of Marlborough. It is on the confines of Berkshire. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £110, in the patron. of the Rev. A. Meyrick. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

BAYFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Holt, in the co. of Norfolk, 3 miles to the N.W. of Holt, its post town, and 3 S. from Blakeney harbour. The parish, for there is no village, and only 13 inhabitants, is situated in a pleasant district not far from the sea-coast. The living is a sinecure rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £150, in the patron. of Major E. Jodrell. The church, long dilapidated, was dedicated to St. Margaret. The principal residence is Bayfield Hall, a handsome modern mansion, standing in the beautiful valley of the small river Glaven, which here expands into a fine lake, and surrounded by well-wooded hills, from which there are charming views over the country and the sea. The ivy-mantled ruins of the old church are in a picturesque spot, close to the hall. On a neighbouring hill, overlooking the sea, is Bayfield Lodge, the seat of Major Jodrell, who is lord of the manor and owner of the parish, which comprises about 780 acres, chiefly arable, divided into two farms.

BAYFORD, a par. in the hund. and co. of Hertford, 3 miles to the S. of Hertford. It is an ancient place, and is referred to as belonging to the Danish earl Tosti before the Norman Conquest. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the rect. of Essendon, in the dioc. of Rochester. The church, a modern building, is dedicated to St. Mary. It contains an old octagonal font, and several monuments of the families of Knighton, Fanshaw, and Baker, who successively owned the manor of Bayford. On an eminence near the village is Bayford-bury, the seat of the Bakers. The mansion contains the famous Kit-Cat Club portraits collected by Jacob Tonson, and placed in his residence at Barn Elms. Among them are nearly fifty by Kneller, of eminent statesmen, authors, wits, &c.

BAYFORD, a hmlt. in the par. of Stoke Trister, hund. of Norton Ferris, in the co. of Somerset, near Wincanton. The living is a rect. united to that of Cucklington, in the dioc. of Bath and Wells. Bayford Lodge is the chief residence.

BAYHAM, a hmlt. in the par. of Frant, in the hund. of Rotherfield, rape of Pevensey, in the co. of Sussex, 4 miles to the E. of Tonbridge Wells. A priory was founded here in 1200 by Robert de Turneham, for Premonstratensian canons. It was granted at the Dissolution to Cardinal Wolsey, and subsequently to the Montagues. The beautiful ruins, including part of the church, the cloisters, and a gatehouse, stand in Bayham Park, the seat of the Marquis of Camden, whose residence is built of part of the remains. The river Tun, a feeder of the Medway, runs through the park. This place gives the title of viscount to the marquis.

BAYLHAM, or BAYLEHAM, a par. in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, in the co. of Suffolk, 3 miles to the E. of Needham Market, and 6 to the N. of Ipswich. It lies on the west bank of the river Gipping, which was made navigable to Stowmarket, in 1793. The Great Eastern railway passes through the parish, and has a station at Claydon, about 2 miles to the north-west of the village. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £256, in the patron. of W. Downes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure, in the Gothic style, with a square tower. Sir William Middleton, Bart., is lord of the manor.

BAYLIN, a hmlt. in the par. of Ballyloughloe, and bar. of Clonlonan, in the co. of Westmeath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles from Moate. In the vicinity is Moydrum castle, the seat of Viscount Castlemaine. There is a chalybeate spring in the village.

BAYSTON, a tnshp. in the pars. of Condover and St. Julian's, hund. of Condover, in the co. of Salop, 3 miles from Shrewsbury. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £30, in the patron. of the Curate of St. Julian's.

BAYSWATER, originally a hmlt. in the par. of Paddington, Holborn div. of the hund. of Ossulstone, in the co. of Middlesex, 1 mile to the W. of the Marble Arch, now forms a large suburban town. It is included in the borough of Marylebone, and is situated on the northern side of Kensington Gardens. It was formerly among the possessions of the Abbot of Westminster. Its present name appears to be a corruption of "Baynard's water," from a stream passing to the east of it, and from having been held by Baynard, of Baynard's Castle, Yorkshire. It was at one time noted for its "tea gardens," but these are almost as much forgotten as the botanical garden of the once celebrated author and herbalist, Sir John Hill. Christ Church, Lancaster-gate, is a perpet. cur. in the patron. of the diocesan, the Bishop of London. St. Matthew's, Bayswater, is a perpet. cur. in the patron. of the Rev. C. Smalley, incumbent. The parochial schools have been recently repaired and enlarged. In St. Matthew's Home for Female Orphans, about 20 children who have lost both parents are supported and educated; there is also an orphan school in connection with a Wesleyan chapel. The Athenæum, in Westbourne-grove, has a large and handsome lecture-hall. The dispensary relieves a large number of the sick poor annually.

BAYTON, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. of Doddingtree, in the co. of Worcester, 3 miles to the S. of Alesbury Mortimer, 6½ miles to the W. of Bewdley and 10 from Kidderminster. It is on the border of Shropshire, and in the union and county court district of Cleobury Mortimer. The living is a vic. united with that of Mamble, in the dioc. of Hereford. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a plain, neat building. The parish, which is but scantily inhabited, contains several coal-pits.

BAYVILL, a par. in the hund. of Kemess, in the co. of Pembroke, South Wales, 3 miles to the E. of Newport. It is situated near the coast on the banks of the river Nevern. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of St. David's, of the val. with the cur. of Moylgrove, which is annexed to it, of £224, and in the patron. of the Lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BAYWORTH, a hmlt. in the par. of Sunningwell, hund. of Horner, in the co. of Berks, 3 miles from Abingdon. There are remains of a small church.

BEACHAMPTON, a par. in the hund. and co. of Buckingham, 2 miles to the S. of Stony Stratford, post town. It lies on the banks of the river Ouse, the border of Northamptonshire. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, of the val. of £379, in the patron of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains several monuments to the Bennet family, among them one to Sir Simon Bennet, to whom the manor belonged. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £28, including £48, the revenue of the free grammar school founded in 1648 by William Elmer. Part of the manor-house, the seat of the Bennets, is still standing and is occupied as a farm-house.

BEACHAMWELL. See BECCHAMWELL, Norfolk.

BEACH HIDE, UPPER, a vil. in the hund. of Cashio, in the co. of Hertford, 4 miles from St. Albans. It is seated on the west bank of the river Colne.

BEACHY HEAD, a lofty headland on the coast of the English Channel, situate in the par. of Eastbourne, in the co. of Sussex. It forms the termination of a range of chalk hills, and is the highest point of the south coast, rising to the height of 475 feet above the level of the sea. To the westward are seven white cliffs, by which it is always known to seamen; a lighthouse is erected on one of these cliffs, the light of which is 285 feet above the sea, and is visible at the distance of 18 miles. Several shoals lie near the Head, and caves are cut in the rock as a refuge in cases of shipwreck. It was on one of these shoals that the Royal Sovereign was wrecked.

BEACHLEY, a chplry. in the par. of Tidenham, hund. of Westbury, in the co. of Gloucester, 2 miles to the S.E. of Chepstow. It is situated on the confluence of the Wye and Severn, at the south extremity of Offa's Dyke. From this place was the old ferry to Aust, the passage between Bristol and Wales. It had some military importance, and there are still remains of ancient earthworks. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £16, in the gift of the Vicar of Tidenham. The church is dedicated to St. John. The principal residence is Beachley Lodge, pleasantly situated, and commanding fine views of the Severn and the surrounding country.

BEACONSFIELD, a par. and market town in the hund. of Burnham, in the co. of Buckingham, 8 miles to the N. of Slough station on the Great Western railway, and 23 miles from London. The town is pleasantly seated on an eminence in a healthy and beautiful country. It consists of two streets intersecting each other at right angles. The road from Uxbridge to Wycombe runs along the principal street. The houses are mostly built of brick and have a handsome aspect. There is a market-house in the centre of the town. The business of the place has declined since the opening of the Great Western railway, owing to the diminution of the public traffic on the old London and Oxford road. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, of the net val. of £545, in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford.

ft. The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is an ancient edifice of flint and stone, with a tower at the west end, and exhibits various styles of architecture in its different parts. It has a monument to Edmund Burke, who died at Gregories, or, as it is now called, Butler's Court, in this parish, in 1797, and was interred here. In the churchyard lie the remains of Edmund Waller, the poet, beneath a marble altar-tomb, recently restored by his descendant, Harry Waller, Esq. The manor of Beaconsfield was long held by the family of Waller, whose seat was Hall Barn. The poet died in 1687. The church contains several other monuments. The arms of Burnham abbey are carved on the spandrils of an arched gateway, and on two chimney-pieces within the rectory, which was a religious house in connection with that abbey. In the neighbourhood of Beaconsfield are Wilton Park, the seat of C. G. Du Prè, one of the county members; Bulstrode; and Stoke, the burial-place of the poet Gray, and the scene of his "Elegy." Petty sessions are held in the town, and polling for the county election takes place here. The market is held on Thursday, and fairs for the sale of horses, cattle, &c., on the 13th February and Holy Thursday.

BEADLAM, a tnshp. in the par. of Helmsley, wap. of Ryedale, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the E. of Helmsley.

It is situated on the sea-coast, and many of the inhabitants are employed in fishing. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £79, in the patron. of the Crate of Bambrough. The church is a neat stone building in the Gothic style, with a small spire. The register dates from 1766. In the district are collieries and limeworks. The village has the benefit of a share in Lord Crewe's charity. Beadnell House is the chief residence.

BEADONWELL, a hmlt. in the par. of Erith, hund. of Lessness, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, in the co. of Kent, 4 miles to the E. of Woolwich.

BEAFORD, a tnshp. and par. in the south div. of the hund. of Shebbear, in the co. of Devon, 5 miles to the S. of Torrington, and 11 miles from the Eggesford station, on the North Devon railway. The village is situated on the turnpike road from Torrington to Exeter, near the banks of the river Torridge. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, of the val. of £315, in the patron. of the Rev. C. Wood, incumbent. The church, dedicated to St. George, is an ancient structure in the decorated style, with a very beautiful porch on the south side. It contains a curious old font, and an open carved roof of exquisite workmanship. The Baptists and Bible Christians have chapels; and there is a large Church Sunday school, and two parochial schools. There is a charity of £10 per annum annexed to the clerkship of the parish. The land is generally under tillage, and produces good crops of wheat and barley.

The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £250, in the patron. of E. Moor, Esq. The church, a brick and stone building in the perpendicular style, is dedicated to St. Mary. Near the village is Bealings Hall. The parish has an area of about 1,029 acres, chiefly arable, the property of Lord Henniker, who is lord of the manor.

BEALINGS, LITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Carlford, in the co. of Suffolk, one mile to the S. of Great Bealings, and 3 S.W. from Woodbridge, its post town. The new branch of the Great Eastern railway from Ipswich to Woodbridge passes through the parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £140, in the patron. of F. Smythies, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a brick building with a stone tower, and has a beautiful stained glass window in the chancel, presented by Mrs. Colvin. Lord Henniker is lord of the manor.

BEAM-HEATH, a hmlt. in the par., hund., and union of Nantwich, in the co. of Chester, 17 miles to the S.E. of Chester. It is situated near the river Weaver, and the London and North-Western railway.

BEAMHURST, a hmlt. in the par. of Checkley, hund. of Todmonslow, in the co. of Stafford, 3 miles from Uttoxeter.

BEAMINSTER, a par. and market town in the hund. of Beaminster-Forum, in the co. of Dorset, 6 miles to the N. of Bridport, 18 miles to the N.W. of Dorchester, and 132 miles to the W. of London. It is equidistant from the Great Western and the London and South-Western railways, the former of which has a station at Bridport, and the latter at Crewkerne. It is situated in a pleasant and fertile country on the river Birt, which has its sources in the neighbouring hills, one of which, called East Axe Knoll, is among the loftiest in the county. The town is ancient, and is mentioned as among the possessions of the see of Sarum at the period of the Norman survey. The most notable circumstance in its history is, that it has been three times burnt. The first fire occurred in 1644, during its occupation by Prince Maurice for Charles I. After being rebuilt, by the aid of a public grant, it was again destroyed by fire in 1684. The third fire took place in 1781: but the destruction was less extensive than on the former occasions. Most of the houses are consequently of modern erection, the streets are paved and lighted with gas, and there is a good supply of water. The woollen manufacture, once a flourishing business here, has declined, and the principal branches of industry at present are the manufacture of sailcloth, coarse earthenware, iron, tin, and copper goods. Flax and hemp are grown in the district, and there is one flax-mill.—There is a townhall, in which quarter sessions were formerly held, a house of correction, and the Union poorhouse. Beaminster is the seat of a Poor-law Union of 26 parishes, and a polling-place for the county elections. The par. comprises the manors of Beaminster, Prima, Secunda, and Parsonatus, constituting prebends in the cathedral church of Salisbury.—The living was formerly united to that of Netherbury; it is now a vic. in the dioc. of Salisbury, of the val. of £220, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, which stands on a hill on the south side of the town, is a large and stately structure in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a handsome tower, 100 feet in height. It is now (1862) undergoing a complete restoration, and will rank as one of the finest churches in Dorset. It is dedicated to the Nativity of the Virgin. The west front of the tower is enriched with much beautiful sculpture and many niched figures. On the south side is an ancient and interesting building called the Mort-house, which has recently been added to the church. The chancel contains several monuments of the Strode family, of Parnham. There is a chapel of ease, in the early English style, erected in 1850, and a picturesque vicarage-house, built in 1861. There are also meeting-houses belonging to the Wesleyans and Independents.—The charitable endowments are numerous, and produce £272 per annum. There is a free school, founded and endowed by Mrs. Frances Tucker about the year 1684, for 20 boys. Its revenue has increased to £160, and 100 boys are now instructed in it. In 1715 the mastership was held by the Rev. Samuel Hood, father of Lords Hood and Bridport. An almshouse for six women was erected and endowed about 1630, by Sir John Strode, of Parnham, and there are some other small charities, of the annual value of £50.—The market is held on Thursday, and a fair for the sale of cattle on the 19th September. The par. of Beaminster comprises an area of 5,116 acres, watered by the two rivers Axe and Birt, which take their rise at East Axe Knoll, one of the highest hills in the county. The principal residence is Parnham House, the seat of Sir Henry Oglander, Bart.

BEAMINSTER FORUM and REDHONE HUNDRED, one of the 34 hunds. or subdivisions of the co. of Dorset, situated in the Bridport div., and surrounded by the hunds. of Tollerford, Eggerton, and Whitchurch, the libs. of Broadwinsor and Halstock, and the co. of Somerset. A portion of it lies detached. It contains the following pars.:—Beaminster, Bradpole, Chardstock, Cheddington, Corscombe, Mapperton, Mosterton, Netherbury, South Perrot, North Poorton, Stoke Abbas, and Wambrooke, with part of Toller-Porcorum. The hund. extends over an area of 34,490 acres.

BEAMISH, a tnshp. in the par. of Chester-le-Street, Chester ward, in the co. palatine of Durham, 6 miles to the S.W. of Gateshead. It is situated on the banks of the Urpeth Burn, which rises under Pontop Pike, and falls into the Tyne near Red Heugh. The township contains abundance of coal and some iron. The work-people are chiefly employed in the collieries.

The tower of the present church was part of the abbey buildings. Beauchief Hall is pleasantly situated on the brow of a wooded hill.

BEAUDESERT, a par. in the Henley div. of the hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, contiguous to the town of Henley-in-Arden. Here is the site of a castle, founded in the reign of Henry II. by Thurstan de Montford, which was long the seat of the De Montford family, and was at length demolished during the wars of the Roses. There are now no remains of the building. A market was formerly held here, under a grant obtained from King Stephen. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £320, in the patron. of the Lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is in the early English style, with a fine Norman arch at the entrance to the chancel, which is unfinished. The village was the birth-place (1715) of Richard Iago, a poet once of note, whose father held the rectory. The principal residence is Beaudesert House, a mansion occupying the site of the old castle. From Beaudesert Mount there is a fine prospect over a beautiful undulating country, extending 20 miles, from Edge Hills to Malvern.

BEAULIEU LIBERTY, in the Southampton div. of the co. of Southampton, surrounded by the New Forest on the sea, and containing the pars. of Beaulieu and Exbury. It has an area of about 15,100 acres.

BEAULIEU, or BEWLEY, a par. in the lib. of the same name, Southampton div. of the co. of Southampton, 6 miles to the N.E. of Lymington, and 5 S.E. of Beaulieu Road railway station, on the Southampton and Dorchester railway. The village is pleasantly seated on a stream bearing the same name, which rises a little beyond Lyndhurst, expands, and becomes navigable here for small vessels, and falls into the Solent. In the year 1204, a Cistercian abbey was founded here by King John. It was dedicated to the Virgin, and was valued at the Dissolution at £428. The privilege of sanctuary was attached to it, and among those who made it an asylum was Margaret of Anjou, Queen of Henry VI., who, with her son, took refuge here for a time after the battle of Barnet, in 1471; and Perkin Warbeck, in 1498. Freedom from arrest for debt is a privilege still enjoyed in the manor. The workpeople are chiefly employed in ship-building, and the manufacture of coarse sacking. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £40, in the patron. of the Duke of Buccleuch, to whom the manor now belongs. The church is dedicated to St Bartholomew. It was originally the refectory of the abbey, and is the most perfect portion of the remains now existing. The pulpit is of stone, singular for its graceful form and rich sculpture, nearly resembling that at Magdalen College, Oxford. The ruins, which are situated in a sheltered valley, comprise the abbot's lodging—a square building since converted into a residence for the Duke of Buccleuch, and known as Palace House, the dormitory, and the kitchen. The walls appear to have enclosed an area of 20 acres. A hospital, of earlier origin than the abbey, belonging to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, stood on high ground near it, commanding a fine prospect over the sea, whence the village has derived its name. Two granges belonged to the abbey, remains of which exist in the neighbourhood. At Park Farm, one of them, is the chapel, built of stone, and containing a stone screen. Not far from this is St. Leonard's chapel, and the barn connected with it, above 220 feet long, and nearly 80 feet broad. There is a chapel belonging to the Baptists in the village. Fairs for the sale of horses and cattle are held on the 15th April and the 4th September. The par. is very extensive, comprising about 12,040 acres, including Beaulieu Heath, part of a large tract of heath land adjoining the forest.

BEAULIEU, a par. in the bar. of Ferrard, in the co. of Louth, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles to the E. of Drogheda. It is situated in a fertile district on the river Boyne. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £73, in the patron. of the bishop. The church contains several monuments of the Montgomerys. The principal residence is Beaulieu House, formerly belonging to the Plunkets, and subsequently to the Titchbornes.

BEAULY, a vil. in the par. of Kilmorack, in the co. of Inverness, Scotland, 8 miles to the W. of Inverness. It is seated on the north side of the river and loch bearing the same name. The river is crossed by a good bridge of five arches, which connects the village with Kirkhill. Beauly Loch is an inlet of the Moray Frith. The chief business of the place is ship-building and the coasting trade. There is a salmon-fishery on the river. A priory was founded here in the 13th century by the Lovats, which was occupied by French monks. The ruins stand near the bridge. The site is now a burial-place. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel, and a branch of the North of Scotland Bank.

BEAUMANOR, an ext. par. lib. in the western div. of the hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 3 miles W. of Mount Sorrel, and 3 S. of the Loughborough railway station. Beaumanor Park, not far from Charnwood Forest, is a magnificent domain, the seat of W. P. Herrick, Esq., who has erected a handsome Elizabethan pile on the site of the old hall, after designs by W. Railton, Esq.

BEAUMARIS, a par., market town, seaport, and municipal and parliamentary borough in the hund. of Tyndaethwy, in the island-co. of Anglesey, North Wales, 3 miles to the N. of Bangor, and 238 miles from London by the Holyhead railway. It is the county town of Anglesey, and is situated on the north-western shore of the beautiful bay of Beaumaris, near the north-eastern entrance of the Menai Strait. A town existed on this spot at a very early period, and was called Porth Wgyr, and afterwards Bonover. It attained considerable importance as a seaport. On the invasion of the island by Egbert, in the 9th century, a severe conflict between the Welsh and the Saxons took place near the town. The English, headed by the Earls of Chester and Shrewsbury, captured the town in 1096, and held the island in subjection till the arrival of a Norwegian force, under Magnus, compelled them to withdraw. The present town is sometimes said to owe its origin to the castle erected here in 1295 by Edward I. He had previously founded the castles of Carnarvon and Conway; and, in order to secure his conquests, it was necessary to have a fortress and an English garrison in Anglesey, whither the native chiefs had retired, and where they harassed him by promoting frequent insurrections. A site on low ground, then a marsh near the coast, was chosen, in order that by a short channel the fosse surrounding the castle might be connected with the sea. This canal was intended to serve the purpose of filling the fosse, and of admitting vessels to deliver supplies for the garrison. From the situation of the castle the present name of the town, signifying "fair marsh," is derived. The garrison, numbering usually twenty-four men, under a governor, or constable, who was also appointed captain of the town, had frequent disputes and sometimes serious conflicts with the townsfolk. In the reign of Henry VII. it was withdrawn. The castle was garrisoned in 1642 for Charles I., and was held for him by Colonel Bulkeley, the son of Lord Bulkeley, the constable, till 1648, when it was surrendered to General Mytton, and subsequently dismantled by order of the parliament.—The town consists of several clean and well-paved streets, the principal of which leads to the castle. There are many good houses of recent erection. The town-hall, a handsome edifice erected in 1790, contains a market-house, public offices, and a very fine ball-room. There is a small county hall, in which the assizes and sessions are held; a spacious gaol, erected in 1828; and a convenient custom-house. A large hotel and warm and cold baths are established for the accommodation of visitors.—Beaumaris received a charter of incorporation from Edward I., who also conferred on it many important privileges. It first returned a representative to parliament, in conjunction with Newborough, in the reign of Henry VII. The elective franchise was withdrawn from Newborough in the reign of Edward VI., and vested in Beaumaris alone. Under the Reform Act, it is joined with the boroughs of Amlwch, Holyhead, and Llangefni in returning one member to Parliament. The local government is vested in a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors, with the style of "the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Beaumaris." The borough includes the parish of Beaumaris, and parts of six adjacent parishes. It has a revenue of about £4,500. Beaumaris is the head-quarters of the Anglesey militia.—The principal business of the place is the shipping trade. It is the chief port in North Wales, and the several ports of Aberffraw, Amlwch, Conway, Holyhead, and others, are subordinate to it. About 250 vessels belong to the port, which are almost wholly employed in the coasting trade. The imports are chiefly coal, timber, and miscellaneous goods; and the exports, copper and other ores, slate, marble, &c. There is regular communication by steam with Liverpool, Dublin, and Carnarvon. A good pier has been erected, from which is the ferry to Aber, 4 miles distant, on the coast of Carnarvonshire. This ferry, which once belonged to the crown, was granted by Queen Elizabeth to the corporation. The passage is over the Lavan Sands, an extensive tract which is dry at low water, and is conjectured from its ancient name, signifying "place of weeping," to have been an inhabited district.—The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the rect. of Llandegvan, in the dioc. of Bangor. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a large and elegant edifice, partly in the perpendicular and partly in the decorated style of architecture, with a lofty embattled tower. It contains a fine altar-tomb, with effigies of a knight and his lady, which was originally in Llanvaes priory. The church has also a brass of the year 1500, and several monuments of the Bulkeleys. There are chapels belonging to the Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists. A free grammar school was founded by David Hughes in 1609, which has a revenue of £617. The pupils are eligible to a fellowship and exhibitions at Jesus College, Oxford. There is a National school for 120 pupils of each sex. The almshouses, near the town, were founded partly by David Hughes, and partly by Lord Bulkeley. Besides the ancient charitable endowments of the place, donations for many benevolent purposes are made by the Society of Druids, formed in 1772, which holds its annual meetings in September.—The castle stands within an oblong area surrounded by low massive walls, now much decayed, flanked by ten round towers. Its form is nearly a square, having a circular tower at each angle, and in the middle of each side. The inner court is about 190 feet square; on the north-west side of which is a fine hall 70 feet long, and 23 feet broad, with five large Gothic windows. On the east side of the court is the chapel, a building of remarkable elegance, in the early English style. The main entrance, a Gothic archway, between two circular towers, fronts the sea. The ruins are covered with gilliflowers, which are not found elsewhere in the island. The castle was purchased of the crown by the late Lord Bulkeley for £1,000. In 183[illegible] an Eisteddfodd was held in the old hall before her Majesty (then the Princess Victoria) and the Duchess of Ken[illegible]. A good road was formed by Lord Bulkeley from the town to the suspension-bridge over the Menai, distant about 5 miles. The prospects along this road over the bay and the mountains of Carnarvonshire are very fine. Baron Hill, the mansion and park of Sir R. B. Williams, Bart., is next the castle, which now forms part of his domain. The public are admitted to the extensive and beautiful grounds, and a fives-court and bowling-green have been formed within the walls of the old castle for the amusement of residents at Beaumaris. The market is held on Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs take place on the 13th February, Holy Thursday, the 19th September, and the 19th December.

BEAUMONT, a par. in the ward and co. of Cumberland, 4 miles to the N.W. of Carlisle. It is situated on the banks of the river Eden. The Carlisle canal, admitting vessels of sixty tons burden, passes through the parish. The great Roman wall, too, crosses it. Bricks and tiles are made here. The living is a rect. united with that of Kirk-Andrew's-upon-Eden, in the dioc. of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small plain structure, and serves as the parish church both for this and the adjoining parish of Kirk-Andrew. The rectory is a commodious residence, recently built and situate in Kirk-Andrew's. The tithes for the united parishes were commuted in 1827 for £191 5s. 0d. A small charity school at Kirk-Andrew's is open to children of this parish. The manor formerly belonged to the Bruns, lords of Bowness, but it is now part of the barony of Burgh.

BEAUMONT, a vil. in the par. of St. Peter's, in the Isle of Jersey, Channel Islands, 2 miles from St. Aubin.

BEAUMONT. See KILSHARVAN, Meath.

BEAUMONT CHASE, an ext. par. lib. in the hund. of Wrangdike, in the co. of Rutland, not far from Uppingham.

BEAUMONT-CUM-NAZE, a par. in the hund. of Tendring, in the co. of Essex, 7 miles to the S.W. of Harwich. Colchester is its post town. It is situated on an inlet of the sea, not far from the Naze. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. of [illegible], in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Wadham College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

BEAUMONT LEYS, an ext. par. lib. in the western div. of the hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, not far from Leicester. The Swannington tram railway runs by it.

BEAUSALL, a hmlt. in the par. of Hatton, and hund. of Barlichway, in the co. of Warwick, 4 miles to the N.W. of Warwick.

BEAUVOIR, or DE BEAUVOIR TOWN, a hmlt. in the par. of Hackney, hund. of Ossulstone, in the co. of Middlesex, 2 miles to the N. of London. The village, which forms part of the northern suburbs of London, is entirely of recent construction, and is situated near the Kingaland-road. The houses, though unpretending, are commodious, and many have neat gardens attached to them. The soil is gravel, and the neighbourhood considered healthy. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of London, of the val. of £200, in the patron. of R. B. De Beauvoir, Esq., the founder of the church, which is dedicated to St. Peter.

BEAUWORTH, or BEAWORTH, a par. in the hund. of Upper Fawley, in the co. of Southampton, 6 miles to the E. of Winchester. In the British Museum is a large hoard of coins (between six and seven hundred in number) of William the Conqueror, which were found in a curious leaden box in this place.

BEAWORTHY, or BEWORTHY, a par. in the hund. of Black Torrington, in the co. of Devon, 6¼ miles to the S.W. of Hatherleigh. Launceston is its post town. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £14[illegible], late in the patron. of Sir W. Molesworth. The tithes are commuted at £145 per annum, with 68½ acres of ɜbe. The church, a plain building with chancel and ver, is dedicated to St. Alban. The Bible Christians ve a chapel here, and there is a National school.

BEAZLEY END, a vil. in the hund. of Hinckford, the co. of Essex, 4 miles from Braintree.

BEBINGTON, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. Wirrall, in the co. palatine of Chester, 3 miles to the of Birkenhead, its post town. It is situated on the uth bank of the river Mersey, and is a station on the verpool, Birkenhead, and Chester railway. The par. mprises the tnshps. of Lower Bebington, Poulton-m-Spittle, and Storeton; and the chplries. of New rry and Tranmere St. Paul's, with the new ecclesias-al districts of Higher Bebington and Tranmere St. itherine's. Freestone of superior quality and colour quarried at Storeton, and other places in the neigh-ourhood. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of ester, of the val. of £670, in the patron. of the Rev. M. Fielden, incumbent. The church, which ex-bits various styles of architecture, is dedicated to St. drew. It has a tower and spire, and contains some od Norman arches along the south side of the ve. Besides the parish church, there are four district urches and chapels of ease—two only just completed. ere is a National school, attached to the church, with endowment of £20 a year; also schools for boys, girls, d infants, recently erected in the district of New rry. There are some other charitable endowments.

BEBINGTON, HIGHER and LOWER. See BEB-GTON.

BEBSIDE, a tnshp. in the par. of Horton, in the east v. of Castle ward, in the co. of Northumberland, miles to the W. of Blyth. It is seated on the south le of the river Blyth, and is a station on the Blyth d Tyne railway. This township was formerly among e possessions of the priory of Tynemouth. The in-abitants are employed in the neighbouring iron-works.

BECCLES, a par., market town, and municipal orough in the hund. of Wangford, in the co. of Suf-lk, 16 miles to the S.E. of Norwich, and 98 miles to e N.E. of London. It is a station on the Great astern railway; and now, by the completion of the ne between Halesworth and Ipswich, has a direct com-unication with the metropolis, instead of the previous rcuitous route by way of Norwich. A branch line of ilway is just completed, which unites this town with ungay, Haresleston, and the Eastern Union line of ilway to Bury St. Edmund's, Newmarket, and Cam-ridge. It is situated in a pleasant country on the ght bank of the river Waveney, which is navigable r vessels of 100 tons from this place to Yarmouth, here it falls into the sea. At the period of the orman survey, the manor of Beccles, with an exten-ve common adjacent to it, belonged to the abbey of ury St. Edmund's; and, from the record in Domesday ook, it appears that the abbey received its supply of sh from Beccles.—The town consists of several good treets, well paved, and lighted with gas. The market-lace is in the centre of the town, which is well supplied ith provisions of all kinds. There is a convenient ownhall, in which the quarter and petty sessions are eld; a theatre, now used as the corn exchange; assembly-ooms, with a large public library attached; and a gaol, apable of containing 30 prisoners. A new cemetery or the borough has recently been formed, under the Health of Towns Act; it comprises above 5 acres, legantly laid out, and has two chapels.—The principal usiness of the place is the corn and malt trade. There re also several breweries, iron foundries, and a silk-ill, employing from 150 to 200 hands. A large traffic s carried on with the neighbouring towns in coals, &c., y means of the river and the East Suffolk branch of the reat Eastern railway, which connects it with the im-ortant districts of Yarmouth, Lowestoft, and Ipswich.—Beccles was first incorporated by a charter of Queen Elizabeth, and is now governed under the Reform Act by mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors. Before the town ecame a corporate municipal body, under the late Act or Constituting Provincial Corporations, it bore the style of "the portreeve, surveyors, and commonalty of the Fen of Beccles," which is held of the crown by fealty, and a yearly fee farm rent of 13*s.* 4*d.* The corporation have the management of this great concession, or "fen," containing 1,400 acres, which was granted at the Dissolution to William Rede, for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of the town, which precludes the necessity of having borough rates, as the cost of paving highways, sewers, &c., is defrayed from funds arising from this source. The port of Beccles is subordinate to Yarmouth. The revenue of the borough is about £2,000, and its population 4,266, according to the census of 1861, against 4,398 in 1851, showing a decrease of 132 in the decennial period, while the number of inhabited houses has risen from 954 to 985. Beccles is a polling place for the eastern division of the county, and the seat of a County Court, which is held monthly at the townhall. Quarter sessions are held here for the Gueldable district of Suffolk.—The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £320, in the patron. of the Rev. Edmund Holland. The tithes have been commuted at £350. The church, a handsome structure in the perpendicular style of architecture, was founded soon after the middle of the 14th century, and is dedicated to St. Michael. It stands on elevated ground overlooking the Waveney. The porch is a beautiful example of the decorated style, built probably about 1455. The tower is of still later date, and stands detached near the south-east angle of the church. There are remains of another church at Endgate, the town formerly consisting of two parishes. This parish is the place in which the bishop of the diocese holds his septennial visitation, and the archdeacon his annual. The Baptists, Independents, and Methodists have chapels here. The charitable endowments are considerable, producing about £670 per annum. Of this sum, £272 is the revenue from the townlands; £184 the revenue of the grammar school, founded by Dr. Fauconberg in 1712, and endowed with his estate at Corton; and £197, the income of the free school established by Sir John Leman in 1631, for the education of 48 boys. There are also National, British, and infants' schools. Here was formerly a hospital for lepers, and a chapel connected with it dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The remains of the hospital are now a barn.—Ashman's Hall, formerly the seat of the Rede family, is a noble mansion surrounded by well-wooded grounds, on the banks of the Waveney. Rose (or Roos) Hall is an ancient mansion near the town, once the seat of Sir Robert Rich, Bart., but at present unoccupied. Friday is the market day. Fairs are held on Whit-Monday for the sale of cattle, and on the 2nd October for the sale of horses. There is a race-course near the town, on which races were held annually in September, but have been discontinued for some years.

BECCONSALL, a hmlt. united with the par. of Hesketh, in the hund. of Leyland, in the co. palatine of Lancashire, 4 miles to the S.W. of Preston.

BECHTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Sandbach, hund. of Nantwich, in the co. palatine of Cheshire, 2 miles from Sandbach. Bechton Hall is a farmhouse on the site of an old mansion. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the township.

BECK, a vil. in the par. of Arthuret, Eskdale ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 2 miles to the W. of Longtown. It lies on the Scotch border.

BECK, a vil. in Leath ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 3 miles from Kirk-Oswald.

BECK, LITTLE, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Ugglebarnby, and par. of Whitby, in the lib. of Whitby-Strand, North Riding of the co. of York, 3 miles to the S.W. of Whitby.

BECK ROW, a hmlt. in the par. of Mildenhall, hund. of Lackford, in the co. of Suffolk, 3 miles from Mildenhall.

BECKBURY, a par. in the hund. of Brimstree, in the co. of Salop, 4 miles to the S. of Shiffnall, its post and market town. The village is small, but pleasantly situated on the river Worf, about 3 miles from the Shrewsbury and Chester branch of the Great Western railway, which has a station at Shiffnall. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford, of the val. of £350, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Milburgh, was built in the reign of William and Mary, and contains a curious monument to the Caynton family, besides several brasses. In 1856, when the church was repaired, a new aisle was added. There is a National school. In the vicinity is Caynton House, the seat of the Hon. Colonel Legge. It is an elegant modern mansion in the Italian style, surrounded by tastefully laid out grounds.

BECKENHAM, a par. in the hund. of Bromley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, in the co. of Kent, 2 miles to the N.W. of Bromley, and 9 miles to the S. of London. It is a station on the Mid Kent branch of the South-Eastern railway. The Croydon line crosses Penge Common a short distance from the village, and is connected by a branch line with the West of London railway, and also with the Norwood junction. The village is pleasantly situated near the river Ravensbourne, a small branch of which runs through it. It is within the Union and County Court district of Bromley, and has a police station of its own. The old manor-house was the residence of Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, who received as his guest there King Henry VIII., on occasion of his going to visit Anne of Cleves. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, of the val. of £900, in the patron. of Albemarle Cator, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a plain edifice with tower and spire. It is approached by an avenue of yew trees, and contains three monumental brasses - the earliest being one of a priest, in 1458 - and several family monuments. Among these is one to Mrs. Clarke, with the epitaph composed by Gray. In the churchyard is a very picturesque old lichgate. There are parochial schools for boys, girls, and infants. The parochial charities amount to £110 per annum, of which sum £42 is the revenue of the free school endowed by Mary Watson, now combined with the National schools; and the interest of £1,100, bequeathed by the Marchioness of Exeter in 1837, to be laid out in the purchase of coals for the poor of the parish. There are almshouses, established in 1694 by Anthony Rawlins, which have no endowment. In the vicinity of Beckenham are many handsome villas and residences of the gentry. The principal are Beckenham Place, Shortlands, Langley Farm, Langley Park, Eden Farm, Clay Hill, &c. A fair is held on the Monday before St. Bartholomew's Day.

BECKERMET ST. BRIDGET'S, a par. in the ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, in the co. of Cumberland, 4 miles to the S. of Egremont, and 9 from Whitehaven. It is situated on the sea-coast, on the banks of the small river Calder, and is separated from the parish of Beckermet St. John's by the Kirkbeck rivulet. The land near the sea is extremely fertile, but towards the east, nearer the fells, it is cold and barren. Freestone is quarried in this parish, and there is a small spade manufactory in the village. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £87, in the patron. of Captain Irwin. The church, which is an ancient structure dedicated to St. Bridget, is situated about half a mile distant from the village of Beckermet, in a lonely spot, and is now only used for marriages and burials, the inhabitants attending service at the new church of St. Bridget, at Calder Bridge, near to which pretty village are the beautiful ruins of Calder Abbey, within the grounds of Captain Irwin. The new schools belonging to the adjoining parish of St. John's, are erected on Beckermet green, and greatly add to the appearance of the village. The parish, from east to west, is nearly 8 miles long; its breadth in no part exceeding 1¼ mile.

BECKERMET ST. JOHN'S, a par., tnshp., and large vil., in the ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, in the co. of Cumberland, next Beckermet St. Bridget's, and 1½ mile from the station at Braystone, on the Whitehaven and Furness Junction line of railway. It is situated at the junction of the Blackbeck and Kirkbeck rivulets, from which circumstance its name is probably derived. Bacon curing is carried on here to a large extent. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £87, in the patron. of William Gaitskell, Esq., of Yeorton. The church, dedicated to St. John, was rebuilt in 18[illegible]. There is nothing in it worthy of note except the font, which is part of the ancient structure. From "Wet bank," a hill and residence in this parish, Mrs. Cowl took the theme of her poem "Edwina," published in 1794. The village, which is a meet for the Whitehaven harriers, presents a remarkably clean and neat appearance, with its whitewashed houses and substantial modern-built stone residences.

BECKET, a tythg. in the par. and hund. of Shrivenham, in the co. of Berks, 5 miles to the S.W. of Faringdon. Becket House was the seat of Viscount Barrington.

BECKFOOT, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Barbon, in the par. of Kirkby Lonsdale, Lonsdale ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, 2 miles to the N. of Kirkby Lonsdale.

BECKFOOT, a hmlt. in the tnshp. and par. of Bingley, wap. of Upper Skyrack, in the West Riding of the co. of York, close to Bingley.

BECKFOOT, a hmlt. in the par. of Holme St. Cuthbert, in the co. of Cumberland, 6 miles W. from Abbey Holme. It is situated close to the sea, and is supposed to have been formerly a place of more importance than the many foundations met with in its vicinity. The Society of Friends have a meeting-house here.

BECKFORD, a par. in the hund. of Tibaldstone, in the co. of Gloucester, 6 miles to the E. of Tewkesbury, its post town. It lies on the confines of Worcestershire, not far from Bredon Hill, and includes the hmlts. of Bangrove, Didcote, and Grafton. A priory of Augustine monks was founded here in the 9th century, and re-founded in the reign of Henry III., the value of which at the Dissolution was £53. The district is pleasant and hilly, and contains abundance of limestone. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, of the val. with the perpet. cur. of Ashton-under-Hill, which is annexed to it, of £317, in the patron. of the Rev. Jo. Timbrill. The church, a Norman edifice, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The parochial charities amount to £47 per annum. The principal residence is Beckford Hall, surrounded with fine woods and beautiful landscape.

BECKHAM, EAST, a par. in the northern div. of the hund. of Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, 5 miles to the W. of Cromer. There is no village, and the hmlt. is annexed to the rect. of Aylmerton. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a very picturesque ruin, covered with ivy. The only parts now remaining are the southern porch, and the walls of the nave and chancel.

BECKHAM, WEST, a par. in the southern div. of the hund. of Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, close to East Beckham, and 3 miles E. from Holt, its post town. In this parish is situated the Erpingham Union workhouse. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £61, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church, an old building in the early English style, is dedicated to All Saints. It had formerly a round tower with an octangular lantern, but this fell many years ago.

BECKHAMPTON, a tythg. in the par. of Avebury, hund. of Selkeley, in the co. of Wilts, 6 miles to the W. of Marlborough. It lies near Beckhampton Downs, and contains some ruins of an ancient chapel, with a monumental brass of a knight.

BECKINGHAM, a par. in the wap. of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 5 miles to the E. of Newark, its post town. It is situated on the border of Nottinghamshire, on the east bank of the river Witham, and contains the hamlet of Sutton. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. with the perpet. curs. of Fenton and Stragglesthorpe, which are annexed to it, of £697, in the patron. of Mr. Marsland. ECONTREE HUNDRED, one of the 20 hunds. or bdivisions of the co. of Essex, situated in the south div f the co., and bounded on the N. by the hunds. of Udtham and Ongar, on the E. by the lib. of Havering, on e S. by the river Thames, and on the W. by the co. of Middlesex. It contains the pars. of Barking, East Ham, West Ham, Dagenham, Little Ilford, Low Leyton, Walthamstow, Wanstead, and Woodford St. Mary. The forests of Lower Epping and Hainault are within this hundred, which comprises an area of about 36,000 acres.

BECTIVE, a par. in the bar. of Upper Navan, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles to the N.E. of Trim. It is situated in a fertile and cultivated district on the west bank of the river Boyne. It was the site of an abbey of the Cistercian order, founded about the middle of the 12th century by one of the kings of Meath. This house was largely endowed, and flourished till the Dissolution. The abbot was a lord in parliament. At the close of the 12th century a curious quarrel occurred between the monks of Bective and the canons of St. Thomas's abbey, Dublin, concerning the possession of the remains of Hugh de Lacy, a baron who came over to Ireland with Henry II., became governor of Meath, and on his death was buried at Bective abbey, his head, however, being deposited at Dublin. The question was decided in favour of the latter place. In 1639 this parish was granted by Charles I. to Lord Chancellor Bolton, in whose family it remains. Excellent limestone abounds here, and is used both for building and farming purposes. The living is an impropriate rect. in the dioc. of Meath. There is no church. The ruins of the abbey stand by the river, and consist of several square towers, part of the great hall, and some fine Gothic arches and sculptured pillars which formed part of the cloisters. There are remains of an old church or chapel. Bective House, the seat of the Boltons, is a modern mansion standing in pleasant grounds on the banks of the Boyne. Bective gives the title of earl to the Marquis of Headfort.

BECTIVE BRIDGE, a vil. in the par. of Balscon, bar. of Lower Deece, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N.E. of Trim. It is seated on the east bank of the Boyne, which is here crossed by a stone bridge connecting the village with Bective on the opposite side of the river. Cattle fairs are held here on the 16th May and the 1st November.

BEDALE, a par. and market town, partly in the eastern div. of the wap. of Hang, and partly in the wap. of Hallikeld, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 8 miles to the S.W. of Northallerton, 38 miles by railway from York, and 229 miles by the Great Northern line from London. It is a station on the Northallerton and Leyburn branch of the North-Eastern railway. The town is seated in a beautiful and fertile valley on the banks of a small stream of the same name, a branch of the river Swale, into which it falls near Scruton. The par. comprises the chplries. of Burrill-cum-Cowling and Crakehall, the tnshps. of Aiskew, Firby, and Langthorne, and the hmlt. of Rands-Grange, all, except Langthorne, in the wap. of Hang. The district, which is in a good state of cultivation, abounds in pleasant scenery, and has long been celebrated for its horse-breeding establishments. The town consists chiefly of one street, and the houses are not regularly built. Bedale is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and contains the Union poorhouse. There is a savings-bank. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ripon, of the val. of £2,200 gross, or £1,700 net, in the patron. of H. Beresford-Peirse, Esq., and Lord Beaumont alternately. The church is dedicated to St. Gregory. It is a large edifice in the early English style of architecture, with an embattled tower, and frequently served as a place of retreat during the border wars. It contains an interesting monument to Brien Fitz-Alan, who was governor of Scotland in the 13th century, and is supposed to have founded Bedale Castle, which stood near the church. There are no ruins of the castle; but its site has been traced by the foundations discovered within the grounds of Bedale Hall. The Methodists have a chapel in the town, and there is a Roman Catholic chapel at Aiskew. There are charitable endowments amounting to £247 per annum, consisting chiefly of the revenue of a school, a hospital, and almshouses. The endowments of the free grammar school, founded it is said before the reign of Henry VIII., are now partly applied to the support of the National school. The hospital was established in 1698, by Dr. Samwaie, for 6 men, and has an income from endowment of about £60. The almshouses, for three women, were founded in 1667. The principal residences are Bedale Hall, the seat of the Beresford-Pierse family, and Bedale Grange. The Bedale hounds are kept at Thorpe Perrow. Tuesday is the market day. Fairs for the sale of horses and cattle are held on Easter Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, and the 5th July, and for the sale of cattle, pigs, and leather on the 10th October, and the last Monday but one before Christmas.

BEDBURN, NORTH, a tnshp in the par. of Auckland St. Andrew, Darlington ward, in the co. palatine of Durham, 5 miles to the W. of Bishop Auckland. It is situated on the east side of the river Wear, in a district abounding in fine scenery. The Weardale tram railway runs near it. In the township is an ancient oblong entrenchment, now called the Castles. This township has some very extensive collieries belonging to Messrs. Straker and Lowe, and others. There is a Wesleyan chapel at the hmlt. of Howden, and a school supported by the collieries. The Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor.

BEDBURN, SOUTH, a tnshp. in the par. of Auckland St. Andrew, Darlington ward, in the co. palatine of Durham, 9 miles to the W. of Bishop Auckland. It is seated on the Bedburn rivulet, a feeder of the Wear. The inhabitants are employed in agriculture, and in the neighbouring coal-mines and iron-works.

BEDCESTER, a hmlt. in the par. of Fontmell Magna, hund. of Sixpenny-Handley, in the co. of Dorset, 3 miles from Shaftesbury.

BEDDERN, an ext. par. lib. in the West Riding of the co. of York, forming part of the suburbs of the city, and the site of York Minster.

BEDDGELERT, or BETHGELERT, a par. in the hunds. of Evionydd and Isgorvai, in the co. of Carnarvon, and of Ardudwy, in the co. of Merioneth, North Wales, 6 miles to the S. of Snowdon, and 14 miles to the S.E. of Carnarvon, its post town. It lies in the centre of a mountainous district, rich in the grandest and most diversified scenery, embracing mountains, waters, woods, and cultivated valleys. Snowdon itself is partly within this parish, besides several other principal mountains of the great range. The village, a small number of scattered dwellings, is seated at the confluence of the rivers Glaslyn and Colwyn, at the foot of the mountain Moel Hebog, which rises to the height of about 2,580 feet. It is one of the favourite starting points for the numerous tourists who visit North Wales, and for whose reception and comfort there is a good hotel. Beddgelert takes its name, signifying "grave of Gelert," from a priory of the Gilbertine order, founded here at a very early period, and believed to be, with the exception of the religious houses at Bangor and Bardsey, the most ancient in Wales. The foundation of this priory is attributed to Llewellyn the Great, the last king of Wales, and its origin is accounted for in the well-known and touching legend which tells how Llewellyn and the royal family were one day out on a hunting excursion, leaving in the house (his hunting seat) an infant son in the cradle, and his favourite greyhound, Gelert. Llewellyn returning, his dog met him at the door, his mouth all stained with blood. With a fearful boding, Llewellyn rushed to the cradle, which was overturned, and blood was on the floor. Convinced that the child had been destroyed, he laid the dog dead at his feet in a moment; when, recovering from the sudden frenzy, he removed the cradle, and there lay the child in happy sleep, and near it a wolf, slain by the faithful dog. He reared a monument over the grave of his best friend, which is still pointed out in the churchyard, and afterwards erected near the spot the conventual church. About 1283 the priory was nearly burnt down, but was restored and flourished till the Dissolution, when its value was £69. There are no ruins left; but it is thought that the present church may have been built or repaired with the materials of the old buildings. The living is a perpet. cur.[9] in the dioc. of Bangor, val. £90, in the patron. of John Priestley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and is in the early English style, with a fine east window, and some arches of greater antiquity than the body of the building. In the parish are chapels belonging to the Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists, and services to the Calvinistic Methodists. There are some small charitable endowments. Close to the village, on the south, is the pass of Pont-Aberglaslyn, a stupendous ravine through which the waters of the Glaslyn, or "Blue Lake," discharge themselves into the sea. The rude and rich magnificence of the scenery of this pass, with its lofty precipitous sides, overhanging crags, dark depths, and rushing torrent, is unrivalled, and most description. The chasm is crossed by a stone bridge, a single arch of 30 feet span, resting on two perpendicular cliffs, and connecting the counties of Merioneth and Carnarvon. Near the bridge is a small cataract which is a salmon leap. North-east of the village is the pass of Nant Gwynant, a deep valley abounding in lakes, woods and meadows, and along which lies the road to Capel Curig. Near Llyn Gwynant is Dinas Emrys, a steep and lofty rock, the traditional scene of the conference of Vortigern and his wise men previous to his retirement, and afterwards the residence of the "prophetic Merlin." On its summit, which is defended by ramparts, are remains of a structure of stone, with walls of immense thickness. Copper and titanium are found in the district, and there are several mines. Fairs are held on the 18th August, and the 23rd and 27th September.

BEDDINGHAM, a par. in the hund. of Totnes, rape of Pevensey, in the co. of Sussex, 2 miles to the S.E. of Lewes. It is said that a monastery existed here in the 9th century. This parish is within the Duchy of Lancaster. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chichester, of the val. of £345, in the patronage alternately of the bishop and the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

BEDDINGTON, a par. in the second div. of the hund. of Wallington, in the co. of Surrey, 2 miles to the W. of Croydon, its post town, and 1 from the Croydon station, on the Croydon and Epsom railway. Beddington is also a station on the Wimbledon branch of the London, Brighton, and South Coast railway. It is pleasantly situated on the river Wandle, which turns several mills, and contains the hmlt. of Waddon, which has given name to the hundred. A Roman road crosses the parish, which is mentioned in Domesday Book as Beddintone. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Winchester, of the val. of £1,212, and in the patron. of the Rev. Alexander Bridges, M.A., of Beddington House. The present rector is the Rev. W. Marsh, D.D., hon. canon of Worcester Cathedral. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was built in the reign of Richard II. It is a handsome structure of flint, in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a good tower, and has several stained windows, recently inserted. It contains a very ancient font, and the monumental brasses of the Carew family, to which the manor belonged. One of these brasses bears the date 1432. There are parochial schools for boys and girls, presented by the late rector, the Rev. J. Hamilton, who also built a handsome rectory-house in the Gothic style of architecture, and added a new north wing to the church. At Beddington Corner, a large hamlet of this parish, a school of tasteful Gothic architecture was erected as a memorial to the Rev. J. B. Ferrers, late rector of the parish for more than fifty years. Beddington Park is the seat of the Carews. The mansion was partly rebuilt in 1709, the old hall, with its open timber roof, remaining. At this seat Queen Elizabeth was entertained in August, 1599, by Sir Francis Carew, and again in the following year. Here were grown the first orange trees in England, raised from pips brought out by Sir Walter Raleigh, who resided some time in the parish with his brother-in-law, Sir Francis Carew. The property has almost entirely passed out of the hands of the Carew family since 1860. The family mansion, however, remains in its original state. The Wandle is well-known trout stream.

BEDFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Hoxne, in the co of uffolk, 4 miles to the N.E. of Debenham, and 17 fr Ipswich. Framlingham is its post town. The vil-, which is a large straggling place, is entirely agri-ural. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, of he val. of £286, in the patron. of Earl Stradbroke. T church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a spacious old tecture in the Gothic style, with chancel and square r. The register dates from 1538.

EDFONT, EAST, a par. in the hund. of Spelthorne, n he co. of Middlesex, 13 miles to the W. of London. It situated on the great west road, about 3 miles fr Staines, and the same distance from Hounslow, its po town. It includes the hmlt. of Hatton. The ing is a vic.* in the dioc. of London, val. £300, in ding fees, &c., in the patron. of the bishop, who is ropriator of the great tithes. The church, an an-ent building with a Saxon porch, is dedicated to St. ry. It has latterly been enlarged, and the interior h improved; it also contains several ancient monu-ts. Opposite the porch is an arch formed by two -trees trimmed to represent two peacocks fighting; th one bears the date 1704, and the other the letters "H. J. G. R. T.," supposed to be the initials of the vicar and churchwardens. A handsome National ol for the education of 120 children was erected here 847 by subscription.

EDFONT, WEST, a hmlt. in the par. of Stanwell, hund. of Spelthorne, in the co. of Middlesex, 1 mile fr East Bedfont.

EDFORD, the county town of Bedfordshire, a mu-pal and parliamentary borough constituting a liberty f itself, 47 miles to the N. of London, by the Midland n Great Northern railways; on the former of which it is station. It is also connected with the London and Nth-Western railway by a branch line to Bletchley, l miles distant. It is seated on the banks of the river Ou, near an ancient ford, from which circumstance it ved its name. The Saxons called the town Bedan-ford, which signifies "town at the ford." The Britons ured a defeat here, in the year 571, by the Saxons r Cuthwulf. The town was frequently attacked by th Danes during the wars of the 10th century, and in 10 was burnt down by them. The barony was granted at the Norman conquest to Payne de Beauchamp, d erected next the town a great fortress, doubly de-ed by a wall and an entrenchment. This castle d many a storm of war. In 1138 it was besieged n taken by King Stephen. In 1215, possession of the e was delivered by William de Beauchamp to the rgent barons, whose part he took against King Jo; but it was besieged and taken by Fulk de Brent. F this service the king conferred on him the barony n the castle. In consequence of his arbitrary and ressive proceedings, De Brent was fined heavily by the k's justices in 1224. Having captured one of the jus-ti and confined him in the castle, it was besieged and ta by the king's forces, and shortly after dismantled. Th barony was then restored to its former owner, Wiam de Beauchamp. During the civil war of the 17 century, Bedford was garrisoned for the parliament, an in 1643 surrendered to the royalists.—The town, wh consists of one principal street about a mile long, ssed by several smaller ones, stands in the midst of a tr of rich and beautiful meadow land, in the broad ley of the Ouse. It contains many ancient houses, is ll paved and lighted with gas, and has been greatly im-roved within the last thirty or forty years. The ri is crossed by a handsome stone bridge of five ar-es, which was completed in 1813, and occupies the si of a very ancient one of seven arches, built, it was sa by some, of the materials of the castle; by others, of hose of a church. The river is navigable to Lynn Re-is, in Norfolk, where it falls into the German Ocean. A ood trade is carried on with Lynn, and other towns o the river, in corn and malt, coals and timber. The m-ufactures of lace and straw-plait are carried on, and gi employment to many women and children. The sh trade employs nearly 300 hands.—Among the pu-ic buildings of Bedford are the sessions-house, erected in 1753; the county gaol, rebuilt in 1801; the corn exchange; the new school-houses, in the Tudor style; the lunatic asylum; the infirmary, erected in 1803, for which £10,000 was bequeathed by Samuel Whitbread, Esq.; and the Bedford library and subscription rooms, built in 1835.—Bedford is esteemed a borough by prescription. It received a charter from Henry II., and its privileges were confirmed by a charter of Charles II. Under the Reform Act it consists of two wards, and is governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, under the style of the "mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the town of Bedford." The manor belongs to the corporation. Bedford has continued to return two members to parliament since the reign of Edward I. The mayor is the returning officer. The limits of the municipal and parliamentary borough are co-extensive, and were not altered by the Reform Act, including an area of about 2,200 acres, with 2,754 inhabited houses. The borough revenue is about £1,360, and the population, according to the census of 1861, 13,412, against 11,693 in 1851, showing an increase of 1,719 in the decennial period. The assizes and quarter sessions are held here. Bedford is the seat of a County Court district, the head of an excise collection, and of a Poor-law Union, the head-quarters of the county militia, and a polling-place for the county elections.—Bedford is the seat of an archdeac. in the dioc. formerly of Lincoln, but now of Ely. There are five pars. in Bedford—St. Cuthbert's, St. John's, St. Mary's, St. Paul's, and St. Peter Martin's. They are in the archdeac. of Bedford, and dioc. of Ely. The living of St. Cuthbert's is a rect.,* val. £145, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is a new building in the form of a cross, erected in 1847. St. John's is a rect.,* val. £149, in the patron. of the corporation. The mastership of St. John's Hospital is annexed to this rectory. The church is in the perpendicular style, with a good tower, but it has been much altered and modernised. St. Mary's is a rect.* of the val. of £273, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church is a small edifice, with a tower in the perpendicular style, and contains a brass of 1627. St. Paul's is a vic.* val. £230, in the patron. of the Rev. W. G. Fitzgerald, the vicar. The church, which stands on the north side of the Ouse, is the chief ornament of the place. In its different parts it exhibits the early English, decorated, and perpendicular styles of architecture, and has a fine tower with an octagonal spire. It contains a stone pulpit, adorned with carving and gilt tracery, brasses of Sir William Harpur and his lady, and other monuments, among which is one to the founder of the priory of Newenham, Simon Beauchamp. St. Peter's is a rect.,* of the val. of £204, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, an ancient structure with an interesting Norman doorway on the south side, and a central tower, has within the last ten years been greatly enlarged by the erection of two side aisles. A district church was built in 1841 in St. Paul's parish. It is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and is a perpet. cur., val. £75, in the gift of the Vicar of St. Paul's. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, Moravians, and other Dissenters, have chapels in the town. It was in the Baptist meeting-house in Mill-lane that John Bunyan preached, as co-pastor with Samuel Fenn, for seventeen years before his death, which took place in 1688. The chapel has been rebuilt, but Bunyan's chair is religiously preserved in the vestry. Bedford stands almost unrivalled in the number and importance of its charitable endowments and institutions. Of these the chief is that founded by Sir William Harpur, and known as the Bedford charity. Sir W. Harpur was a native of the town, and Lord Mayor of London in 1561. He founded a free grammar school here in 1556, and endowed it with lands at Bedford and in London, which were vested in the corporation as trustees. The estate in London, which produced at first about £150 a year, increased enormously in value, and has become worth about £17,000 a year. Many streets have been built upon it, among which are Lamb's Conduit-street, Bedford-row, Theobald's-road, Now

North-street, &c. The purpose of the founder, which embraced, besides the support of the school, the portioning of young women and the relief of the poor, has been carried out on the largest scale. The charity now includes, besides the grammar school, an English school, National, girls', and two other schools; a hospital for 50 children, almshouses for about 70 aged men and women, with liberal allowances to the inmates; besides a considerable expenditure in marriage portions to virtuous maidens, apprentice fees for boys, and other benevolent objects. The grammar school is managed by trustees, and is under the inspection of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford, who have the appointment of the master and second master. The number of free scholars is about 150. Eight scholarships, of the val. of £80 a year each, at either of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, are open to the pupils. A marble statue of the founder is placed over the entrance to the school. There is also a green-coat school, founded by Alderman Newton, of Leicester, in 1760, the revenue of which is now applied to clothing 35 boys in the National school, with which the original school is united; and almshouses for 8 persons, endowed by Thomas Christie in 1679. Two hospitals were founded here in the latter part of the 13th century, dedicated to St. John and St. Leonard. The former is now the parish church of St. John, and the remains of the latter are a farm-house.—Near the river, to the west of the town, are some remains of Caldwell priory, founded in the reign of King John by one of the De Houghtons, the value of which at the period of the Dissolution was £149. Near this priory formerly stood a chapel of a very ancient monastery, in which King Offa was interred. The chapel, with its royal tomb, perished in an inundation. In the neighbourhood of Bedford are the ruins of Newenham priory, of Elstow nunnery, and of a hospital of Grey Friars, founded before 1311. The county gaol stands at a short distance from the site of the old prison, in which Bunyan was confined twelve years, and in which he wrote his "Pilgrim's Progress." The Bedford library possesses the copy of Fox's "Book of Martyrs" which once belonged to Bunyan. Two newspapers are published, called the Bedford Times and the Bedford Mercury. This town gives the title of duke to the Russell family. The market days are Monday and Saturday, on the former of which cattle are sold, and on the latter, the most important, corn and provisions. Fairs are held on the 1st Tuesday in Lent, the 21st April, the 5th July, the 21st August, the 12th October, and the 19th December, chiefly for the sale of cattle, the October fair being the principal. A wool fair takes place on the 17th November. Annual races are held in September.

BEDFORD, a tnshp. in the par. of Leigh, hund. of West Derby, in the co. palatine of Lancashire, 1 mile from Leigh. The Bolton and Kenyon Junction railway runs near it. The workpeople are chiefly employed in the cotton manufactures. Good limestone is obtained here, which is much used for subaqueous works. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £150, in the patron. of the Vicar of Leigh. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. Bedford Hall is in the neighbourhood.

BEDFORD LEVEL, an extensive tract of flat marshy ground, also called the Fens, on the eastern coast of England, comprising parts of the six counties of Lincoln, Northampton, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, and Suffolk. It is situated to the south of the Wash, extending from the river Welland, in the south-east part of Lincolnshire, to Milton, in Cambridgeshire; and from Peterborough, on the river Nen, in Northamptonshire, to Brandon, on the Little Ouse, in Suffolk. It is about 40 miles in length from N. to S., and the same in its greatest breadth. The Level is divided into three parts, the North, Middle, and South Levels. The first is the district lying between the rivers Welland and Nen; the second, that between the Nen and the old Bedford river; and the third, that which lies to the south-east of the old Bedford river. The area of the Level is estimated at about 400,000 acres. Above half of that area is comprised in the Isle of Ely.—When the Romans invaded Britain, the whole of this district, it is believed, was a great marsh, and its surface was considerably lower than at present. Roman ways were formed across its site, one of which is still to be seen. Writers of the 12th century describe the Fens as being at that time a most fruitful and agreeable country, with lakes and many rivers, woods, and orchards. But in the following century all was all changed; for in the year 1236, on occasion of a fierce storm which lasted above a week, the sea broke in and spread destruction over the country. Similar calamities occurred several times in subsequent years; the natural drainage was stopped, and the whole district again became a morass. In some parts it was covered with stagnant water above ten feet deep, and boats were necessary for communication between the towns and villages.—In the 15th century, the first attempts were made to drain the Fens. One of these was Peter Morton's Cut, from Peterborough to Guyhern, 40 feet in width, and now forming part of the river Nen. After several other failures, the task was undertaken afresh in the reign of Charles I., by Francis, Duke of Bedford. A charter was granted to the company formed under the presidency of that nobleman, and in three years the proposed works were completed. It was in honour of this important undertaking for the drainage of the Fens that they have since been called the Bedford Level. Fresh works, however, soon became necessary, and in 1664 the company received a charter of incorporation, with all necessary powers and regulations for maintaining and improving them. They are styled the Corporation of Bedford Level, and consist of a governor, 6 bailiffs, 20 conservators, and a commonalty. The principal cuts formed under their management are the Old and New Bedford Rivers, Bevil's River, Sam's Cut, Peekirk, South-eau, and other great drains, besides many smaller ones. The most important recent works are the following:—A new channel, 6½ miles long, to the outfall of the Nen, by which a larger area has been reclaimed, and the Wisbeach navigation much improved; a new communication opened between Lincolnshire and Norfolk by a bridge over that channel, and a long bank across the sands at Sutton Wash; a new drain for the waters of the North Level; a new cut, 11 miles long, for the drainage of the Middle Level; and works for the drainage of Whittlesea Mere. The cost of the Nen outfall was £200,000; that of the new drain for the North Level, £150,000. The Old and New Bedford rivers, which run parallel to each other, are 21 miles in length and 1 mile apart. The former is 70, the latter 100 feet wide. They extend from Earith in Cambridgeshire, to near Downham in Norfolk.

BEDFORDSHIRE, an inland co. of England, bounded on the N.E. by Huntingdonshire, on the E. by Cambridgeshire, on the S.E. and S. by Hertfordshire, and on the W. by Buckinghamshire and Northamptonshire. In form it approaches a long oval; but its outline is very irregular. It is about 35 miles in length from N. to S., and about 22 miles in its greatest breadth. It has a circuit of about 145 miles, and comprises an area of 462 square miles, or about 295,582 acres. It is one of the smallest counties in England, three only containing a less area, viz., Huntingdon, Middlesex, and Rutland. It is situated between 51° 49′ and 52° 21′ N. lat., and between 0° 10′ and 0° 42′ W. long. This district of South Britain was included, at the period of the Roman invasion, in the territory occupied by the tribe of the Cassi, probably the same as the Cattyeuchlani. Under the dominion of the Romans it formed part of the division of the country which was called by them Flavia Cæsariensis. Three roads constructed, or probably adopted and improved, by the Romans, crossed this county—Watling Street, Ikneild Street, and another leading out of Hertfordshire into Cambridgeshire. Watling Street passes across the south-west corner of the county, through Dunstable, to Fenny Stratford, in Buckinghamshire, and coincides here with the line of the great road from London to Chester. Ikneild Street runs in a south-weste direction from Baldock, through Dunstable, to near Leighton Buzzard. During the long struggle between the Britons and Saxons a battle was fought in the neighbourhood of Bedford, in 571, in which the former were finally defeated by the Saxons, under Cuthwulf. This county, at a later period, formed part of the kingdom of Mercia. It suffered greatly from the incursions of the Danes in the 10th century, and was comprised within the Danish jurisdiction (Danelege) under Canute. Except the events connected with the sieges of the castle of Bedford, which are related in the article on that town [see BEDFORD], this county has not been the scene of any important historical event since the Norman conquest.—The surface of Bedfordshire is agreeably diversified with gentle hills and fertile plains. It is only in the south-east part of the county that any considerable eminences appear. There it is crossed by the Chiltern hills, a chalk range, in a direction from south-west to north-east. These hills form the Luton and Dunstable downs. Skirting them on the north-west is a tract of clays, or chalk-marl. To this succeeds a belt of iron-sand, extending from Leighton Buzzard through Woburn, Ampthill, &c., into Cambridgeshire. The surface of this sandy tract, which constitutes a remarkable feature in the physical character of Bedfordshire, is generally hilly. It varies in breadth from 1 to 5 miles, and is now mostly enclosed and brought under cultivation. It contains beds of fuller's-earth and much fossil wood. North of this tract is the Vale of Bedford, in which the dark-blue clay, called Oxford clay, prevails. It is a corn district of great extent and singular fertility. The northern part of the county is generally level. Woods and plantations are pleasantly interspersed through the county, frequently clothing the sides of the hills. With the exception of the bleak downs in the south, there is scarcely any waste land. Extensive and pleasing prospects are commanded from many points on the hills, especially from the downs between Streatley and Biton, on the edge of Hertfordshire, and from Millbrook churchyard, near Ampthill, over the Vale of Bedford.—The principal rivers are the Ouse and the Ivel. The Ouse enters the county from Buckinghamshire, at Turvey, flows northward along the boundary a few miles, and then by a circuitous course of 45 miles passes Bedford, where it becomes navigable. It then continues its course by Barford and Tempsford, where it receives the waters of the Ivel, and enters Huntingdonshire, near St. Neot's. The Ivel has its source on the northern slope of the Dunstable downs near Baldock, in Hertfordshire, and flowing northward joins the Ouse at Tempsford. The Lea rises near Houghton Regis, on the south slope of the downs, and runs by Luton into Hertfordshire, falling into the Thames below Ludon. The Ouzel, which rises near Whipsnade, runs by Leighton Buzzard, forming, for some distance, the boundary between this county and Buckinghamshire. Besides these rivers there are many small tributary streams, most of them falling into the Ouse.—The mineral productions of Bedfordshire are few and of small importance. Limestone is obtained in the Vale of Bedford; freestone at Totternhoe, where also "clunch" (the local designation of the chalk-marl) is quarried and burnt for lime. Traces of coal have been observed, and fuller's-earth is found in great abundance. Fossil shells of nautili, anemonites, &c., have been discovered, and in the neighbourhood of Bedford, a large skeleton of the plesiosaurus was disinterred in 1833. The climate is mild and genial, the greatest cold prevailing in the chalk hills in the south, and the chief moisture in the clay districts. The soils are very various, embracing almost every kind from the heaviest clay to the lightest sand, and each sustains its appropriate vegetation, the botanist finds here many rare and interesting plants. Along the river valleys is found a rich loam, the fertility of which is kept up by annual inundations. In the country north of Bedford there is much poor and wet land. Gravel beds occur along the course of the Ouse, beneath a bed of very rich earth. The agriculture of the county has been much improved through the energy of the Duke of Bedford. The principal crops are wheat, barley, beans, turnips, &c. There are numerous dairy-farms, from which large quantities of butter are supplied to London. In the neighbourhood of Sandy are extensive and valuable market-gardens, the produce of which is sent to distant markets many miles round. The farms are generally of small extent, not often exceeding 200 acres, and are let on yearly tenancy.—Bedfordshire is divided into nine hunds. and the lib. of Bedford borough. The names of the hunds. are Barford, Biggleswade, Clifton, Flitt, Manshead, Redbornstoke, Stodden, Willey, and Wixamtree, all which, with the names of several half hundreds since incorporated with them, are mentioned in the Norman survey. The number of pars. is 123, of which 10 are market towns, viz.:—Bedford, the county town and a parliamentary borough, Ampthill, Biggleswade, Dunstable, Harrold, Leighton-Buzzard, Luton, Potton, and Woburn. There are two ext. par. places and many large villages. The county, which has a population, according to the census of 1861, of 124,478, is divided into six Poor-law Unions and five County Court districts, the former being those of Ampthill, Bedford, Biggleswade, Leighton-Buzzard, Luton, and Woburn, and the latter the first five of the same. Bedfordshire returns four members to parliament, two for the shire and two for the borough of Bedford. The local government is vested in a lord-lieutenant, about 35 deputy-lieutenants, a high sheriff, and a numerous body of magistrates. Besides Bedford, where the elections for the county take place, there are seven polling-places, being the towns at the head of the Poor-law Unions, with Dunstable and Shambrook. The county is in the Norfolk circuit, and Bedford is the assize town. It constitutes an archdeac. in the dioc. of Ely, and prov. of Canterbury, and is subdivided into six deaneries, comprising about 85 benefices. It was formerly a part of the dioc. of Lincoln.—Bedfordshire has no manufactures or trade of importance. The occupations of the people are more entirely agricultural than in any other county of England. The making of straw-plait employs most of the female and not a small proportion of the male population in the southern districts. The products of their industry, known as the Dunstable straws and the Luton plait, have a wide reputation. Lace making is carried on in all parts of the county, chiefly, perhaps, in the north, and employs, it is estimated, above 2,600 hands. Sedge mats are made in large quantities along the borders of the Ouse, near Bedford.—The antiquities of the county are not numerous. On a hill, near Sandy, is a Roman camp, enclosing an area of about 30 acres. It is usually called Cæsar's Camp, and is of an irregular oblong form. On the low hills, near Dunstable, are two ancient entrenchments of a circular form, one at Maiden Bower, the other called Totternhoe Castle. They are supposed to be of British origin. The latter is a circular mount, with two ramparts, one at the base and another a little distance from it. Near this mount is an oblong camp, with rampart and ditch, about 500 feet in length and 250 feet in breadth. This is attributed to the Romans. There are other circular works in the neighbourhood of Leighton-Buzzard and Bedford. The baronial fortresses, most of which were destroyed by King John, have left no remains in the county. The sites of some of them are, however, marked by great earthworks, as at Arlsey, Bedford, Eaton-Socon, Ridgmont, and other places. At the period of the Dissolution, the monastic establishments of this county were numerous, and among them were six of the greater monasteries. These were Elstow abbey, near Bedford, Dunstable priory, Warden abbey, Woburn abbey, and the priories at Newenham and Chicksands. The most considerable remains are those at Elstow and Dunstable. There are no traces of Woburn abbey. Several of the churches present interesting examples of ancient architecture. The Norman is exhibited, in combination with the early English style, in the churches of Elstow and Dunstable, both of which were conventual. Other instances of the Norman style are seen in the churches of Puddington, St. Peter's, Bedford, Flitwick, and Thurleigh. Clapham church, near Bedford, is partly in the Saxon style. Filmersham church is a good example of early English architecture. The churches at Leighton-Buzzard, Luton, Biggleswade, and several others are also interesting.—The principal seats of the nobility and gentry in Bedfordshire are the following:—Woburn Abbey, the seat of the Duke of Bedford; Luton Hoo, that of the Marquis of Bute, and the birthplace of Anne Boleyn; Oakley House, the seat of the Marquis of Tavistock; Wrest Park, of the Countess de Grey; Ampthill Park, of Lord Holland; Hawnes Hall, of Lord Carteret; Melchbourn, of Lord St. John; Old Warden Park, of Lord Ongley; Battlesden Park, of Turner, Bart.; Chicksand Priory, of Osborne, Bart.; Milton Bryant, of Inglis, Bart.; Sutton Park, of Burgoyne, Bart.; Aspley, Aspley Guise, Bushmead Priory, Hexton Hall, &c. &c.—The Midland railway intersects the county in a south-west and north-east direction, entering a little to the north of Hitchin, in Hertfordshire, and passing by Henlow, Sheppard, Southill, Cardington, Bedford, Oakley, Sharnbrook, and Ilchester. The Great Northern railway crosses the eastern side of Bedfordshire, entering from Hitchin, and running by Arlsey, Biggleswade, and Sandy, to St. Neot's. A branch line, 16 miles in length, from the Bletchley station of the London and North-Western railway crosses the south-western part of the county, entering near Fenny Stratford, in Buckinghamshire, and running by Woburn, Ridgmont, Lidlington, and Ampthill, to Bedford. Another branch of the same railway runs from the Leighton Junction to Dunstable and Luton. The great road to the north enters Bedfordshire at Baldock, and passes through Biggleswade, to St. Neot's. The road to Manchester and the north-west crosses the south-west corner of the county, through Dunstable, into Buckinghamshire. From Bedford, which occupies nearly a central position, roads diverge to Ampthill, Woburn, and Dunstable, or Leighton Buzzard; to Silsoe, Luton, and St. Alban's; to Shefford and Hitchin, or Baldock; to Banford and St. Neot's; to Sharnbrook, Higham Ferrers, and Wellingborough; to Turvey and Northampton, &c. There is no canal in the county. The Grand Junction canal, however, approaches it at Leighton-Buzzard, on the south-west border. The Ouse is navigable from Bedford, and the Ivel from Shefford. They unite at Tempsford, and run through Huntingdonshire and Cambridgeshire, falling into the sea at Lynn Regis in Norfolk.

BEDGRALVE, a hmlt. in the par. of Wales, wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the S. of Rotherham.

BEDHAMPTON, a par. in the hund. of Portsdown, southern div. of the co. of Southampton, 1 mile to the W. of Havant, of which town it may be considered a suburb. It is pleasantly situated between the Portsdown hills and Langstone harbour, and commands a good sea view. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, of the val. of £328, in the patron. of the Rev. St. John Alder. The church is an ancient structure, with a small pointed steeple. The register dates from 1688. Near the village on the north side is Bedhampton Park. There are some mineral springs in the neighbourhood.

BEDINGFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Hoxne, in the co. of Suffolk, 4 miles to the S.E. of Eye, its post town, and 6 E. of Finningham railway station. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £300, in the patron. of J. J. Bedingfield, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a fine old structure in the Gothic style. The register dates from 1538. The principal residence is Bedingfield Hall, or, as it is now called, Fleming's Hall, the seat of the ancient family of Bedingfield, who derive their name from this place. The town lands consist of 23 acres 1½ rood in Debenham and Kinton, the proceeds of which are applied to the repairs of the church, and the general benefit of the parish. There are also some other small charities for the poor.

BEDINGHAM, a par. in the hund. and union of Loddon, in the co. of Norfolk, 4 miles to the N.W. of Bungay, 7 E. of Forncett railway station, and 11 S. from Norwich. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £150, in the patron. of the impropriator. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is small, with a hexagonal tower. The register dates from the year 1555. In the vicinity is Bedingham Hall. The parish contains about 1,340 acres, chiefly the property of W. Unthank, Esq., of Intwood Hall.

BEDLAM, a hmlt. in the bar. of Kilmacrenan, in the co. of Donegal, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 9 miles to the S.W. of Dunfanaghy.

BEDLINGTON, or BEDLINGTONSHIRE, a par. in the eastern div. of Chester ward, formerly in the co. palatine of Durham, but lying detached, and now, for all civil purposes, forming part of the co. of Northumberland, 5 miles to the S.E. of Morpeth, its post and market town. It has two stations on the Blyth and Tyne railway. The par. is situated on the sea-coast, between the rivers Blyth and Wansbeck, and contains the townships of North Blyth, Chambois, Choppington, Netherton, and East and West Sleekburn. It had, till the reign of Henry VIII., its own courts and officers of justice, being a franchise of the Bishop of Durham, who holds the manor. Here are extensive coal mines, several quarries of excellent stone, from which grindstones and whetstones are made, and ironworks, among the oldest establishments of the kind in England; chain and nail making is carried on. The village, which consists of one wide street about a mile in length and very irregularly built, is situated on elevated land forming the bank of the river Blyth, and commands a fine view of the German Ocean. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, of the val. of £454, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a stone building in the Gothic style of architecture. The Wesleyan Primitive Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians have chapels in the village. A mechanics' institution, with library and reading room, has been established, and there are several large schools in the parish. Petty sessions are held on the first Friday in each month. The board of health also hold their meetings in the court-house, attached to which there is a lock-up. Bedlington is in the Morpeth County Court district.

BEDMINSTER, a par. in the hund. of Hartcliffe with Bedminster, in the co. of Somerset, a suburb of Bristol, 1 mile to the S. of the city. It is situated on the south bank of the river Avon, and contains the tythings of Bishport, or Bishopworth, and Knowle. The Avon here flows through the new cut, which is crossed by an iron bridge, its natural channel forming now the floating dock of the city. The trade and manufactures of Bedminster are considerable, including collieries, timber-yards, tan-yards, rope-walks, &c. It is a polling-place for the borough of Bristol. A large hospital is established. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, of the val. of £450, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, a beautiful modern edifice, erected in 1841, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The living of St. Paul's, a district church erected about 1830, is a perpetual cur. of the val. of £150, in the patron. of the bishop; that of St. Peter's, at Bishopworth, is a perpetual cur. of the val. of £125, and in the patron. of the vicar; that of St. Luke's is also a cur., val. £400, in the gift of trustees. There is a large chapel, with a Grecian front, belonging to the Independents, and another for the Wesleyans. The parish has two National schools and a British day school, besides a new school-house in course of erection for the district of St. Luke's. Reading and coffee-rooms have been recently opened for the working classes, and there is a House of Mercy for fallen women. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £29 a year. A hospital was founded here about 1300 by one of the Berkeley family, which, after serving as a glass factory, is now occupied as dwelling houses.

BEDNALL. See ACTON-TRUSSEL, Staffordshire.

BEDRULE, a par. in the Jedburgh district of the co. of Roxburgh, Scotland, 3 miles to the W. of Jedburgh. It is situated on the banks of the rivers Rule and Tovie

a) includes the vils. of Newton and Rewcastle. The d riet is partly cultivated and partly moorland, and c tains some freestone, which is quarried at Mainslaws. T surface rises at Dunian to the height of 1,030 feet, c manding extensive views over the Marches, and a tuberslaw, another hill in the parish, to the height o ,419 feet. This latter mountain was a hiding-place of t Covenanters. The living, of the val. of £148, is in the p b. of Jedburgh, and the patron. of Hume of New Ms. At Rewcastle and Fulton there are some vestiges o ancient castles. There are also in the parish two old c mpments. The name of this place, formerly Beth- r, and still earlier Rule-Bethoc, is traced to an heiress n ed Bethoc, an ancestress of the Morays. The par. is bout 4 miles in length and 1½ in breadth.

EDSTONE, a par. in the hund. of Purslow, in t co. of Salop, 5½ miles to the N.E. of Knighton, i post town, and 7 from Craven Arms railway station. T par. is very small, and the village consists of scat- e d houses, situated on the road from Knighton to C ven Arms station. The living is a rect.* in the d . of Hereford, val. £230, with 35 acres of glebe, in t patron. of E. Rogers, Esq. The church, dedicated t St. Mary, is a plain old structure, and was repaired in 1 1. Edward Bennett, Esq., is lord of the manor, and p prietor of the parish.

EDWARDINE ST. JOHN'S, a par. in the hund. o Oswaldslow, in the co. of Worcester, partly within t bounds of the city of Worcester. It lies on the w t bank of the river Severn, and contains the vil. of Yk Episcopi, situated on the river Teme, near its con- fl nce with the Severn. Bread and provisions were s plied to the monks of Worcester from this place, fr m which circumstance its name is supposed to be d ved. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Worcester, o the val. of £635, in the patron. of the dean and c pter. The church is ancient, partly in the perpen- d ular and partly in the Norman style of architecture. T e charitable endowments of the parish, including a h school, amount to £96 a year. An annual fair was f merly held on the Friday before Palm Sunday, when t mayor and corporation of Worcester, attended by v ious officers, walked in procession through the town. T s custom, which had existed since the reign of E ward IV., is now obsolete.

EDWARDINE ST. MICHAEL'S, a par. in the c and co. of Worcester, next Bedwardine St. John's. T living is a rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £90, i the patron. of the dean and chapter. The parochial c rities produce £113 per annum.

EDWAS, a par. chiefly in the lower div. of the h d. of Wentllooge, in the co. of Monmouth, and p tly in the hund. of Caerphilly, in the co. of Glamor- g n, South Wales, 2 miles to the N. of Caerphilly. It is situated on the banks of the river Rumney, and con- t ns the hmlts. of Upper and Lower Bedwas (in Mon- mouthshire), and Van (in Glamorganshire). The living i rect. in the dioc. of Llandaff, val., with the cur. of Ludry annexed to it, £450, in the patron. of the b hop. The church is dedicated to St. Barrog.

BEDWELLTY, a par. in the lower div. of the hund. o Wentllooge, in the co. of Monmouth, 7 miles to the W of Pont-y-pool. Newport is its post town. It is s uated in a hilly district between the river Rumney, o the W., and the Sirhowey on the E., and contains t chplries. of Rhymney and Tredegar, the latter being n w a market town, and the hmlts. of Ishlawrcoed, Nmhole, and Uwchlawrcoed. The district is rich in i n and coal, and is the seat of an extensive iron m nufacture, giving employment to above 1,300 hands. B tween 3,000 and 4,000 persons are engaged in the g eat ironworks and collieries in the vicinity. The l ing is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £ 0, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, situ- a d on a hill commanding a fine prospect over the s rounding hills and wooded valleys, is in the early E glish style of architecture, and is dedicated to St. S nan. In addition to the parish church there is a b utiful new church at Ebbw Vale, recently erected by A. Darby, Esq. Bedwellty is the seat of a Poor-law Union. Polling for the elections takes place at the Rock Inn, in this parish.

BEDWIN, or BEDWYN, GREAT, a par., market town, and borough, in the hund. of Kinwardstone, in the co. of Wilts, 5 miles to the S.W. of Hungerford, and 66 miles from London. It is a station on the recently-constructed Berks and Hants Extension railway, being a continuation of the Hungerford branch of the Great Western railway to Devizes, and is about 2 miles S. of the great Bath road. It is situated in a fertile and beautiful country near the border of Berkshire, on the Kennet and Avon canal, and contains the tythgs. of Crofton with Wolfhall, East and West Grafton, Martin, Wexcombe with Wilton, and several hamlets. It is a very ancient town, and was a place of importance in the Saxon period, being the seat of Cissa, viceroy of Berkshire and Wiltshire under one of the kings of Wessex. Its Saxon name was Bedgwyn, or Bedewind, and in the Saxon chronicle it is called Bedan-heafod. The neighbourhood was the scene of a battle between Wulfhere, king of Mercia, and Escuin, governor of Wessex, in the year 674. From the reign of Edward I., Bedwyn, with occasional intermissions, returned two members to parliament, until the passing of the Reform Act, when the borough was disfranchised. The town has one principal street, crossed by another at right angles. In the former is the market-house, an ancient building. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Salisbury, of the val. of £212, in the patron. of the Marquis of Ailesbury. The church is an ancient structure of flint and freestone, in the form of a cross, with a lofty central tower, and exhibits various styles of architecture, from Norman, that of the nave, to the perpendicular in the aisles and clerestory. It is dedicated to St. Mary, and was thoroughly restored in 1854. It contains several ancient and interesting monuments. The earliest is the effigy of a knight who died in 1312. There is in the chancel a fine altar-tomb with an effigy of Sir John Seymour, father of Jane Seymour, queen of Henry VIII., and of the Protector, the first Duke of Somerset, both of whom were born at Wolfhall, in this parish. There are several other monuments to the Seymours, many of whom are interred here. Besides the district church of St. Nicholas, at East Grafton, built in 1844, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £115, in the patron. of the vicar, there has been recently built a very beautiful church near the House, at Tottenham, by the Marchioness of Ailesbury, to the memory of her mother, the Countess of Pembroke. It was consecrated in September, 1861, and is dedicated to St. Katherine. It is to have a separate district assigned to it, under an incumbent appointed by Lord Ailesbury. There are excellent National schools at Great Bedwyn and East Grafton, and at Tottenham, affording accommodation for more than 400 children, under certificated masters, principally supported by the Marquis of Ailesbury. At Wilton is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyans. The charitable endowments of the parish, including a small free school, and a bequest for apprenticing poor boys, amount to £23, with a church fabric fund of £18 per annum. Chisbury Camp, a great British earthwork, inclosing an area of 15 acres, and attributed to Cissa, is about a mile to the north of the town. Many Roman remains, including a tesselated pavement, a leaden cistern, bricks, &c., have been found at Castle Copse, south-west of the town. It was probably the site of a villa. Tottenham Park is the seat of the Marquis of Ailesbury. Bedwyn was the birthplace (1621) of Dr. Thomas Willis, an eminent physician, and one of the first fellows of the Royal Society. Tuesday is the market day. Fairs are held on the 23rd April and the 26th July, the latter being only for pedlery and fancy articles. The par. comprises an area of about 10,020 acres, belonging, with the exception of about 2,000 acres, to the Marquis of Ailesbury, whose plantations extend for many miles, abounding with deer and game.

BEDWIN, or BEDWYN, LITTLE, a par. and vil. in the hund. of Kinwardstone, in the co. of Wilts, 1 mile to the N.E. of Great Bedwyn. It was anciently a part of Great Bedwyn; but was made a separate parish at the beginning of the 15th century. It is situated on the Kennet and Avon canal, and includes the hmlts. of Chisbury and Timbridge. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, of the val. of £280, in the patron. of the prebendary. The church, an ancient edifice, partly in the Norman style, is dedicated to St. Michael. Chisbury Camp is in this parish. Within the entrenchment are the remains of an old chapel, now converted into a barn. The Wandsdyke passes through Little Bedwyn.

BEDWORTH, a small town and parish in the Kirby div. of the hund. of Knightlow, in the co. of Warwick, 3 miles to the S. of Nuneaton, and 5 from Coventry. It is a station on the Coventry and Nuneaton branch of the London and North-Western railway. The Coventry canal terminates in this parish, where it joins the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal. The town, which contains a population of 5,651, is lighted with gas, the works of which were reconstructed about six years ago. There is a good supply of provisions on Saturday, though no regular market. The ribbon manufacture is carried on extensively here, employing about 1,300 looms, and many hands are employed in the neighbouring collieries and stone quarries. There is also a silk throwing mill and some malting-houses. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £562, in the patron. of the Earl of Aylesford, with a park-like glebe of 214 acres. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a modern structure with square embattled tower, and was enlarged in 1851. The register dates from 1656, and contains some curious entries of excommunication. There are chapels belonging to the Independents, Wesleyans, and Baptists. The charitable endowments of Bedworth amount to nearly £1,200 a year. The principal charity being that founded in 1715 by Nicholas Chamberlain, a former rector, consisting of two free schools and twenty-four almshouses. The present income of this charity is £1,176 per annum. A fair is held on Whit-Wednesday for cattle.

BEEBY, a par. in the east division of the hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 5 miles to the N.E. of Leicester. A small stream, a branch of the river Wreke, runs through it. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, of the val. of £282, in the patron. of the Earl of Shaftesbury. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

BEECH, a tnshp. in the pars. of Stone and Swinnerton, hund. of Pirehill, in the co. of Stafford, 4 miles from Stone.

BEECHAMWELL, a par. in the hund. of Clackclose, in the co. of Norfolk, 5 miles to the S.W. of Swaffham, its post town and nearest railway station, and 6 S. from Narborough railway station. The rects.* of St. John's and St. Mary's are now consolidated, and form one living in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £191, in the patron. of J. Fielden, Esq. The ancient rect. of All Saints is annexed to that of Stringham. The churches of All Saints and St. John's are in ruins. St. Mary's church, which is a small building with handsome tower, contains a monumental brass and stained windows with figures of SS. Augustine and Dunstan. The register dates from the year 1561. EER ALSTON, a town in the par. of Beer Ferris, hund. of Roborough, in the co. of Devon, 3 miles to the N. of the village of Beer Ferris, and 12 miles to the N.W. of Plymouth. It is now a small town, containing about 1,600 inhabitants, situated in a pleasant spot near the river Tamar, and was formerly a borough and market town. Its market was granted about the close of the 13th century, and the elective franchise in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, from which time it returned two members to parliament until the Reform Act, by which it was disfranchised. In the parliament of 1661, Sir John Maynard, law serjeant to Cromwell and King Charles II., sat as member for this town. He founded the free grammar school still known by his name, and endowed it with land producing £21 per annum. A shed of case to Beer Ferris was erected here in 1845. There are also chapels belonging to the Wesleyans, Reformed Wesleyans, Independents, and Bible Christians. A mechanics' institute was established in 1854, but dissolved in 1856. There are both Church of England and Dissenting schools. A large portion of the inhabitants of the town are employed in the lead and silver mines in the vicinity, which were first opened in the 13th century. Extensive smelting works for lead, silver, and tin were formerly in operation, but were discontinued in 184, in consequence of the stoppage of the two mines, South and East Tamar, which occurred several years ago through the breaking in upon the works underground of the waters of the Tamar river. The great mine called Tamar Consols is still in full operation, and employs most of the mining population. The name of the town is supposed to be a corruption of Beer-Alecon, which it took from the family of the Alençons, who held the manor after the Conquest.

EER CROCOMBE, a par. in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, in the co. of Somerset, 5 miles to the N.E. of Ilminster. The Chard canal passes through the parish, which is included in the union of Langport. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £200, in the patron. of Colonel Wyndham. The church is dedicated to St. James.

EER FERRIS, or FERRERS, a par. in the hund. of Roborough, in the co. of Devon, 3 miles to the N.E. of Saltash, and 8 N. by W. from Plymouth. It occupies a small peninsula on the English Channel, at the mouth of the rivers Tamar and Tavy, which bound it on the W. and E. The par. includes the town of Beer Alston, which was formerly a borough, and the village of Beer Ferris, or, as it is commonly called, Beer Town. Lead has been for many centuries obtained here in considerable quantities, mixed with much silver, and several other mineral products. The chief mine is known as the Tamar Consols, and gives employment to a great number of the inhabitants. The scenery of the neighbourhood is remarkably fine, and large quantities of fruit are produced here, especially black cherries, known locally as "mazards." The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, of the val. of £700, in the patron. of the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, was erected in 1333. It is in the decorated style chiefly, but with additions of perpendicular and debased, and contains two monuments of Crusaders, besides tombs of the Ferrers and other families who formerly held the manor. Here is the grave of the painter Charles A. Stothard, who was killed, in 1821, by a fall while engaged in drawing the windows of this church. The rich stained glass belonging to the eastern window is now preserved in a chest. There are several Dissenting chapels in the parish. The charitable endowments amount to £66 per annum, including £21, the revenue of Maynard's free school. The par. comprises an area of about 5,838 acres, chiefly the property of Earl Mount-Edgcumbe, who is lord of the manor.

BEER HACKETT, a par. in the hund. of Sherborne, in the co. of Dorset, 4 miles to the S.W. of Sherborne, and 4 S.E. from Yeovil railway station. It is situated on a small river, and is but thinly inhabited. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £201, in the patron. of Sir J. Munden and W. Helyar, Esq., alternately; it is a peculiar of the Dean of Salisbury, and is exempt from visitation. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

BEER REGIS. See BERE REGIS, Dorsetshire.

BEERHALL, a tythg. in the par. of Axminster, and hund. of the same name, in the co. of Devon, not far from Axminster.

BEES, ST., or KIRKBY BEACOCK, a par. in the ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, in the co. of Cumberland, 3 miles to the N.W. of Egremont. It is situated near the coast of the Irish Sea, along which it extends about 10 miles, and was the largest parish in the county until recently, when Loweswater was constituted a parochial chapelry, with independent jurisdiction. It contains the chplries. of Ennerdale, Eskdale, Hensingham, Nether Wasdale, Wasdale Head, and Whitehaven, the last being a market town and seaport; and the tnshps. of Kinniside, Lowside-Quarter, Preston-Quarter, Rottington, Sandwith, and Weddiker. The district is hilly, and the coast generally steep and rocky. Coal, limestone, and freestone are obtained, with some lead; and iron has been found in great abundance in the neighbourhood. The vicinity abounds in striking scenery. On the promontory called St. Bees Head, 3 miles to the S. of Whitehaven, is a lighthouse, with a fixed light at an elevation of 333 feet, visible at a distance of 23 miles. It was erected in 1822, a former one, erected in 1717, having been burnt down. Large numbers of seafowl haunt the rocky coast. The village is said to owe its origin to a nunnery, founded here in the 7th century by St. Bega, an Irish princess, whom some identify with St. Bridget. A few interesting fragments of that earlier foundation are preserved in the present church and churchyard. After its demolition by the Danes in the 10th century, a priory was established near the ancient site by William de Meschines, in the reign of Henry I., for a prior and monks of the Benedictine order, and was made a cell to St. Mary's abbey in York. At the Dissolution its annual revenue was about £150. Nearly all traces of its domestic buildings have disappeared; but the nave of its church has been used as the parish church since 1611. It is a venerable cruciform building, principally semi-Norman (circa 1200). The chancel, repaired from a ruin in 1817, to serve as a divinity school, is very noble, but needs restoration. The transepts and tower have recently been well restored, and a fine peal of eight bells, with some good church furniture and painted glass, have been added. The benefice is a perpet. cur.,* now in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £103, in the patron. of the Earl of Lonsdale, and is held with the principalship of the college which was, in 1817, established by Dr. Law, then Bishop of Chester, for such divinity students as are not designed for the universities. The principal is assisted by a tutor and a lecturer in theology; the course lasts two years, and the divinity testimonial of St. Bees College is now accepted by most of the English bishops. Here is also a free grammar school, once of considerable importance, founded in 1587 by Archbishop Grindal, a native of Hensingham, in this parish. The scholars are eligible to a fellowship and two scholarships at Queen's College, Oxford, and to a fellowship and four scholarships at Cambridge. There are several other charitable endowments, producing about £50 a year. The monastery and the manor of St. Bees were granted by Edward VI., in 1553, to Sir Thomas Chaloner, through whose family and the Wybergs the manor has come to its present holder, the Earl of Lonsdale.

BEESTHORPE, a hmlt. in the par. of Caunton, wap. of Thurgarton, in the co. of Nottingham, 5 miles to the N.W. of Newark. The Great Northern railway passes within a short distance to the east. The principal residence is Beesthorpe Hall, an old seat erected in the reign of James I.

BEESTON, a hmlt. in the pars. of Northill and Sandy, hund. of Wixamtree, in the co. of Bedford, 2 miles to the N.W. of Biggleswade. It is near the Sandy station of the Great Northern railway.

BEESTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Bunbury, hund. of Eddisbury, in the co. palatine of Cheshire, 3 miles to the S.W. of Tarporley. It is a station on the Chester and Crewe railway, midway between those towns. It is situated in a fertile and beautiful country, at the foot of Beeston Hill, a bold and insulated rock of sandstone, 366 feet in height, precipitous on one side, but gradually sloping on the other, and commanding a wide prospect over the vale of Cheshire. On its summit are the ruins of Beeston Castle, once a fortress of great strength, founded about 1220 by Ranulph de Blundeville. It was garrisoned by the parliamentary forces in the reign of Charles I., and, being taken by the royalists, was besieged, retaken, and dismantled in 1646. The remains, a massive and picturesque pile, overgrown with ivy, consist of part of an entrance archway, between two round towers, part of the walls, several round towers, remains of the chapel, and the moat cut in the sandstone. They extend over four or five acres, and form a striking object in the landscape for many miles round, being visible at Liverpool. There is a large stone quarry in the outer ward of the castle. The Chester canal passes through the township, which is included within the Poor-law Union of Nantwich. There is a mineral spring. Beeston Hall, an old seat, was burnt down by Prince Rupert during the Civil War.

BEESTON, a par. and small town in the southern div. of the wap. of Broxtow, in the co. of Nottingham, 3 miles to the S.W. of Nottingham, and 12 from Derby. It is a station on the Derby and Lincoln section of the Midland railway. It lies on the west side of the river Trent, and includes the hamlet of Beeston Rylands. The Nottingham canal is connected with the Trent by a branch called the Beeston Cut, which intersects the parish. The chief occupations of the people are the manufacture of hosiery and lace. There are above 200 stocking frames and 160 lace machines in constant operation. About 600 hands are employed in the silk-mill, which had to be rebuilt, after having been burnt down in the Reform Riots of 1831. BEETHAM, a par. in Kendal ward, in the co. of Westmoreland, 1 mile to the S. of Milnthorpe, near which is a station on the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, and 2 miles N.W. from Burton-in-Kendal. The par. occupies a mountainous district on the banks of the rivers Ka or Kent, and Betha, or Bela, near the border of Lancashire, and is included within the Poor-law Union of Kendal. It comprises the chplry. of Witherslack, and the tnshps. of Beetham, Farlton, Haverbrack, Whop, Overthwaite, with Ulpha. Holme Island, in Morecombe Bay, used to be sometimes in the parish of Beetham, and county of Westmoreland, and sometimes in the county of Lancashire, according to the side of it on which the river Winster used to discharge itself into the sea at Morecombe Bay, that river being the division between the two counties. But since the Lancaster and Ulverstone railway has been made, the river has been confined to the east side of the island, and the island been joined to the west land, which converts it into a peninsula. Slate and limestone are quarried here, and exported to other towns along the coast. The Lancaster and Ulverstone railway crosses the sands on a lofty viaduct of 52 arches at Arnside. There is a bridge so constructed as to allow ships to enter the Kent, which is navigable for small vessels, and warfs are established on its eastern bank. Paper-making is carried on to a small extent, and there is a corn-mill. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £159, in the patron. of the Duchy of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. It stands by the river, near the site of an ancient chapel dedicated to St. John, and contains monuments of the Wilsons, of Dallam Tower, and of the Beethams, of Beetham Hall, to whom the manor formerly belonged. A MS. history of Beetham, by a former vicar, is deposited in the church. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £512 per annum; of which sum £445 is the produce of Dean Barwick's bequest for a school, the incumbent, poor, &c., at Witherslack, on the north side of the sands, and £37 is the income of a free school at Beetham, founded about 1663. Near the village are the remains of Beetham Hall, the old manor-house, once a fortified seat, but now a farm-house. Two miles to the south are the remains of Arnside Tower, or Beacon. Several similar structures existed in the vicinity. There is a waterfall at Beetham Mill, near the village. Beetham House is the residence of the Rev. W. Hutton, the vicar, and Ashton House of John Yeates Thexton, Esq. Dallam Tower, in the township of Haverbrack, is a fine stone mansion, situated in a beautiful park, commanding extensive views over the most picturesque and beautiful portion of Westmoreland: it is at present the seat of G. E. Wilson, Esq., who is lord of the manor.

The Midland, and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railways pass near the village, and have stations at Eckington and Woodhouse Mill. The approach to the village from Eckington is through a massive stone cutting. The village itself is delightfully situated on a gentle declivity near the border of Yorkshire, on the banks of the river Rother. It is included within the Poor-law Union of Rotherham, Yorkshire, from which place it is distant about 6 miles to the south. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £250, in the patron. of Earl Manvers, who is also lord of the manor and chief landowner. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure with square tower of pointed stone. The Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel in the hamlet of Hackenthorpe, about 2 miles east of the village. The parochial charities produce £34 per annum, including a bequest by William Jessop for apprenticing boys and other purposes, and the endowment of a small free school. The par. includes the hmlts. of Hackenthorpe, Sothal, Waterthorpe, and Birley—the first distinguished for its manufacture of scythes and sickles, and the last for its spa and baths, which have been held in much repute for several centuries.

BEIGHTON, a par. in the hund. of South Walsham, in the co. of Norfolk, 6 miles to the N.E. of Loddon, 10 W. of Yarmouth, and 11 E. of Norwich. BEITH, a par. and market town, in the Cunningham district of the co. of Ayr, and partly in the co. of Renfrew, Scotland, 18 miles to the S.W. of Glasgow. It is situated in a pleasant and fertile district on the banks of the Rye Water, near Loch Kilbirnie, and is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway. The par. includes, in addition to the post town of its own name, the vils. of Gateside, Northbar, and Burnhouse. The town, which has grown into importance since the commencement of the 18th century, when it consisted of only a few poor dwellings, is seated on a lofty eminence, commanding extensive prospects over the surrounding country. The streets are not regularly built, but they contain many good houses and are lighted with gas. There is a townhouse, which was erected in 1817, a news-room, subscription library, and three branch banks. The principal branches of industry are the manufacture of linen yarn, calicoes, and silk printing and dyeing. There are many dairy-farms, and a large quantity of the cheese called "Dunlop cheese" (from the neighbouring parish) is made here. Coal, limestone, and freestone are obtained in abundance, and some ironstone. The living, of the val. of £241, is in the presb. of Irvine, and the patron. of the Earl of Eglinton. The church, a handsome edifice with a spire, erected in 1807, stands on the loftiest spot in the town. There are places of worship belonging to the Free Church, and the United Presbyterians, and several good schools. Until 1838, when it fell down, the ruins of Giffen Castle, the old seat of the Eglintons, was a conspicuous object; and on the shore of Loch Kilbrinie, are those of Glengarnock Castle, now belonging to the Earl of Glasgow. On the summit of the lofty Cuffhill, a supposed seat of Druidical worship, is a rocking-stone, which a touch suffices to move. Stone coffins and urns have been discovered in cairns in this parish. Dr. John Wotherspoon, afterwards President of Princetown College, New Jersey, was minister of this parish in 1745, when he raised and led a company of volunteers for the king. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Falkirk. Friday is the market day. Fairs are held on the first Friday in January, February, and November, and the 30th August.

BEKAN, or BECAN, a par. in the bar. of Costello, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 5 miles to the W. of Ballyhannis. It lies at the head of the river Robe. The living is a rect., united with that of Kiltullagh, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. The principal residences are Becan and Ballenville. There are some remains of the old parish church.

BEKESBOURNE. See BEARSBOURNE, Kent.

BELAN, a par. in the bar. of Kilkea and Moone, in the co. of Kildare, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles to the N. of Castledermot. The living is a rect., united with the vic. of Timolin, in the dioc. of Dublin, Glendalagh, and Kildare. Belan House, the seat of the Earls of Aldborough, stands on the site of an ancient castle, which was a seat of the Fitzgeralds, and was destroyed by Cromwell.

BELAUGH, a par. in the southern div. of the hund. of Erpingham, in the co. of Norfolk, 6½ miles to the N.E. of Norwich. The village is pleasantly situated on the sloping side of a hill, which rises abruptly from the left bank of the river Bure, and is crowned by the church of St. Peter, from which there is a commanding prospect over a rich and varied country. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with the vic. of Scotton, to which it is annexed, £411, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a square tower surmounted by four small spires, and contains a brass of 1471, and an ancient circular font. The register commences from the year 1538. Belaugh Hall is the chief residence, and belongs to the Trafford family, who have long held the manor.

BELBROUGHTON, a par. and vil. in the lower div. of the hund. of Halfshire, in the co. of Worcester, 5½ miles to the E. of Kidderminster, and 5 S. of Stourbridge, its post town and railway station. It is watered by the small stream of Ram Alley, and includes the hmlts. of Brian's Bell, Broomhill, Fairfield, and Hartl. The manufacture of scythes, hay-knives, and every description of edge tools is extensively carried on at this place, one firm having been established upwards of a century. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, of the val. of £1,244, in the patron. of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, an old stone building, is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The altar-place in the chancel is paved with encaustic tiles. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a National school and a small free school, with an endowment of about £10 a year, and other charities producing about £24. Fairs are held here on the 30th May and the 20th September for cattle, horses, cheese, &c.; the latter day is a statute fair for hiring servants. The parish to the northward is rather hilly, but generally fertile, and a large portion in pasture.

BELBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Howden, and wapentake of Howdenshire, in the East Riding of the co. of York, 1 mile from Howden. The Hull and Selby railway passes near the township, with a station at Howden.

BELCHAMP NORTH END, and BELCHAMP NORTH WOOD, ext. par. places in the hund. of Hinckford, in the co. of Essex, next to Belchamp Walter.

BELCHAMP OTTON, a par. in the hund. of Hinckford, in the co. of Essex, 5 miles to the N. of Castle Hedingham. Clare is its post town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val. of £[illegible], in the patron. of the Rev. E. H. Dawson, incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. Ethelbert and All Saints. There are charitable endowments, producing £[illegible] per annum.

BELCHAMP ST. PAUL'S, a par. in the hund. of Hinckford, in the co. of Essex, 2 miles to the S.E. of Clare. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Rochester, the val. of £240, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is an endowment of small amount for a school. The vil. is a mart for the East Essex hops.

BELCHAMP WALTER, a par. in the hund. of Hinckford, in the co. of Essex, 3 miles to the W. of Sudbury. The living is a vic. consolidated with that of Bulmer, in the dioc. of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains a monumental brass of the year 1591, and several monuments to the Waldegrave family, whose seat is Belchamp Hall. The mansion contains some interesting paintings, amongst which is a portrait of Sir Hugh Myddelton. The par., with Belchamp North End and Belchamp North Wood, which are ext. par., has an area of about 2,125.

BELCHFORD, or BELSHFORD, a par. in the northern div. of the wap. of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles to the N.E. of Horncastle. Good limestone is quarried here. In the parish is Belchford Wood, where the South Wold hounds meet. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £425, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul.

BELCLARE, or CLARE TUAM, a par. in the bar. of Clare, in the co. of Galway, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 3 miles to the S.W. of Tuam. It contains the hill of Knockma, which commands a fine view. There is a large extent of bog in the district. The living is a vic. united with that of Tuam, in the dioc. of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. A Franciscan monastery was founded here at the close of the 13th century.

BELCOO, a vil. in the par. of Bohoe, and bar. of Clanawley, in the co. of Fermanagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 9 miles to the W. of Enniskillen. It is situated near the borders of Leitrim and Cavan, between Lough Macnean and Neilly. Fairs are held here on the 5th April, June, and August, the 6th October, and the 26th November.

BELFAST BARONY, UPPER and LOWER, two of the 14 bars. or subdivisions of the co. of Antrim, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, situated in the south-east part of the county. It is bounded on the N.E. by the North Channel, on the S.E. by Belfast Lough and the co.

Down, and on the W. and N.W. by the bars. of Upper and Lower Massareene, Upper Antrim, and Upper Glenarm. The Lower Barony contains the pars. of Ballylinny, Raymore, Ballyrobert Grange, Ballywalter Grange, Carmoney, Glynn, Inver, Island Magee, Kilroot, Mollusk Grange, Raloo, Templecorran, with parts of the pars. of Raymartin, Belfast, or Shankill, and Templepatrick. The bar. includes an area of about 56,093 acres. The Upper Barony contains the pars. of Umgall Grange, with parts of those of Ballymartin, Derryaghy, Drumbeg, Lisbeg, Shankill, or Belfast, and Templepatrick, and has an area of about 35,898 acres.

BELFAST, a seaport, post, and market town; a municipal and parliamentary borough, and head of a Poor-law Union, in the par. of Belfast or Shankill, in the bars. of Upper and Lower Belfast, in the co. of Antrim, with the suburb of Ballymacarrett, in the par. of the same name, in the co. of Down, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 14 miles to the S.E. of Antrim, or 22 miles by railway, and 101 miles to the N. of Dublin, or 112 miles by railway. It is situated at the south extremity of Belfast Lough, at the mouth of the river Lagan, in 54° 36′ N. lat. and 5° 55′ W. long. Belfast is the principal commercial town in Ireland, the capital of the prov. of Ulster, and now the county town of Antrim, in place of Carrickfergus, which formerly held that rank. As early as the 12th century a fortified station appears to have existed near the mouth of the river Lagan, and before the commencement of the 14th century a town must have grown up here, for in 1316 the town and castle were attacked and destroyed by Edward Bruce. The place was not recovered by the English for about two centuries. In the reign of Henry VIII. the town and castle were granted to Hugh Mac Nial Oge on certain conditions, which being violated by the O'Nials, in the reign of James I., they reverted to the crown. In 1604 they were conferred on Sir Arthur Chichester, then lord-deputy. From this period the town began to rise rapidly into importance, and by the year 1611 had acquired sufficient wealth to obtain from James I. a charter of incorporation, erecting it into a municipal and parliamentary borough, having the privilege of sending two members to the Irish parliament; 26 years later, on the breaking up of the port monopolies of Carrickfergus, it became the principal commercial entrepôt of the British Plantation in Ulster, and the seat of the custom-house. Its progress and improvement were suspended by the Civil War, in which the inhabitants took first the side of the parliament, and subsequently that of the king. They were mostly Presbyterians, and the expression of their feeling on the execution of Charles drew from Milton a severe reply. Belfast warmly espoused the cause of the Prince of Orange, and proclaimed him king. He spent some days here before his march to the Boyne, and was so well satisfied with his reception that he granted £1,200 per annum from the offers of the State to the Presbyterian ministers of Ulster. This was the origin of the larger endowment called the Regium Donum.—Belfast stands on an extensive level tract on the western bank of the river Lagan, where it falls into Belfast Lough. It is not more than a few feet above high-water mark, and was once a mere marsh, frequently covered by the river. The situation is considered healthy, and the surrounding scenery is beautiful and diversified. The valley of the Lagan is bounded to the westward by a fine range of hills, some of which rise to the height of 1,000 feet. Divis, a mountain on the north-west, is above 1,500 feet in height. The neighbourhood of the town, both along the shores of the lough, and the banks of the river, as well as up the sides of the hills, is adorned with numerous villas and residences, gardens, and pretty villages. The general aspect of the town bespeaks activity and prosperity, and the number of fine mansions and villas in the vicinity attest the wealth and taste of the inhabitants, though, from its low situation, it cannot be considered as striking. There are many spacious and handsome streets, squares, and terraces, with numerous public buildings, testifying, not only the mercantile importance of the place, but its connections with science, literature, art, and education. It is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water.—The Lagan is crossed by three bridges,—one called the Queen's bridge, a short distance above the mouth of the river, connecting the town with the suburb of Ballymacarrett. It is a handsome structure of five arches, and was erected in 1841 on the site of a bridge of 21 arches, built in 1686, which had become unsafe, and was taken down. The breadth of the river is here about 250 yards, and the new bridge cost £27,000. Higher up, and connecting the south quarter of the town with the neighbouring county, is New bridge, which was built in 1831. Outside the town, in the suburb of Malone, the river is crossed by a third bridge. The mercantile quarter of the town lies on and near the quays; the manufacturing quarter is that on the north and west sides of the town; and the principal commercial establishments are in High-street, Bridge-street, Donegal-place, and their vicinity. The quays extend about a mile below Queen's bridge, and consist of Custom-house quay, Chichester quay, Limekiln dock, Donegal quay, Ritchie's dock, the Ballast Corporation dock, the Clarendon dock, and Dunbar's dock. The principal street is High-street, leading to High-street dock. It is the oldest and one of the most spacious streets in the town. Castle-place is its continuation. Donegal-place, a range of handsome buildings, leads from High-street to Donegal-square, the site of the White Linen Hall, a spacious building erected in 1785. Half a mile westward is College-square. The Commercial-buildings, a spacious block of houses at the south end of Donegal-street, have a granite front with eight Ionic columns, and comprise a hotel, a news-room, an assembly-room, and various offices. The news-room is also used as an exchange. The buildings were erected in 1822, at a cost of above £20,000. Opposite this pile is the Old Exchange, lately reconstructed, and converted into a banking-house. The custom-house, a handsome structure of stone, recently erected, in the Italian style, stands on Donegal quay, along which is a spacious esplanade nearly a quarter of a mile in length, where the steam navy and West India traders of the port have their station. From Donegal and College squares, the leading roads southward conduct to the new town of Malone, which stands on rising ground, between the Old Dublin-road and the river. The prominent feature in this district is the new Queen's College, a beautiful and picturesque pile of brick and stone, in the Tudor collegiate style, which occupies a commanding site, in the midst of villas and park scenery, adjoining the Botanic Gardens. The barracks, accommodating a regiment of infantry and a troop of horse, are on the high grounds north of the town. Westward of the barracks are the gaol and the court-house, both of recent erection; the former a handsome pile, covering five acres, and arranged on the separate principle; the latter a fine edifice, with a Corinthian portico. The theatre is in Arthur-street; the house of correction in Howard-street; the natural history museum and the Royal Academical Institution are in College-square. In the same neighbourhood is the Union poorhouse. The terminus of the Ulster railway is in the New Dublin-road, near College-square; that of the Belfast and Ballymena, in York-street; and that of the Belfast and County Down, at Ballymacarrett. There is a branch line to Carrickfergus, and also a short line to Holywood. At Portadown the Ulster railway crosses the Dublin and Belfast Junction line. The Lagan navigation connects Belfast with Lough Neagh and the Ulster canal and Newry canal, by a line of water carriage of 28½ miles. The staple business of Belfast is the linen and cotton manufactures, of which it is the principal seat in Ireland, the former introduced in 1808, and the latter in 1777. To form a just estimate of the importance of these manufactures, it should be remembered that only a century ago, in 1760, the population of Belfast was under 9,000, and that there are now above 18,000 persons engaged in spinning linen yarn alone, which is carried on in about 30 steam-mills. All varieties of linen, damasks, sheetings, diapers, &c., are made here, and are justly celebrated for their durability and excellence. There are five extensive cotton-mills, in which velvets, fustians, jeans, ticking, ginghams, calico, muslins, &c., are manufactured. The flax-spinning manufacture has grown into great importance, employing now, in the town and its vicinity, 500,000 spindles. Calico-printing, bleaching, and dyeing are carried on on a large scale. There are 10 or 12 bleach-grounds within the parish. Other large and important establishments are the iron-foundries and manufactories for machinery, chemical works, glass-works, distilleries, extensive breweries, flour-mills, tanneries, &c. The making of ropes and sailcloth also employs many persons. Shipbuilding was introduced about 1792, and has grown into an important branch of business, carried on in five ship-yards.—The port of Belfast, now ranking second in Ireland, was subordinate to Carrickfergus till nearly the middle of the 17th century. In 1700 there were not more than five vessels of small burden belonging to it, and its customs amounted, several years later, to not more than £1,200. In 1786 the commerce had increased to 772 vessels entered inwards and outwards, with an aggregate tonnage of 34,287 tons. After the establishment of the linen manufacture its trade rapidly increased; and the introduction of steamboats, about 1824, gave it still further extension. Since 1835 there is no accurate return of the value of the imports and exports, but in that year the imports were £3,695,438, and the exports were £4,341,794. They are now probably double; and the number of vessels registered as belonging to the port vary in the last ten years from 450 to 460, with an average tonnage of 80,000 tons. The foreign commerce is chiefly with the United States, the Mediterranean, and the Baltic; the colonial, with British North America, West Indies, &c. It has also a very extensive and important coasting and cross-channel trade, about 30 steamers being regularly engaged in plying between Belfast and the chief ports of Great Britain. The imports consist principally of linen yarn, woollens, cotton, coals, flax-seed, hemp, tallow, timber, &c.; and the exports, of corn, flour, linen and cotton manufactured goods, provisions, eggs, flax, &c.—The lough, about 12 miles in length, 6 miles broad at the entrance, and having an average breadth of 4 miles, forms one of the safest and best harbours in the world. The port and harbour are under the management of a corporation constituted in 1831, when the old Ballast Board was abolished. Great improvements have been made in the harbour by the formation of docks and quays, and by cutting a deep channel from the quays to Garmoyle, 3 miles distant. In this cut, which is 200 yards wide, there is never less than 9 feet of water; and at high water of spring tides, vessels drawing 18 feet can approach the quays. In the process of deepening the channel, three islands have been formed; the largest, named Queen's Island, has been planted and laid out in public walks, and a building of iron and glass erected within it for holding bazaars, &c. A lighthouse has also been erected at Garmoyle; it is of wood, and is supported on piles about 30 feet above the level of high water. Donaghadee and Larne are subordinate ports to Belfast. A magnificent building for the Harbour Commissioners' offices has been erected, in the Italian style, with a fine tower, fronting the Clarendon dock.—Under the Reform Act the borough is divided into five wards or municipal districts, and is governed by a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors. It returned two members to the Irish Parliament from 1613 till the Union; one member to the Imperial Parliament from that time to the passing of the Reform Act, since which it has returned two. The suburb of Ballymacarrett, in the county of Down, is included within the limits of the borough, which comprises, according to the census of 1851, 18,166 inhabited houses, with a population of 119,718, of whom 29,391 are returned as belonging to the Established Church; 40,709 are Roman Catholics; 43,295 Presbyterians; 4,918 Methodists; 356 Independents; 205 Baptists; 218 are of the Society of Friends; 11 Jews; and 269 of other denominations.—A committee, appointed by the corporation, has the management of the paving, lighting, and cleansing of the town. The water-works are under the control of an incorporated company. Belfast is a coastguard and chief police station, the head-quarters of the north military district and of the county militia, and the head of a Poor-Law Union and of custom and excise districts. The assizes, formerly held at Carrickfergus, have been held here since 1850. Quarter sessions for the county are held here in rotation with four other towns. Petty sessions for the borough are held daily, and general sessions once a quarter. Nine weekly newspapers are published in the town. Belfast gives the titles of earl and baron to the Chichesters, Marquises of Donegal.—The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Down, Connor, and Dromore, of the val. of £504, in the patronage of the Marquis of Donegal. The parish church, which stands in Donegal-street, was built in 1778 by the Marquis of Donegal, and is dedicated to St. Anne. It is of Grecian architecture, with a tower, cupola covered with copper, and a wooden spire. The old portico has been removed, and a new one erected, not in harmony with the rest of the building. The living of St. George's is a cur., val. £114, in the patron. of the vicar. The church, situated in High-street, stands on the site of an ancient castle. It is chiefly remarkable for its fine Corinthian portico, originally part of the palace built at Ballyscullion by the Earl of Bristol, Bishop of Derry, and removed hither on the taking down of the palace. The churches of Christ Church, St. Matthew, and St. John, are also curacies, in the patron. of the vicar. There are six other churches of the Establishment.—Belfast is the seat of the Roman Catholic see of Down and Connor, and the residence of the bishop. The cathedral is an elegant structure in the form of a cross, and in the perpendicular style of architecture, is situated on the south side of the town. It is dedicated to St. Malachi. The Roman Catholics have three other places of worship in the town. There are 18 belonging to the Presbyterians, several of which are large and handsome edifices, one to the different sections of Methodists; three to the Unitarians; and others to the Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends, and Mormonites. Belfast is the seat of the presbytery.—The educational, literary, and scientific institutions of Belfast are numerous and important. At their head is the Queen's College, founded under Act passed in 1845, and opened in November, 1849. The buildings are in the Tudor style, and form the chief architectural ornament of the town. They occupy a good situation in the south suburbs, and, with the grounds belonging to them, cover an area of 10 acres. They comprise a large hall, several lecture rooms, laboratory, museum, and library. A botanic garden is connected with the college. The college is under the government of a president and vice-president, with professors in the various departments of arts, medicine, and law. Above 50 scholarships are founded, of which 10 are senior, of £40 each. The Presbyterian College, situated in University-square, is a handsome structure, completed in 1853. The Royal Academical Institution is an elegant pile, occupying one side of College-square, was founded in 1810. Its cost was defrayed by subscriptions, amounting to £25,000. The institution is both a college and a school, and is under the control of a board of managers and visitors. It has about 400 students, and is partly supported by a government grant. The Belfast Academy, in Donegal-street, founded by Dr. Crombie in 1786, is under the management of a principal and trustees, with teachers of the classics, mathematics, logic, history, &c. A model training school has been recently erected in the Falls-road, in the Elizabethan style of architecture. There are also a school of design, many private, and about 30 National schools. The principal literary and scientific institutions are, the Society for promoting Knowledge, founded in 1788, with a good library, &c.; the Literary Society, founded in 1801; the Historic Society, in 1811; the Natural History Society, in 1821, with a good museum; the Botanic Gardens, formed in 1827, by members of the last-named ciety, occupying a pleasant site on the Lagan, in the suburbs of Malone; two medical societies; the Royal Society for the Promotion of the Growth of Flax in Ireland, established in 1841; and the Anacreontic Society, which holds its meetings in the music-hall.—Among the charitable institutions of Belfast are the following:—the Incorporated Poorhouse, for the maintenance of the aged and infirm poor and their children, supported by subscription—the building stands at the head of Donegal-street; the House of Industry, situated in Smithfield; the Fever Hospital and Dispensary, in Frederick-street; the Lying-in Hospital, in the Antrim-road, founded in 1794; the District Lunatic Asylum, on the Falls-road, erected in 1829, a handsome range of buildings with extensive grounds; the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and Blind, erected by subscription in 1845, and situated on the Lisburn-road; the Female Penitentiary, and several other benevolent societies. There is a savings-bank, which was established in 1816.—Within the parish of Belfast are remains of several ancient forts, ramparts, and chapels. At Wolf Hill are some curious caves, cut in the earth, and at Cave Hill are three, cut in the basalt cliff, one above another. On the top of the same hill, 1,140 feet in height, is a rampart called MacArt's Fort. Several cairns are found, two of which are on the Black Mountain, and various relics of ancient times have been discovered near them.—To the south of the town, on the banks of the Lagan, is Ormeau, the seat of the Marquis of Donegal. There are numerous seats of the gentry in the environs of the town.—Belfast was the birthplace of Dr. Black, the distinguished chemist; of Patrick Macdowell, the sculptor; and of Sir J. Emerson Tennent, author of "Ceylon." In this town was printed, in 1704, the first English Bible published in Ireland; and in 1737, the Belfast Newsletter, the oldest newspaper published in the north of Ireland.—The principal market is held on Friday. The market-places are Castle-place, Mary's, and Smithfield. Sales take place in the Brown Linen Hall on Tuesday and Friday. Horse-fairs are held on the 12th August and 9 November, besides a fair on the first Wednesday of each month.

BELFORD, a par. and market town in the northern div. of Bamborough ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 5 miles to the N. of Newcastle, and 322 miles from London by the Great Northern and North-Eastern railways, being a station on the York, Newcastle, and Berwick line. It is situated in a pleasant hilly country on the sea-coast, and contains, besides the town of Belford, the tnshps. of Detchant, Easington, Easington Grange, Elwick, Middleton, and Ross. The town, though situated in a valley, stands on rising ground commanding a good sea view, with Bamborough Castle in the foreground. There are two principal streets, crossed by several smaller ones, the houses being generally neat, though irregularly built. A neat cross adorns the market place, where some business is still transacted, although the market is now almost obsolete. The town is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water. There are collieries, and quarries of limestone and freestone. There is much agreeable scenery in the neighbourhood. Belford is the seat of a Poor-law Union and a County Court district. Petty sessions are held by the county magistrates every alternate Wednesday, and county courts once a month. The living is a perpet. cy.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £147, in the patron. of the Rev. J. D. Clark. The church, erected in 1700, is dedicated to St. Mary. There is one chapel belonging to the United Presbyterians, and one to the Scotch Church. There are National and Sunday schools. The principal mansion is Belford Hall, the seat of the Rev. J. D. Clark, to whom the manor belongs. On one of the hills in the vicinity are some ruins of an ancient chapel. There is an ancient encampment about a mile from the town, of a square form, with a ditch and double rampart. The parish has several mineral springs, and extends into the hundred of Islandshire, until recently considered a detached part of the county palatine of Durham, but now united to Northumberland. The Duke of Montrose takes from this place the title of Earl Graham of Belford. The market, chiefly for corn, is held on Wednesday. Fairs are held on the Tuesday before Whit-Sunday, the 2nd July, the 23rd August, and the 25th September, for sheep and cattle. Annual races take place in September.

BELGOLY, a vil. in the bar. of Kinalea, in the co. of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 7 miles to the E. of Kinsale.

BELGRAVE, a par. and vil. partly in the eastern, partly in the western, div. of the hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 2 miles to the N.E. of Leicester, its post town. It is situated on the banks of the river Soar, and contains the chplries. of Birstall and South Thurmaston. The Syston and Peterborough branch of the Midland railway runs through the parish. The old Fosse Way also ran by it. Many of the workpeople are employed in the manufacture of hosiery and bricks. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, of the val. with the cur. of Birstall, which is annexed to it, of £146, in the patron. of the Bishop of Lichfield. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It is in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a Norman doorway, and contains an old font and several monuments. The Wesleyans, Baptists, and Primitive Methodists have chapels here; there are also National and infant schools. The parochial charities, including the townlands, which produce £90, are of the annual value of £126. This place is in the honour of Tutbury, in the Duchy of Lancaster, Belgrave gives the title of viscount to the Marquis of Westminster. The Bishop of Lichfield and Isaac Harrison, Esq., are joint lords of the manor.

BELHAVEN, a vil. in the par. of Dunbar, in the co. of Haddington, Scotland. It is pleasantly situated about 1 mile W. of the town of Dunbar, on a small bay of the same name, on the south coast of the Frith of Forth, at the mouth of Beil Water, and is frequented as a watering place. The Hamiltons, of Wishaw Castle, in Lanarkshire, take from Belhaven the title of baron.

BELHELVIE, a par. in the district and co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 8 miles to the N. of Aberdeen. It is situated on the sea-coast, not far from the mouth of the river Ythan, and contains a serpentine rock called Portsoy marble, which is quarried at Milldens. The living, val. £180, is in the presb. of Aberdeen, and in the patron. of the crown. There is also a Free church at Belhelvie, and an United Presbyterian church at Shiel. On occasion of the trigonometrical survey of Scotland, a narrow strip of level pasture land extending along this coast was selected for the measurement of the base line of 5 miles and 100 feet in length.

BELL BUSK, a hmlt. in the par. of Gargrave, wap. of Staincliffe and Ewcross, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 4 miles to the W. of Skipton. It is a station on the Skipton, Settle, and Lancaster railway.

BELL, or INCHCAPE, ROCK, a dangerous reef or sunken rock off the east coast of Scotland. It lies nearly opposite the mouth of the river Tay, distant about 11 miles to the N.E. of Fifeness, in Fifeshire, and nearly the same distance to the S.E. of Arbroath, in Forfarshire, and 30 N.W. of St. Abb's Head, in the track of vessels entering the friths of Forth and Tay. It is about 2,000 feet in length, and 110 yards in breadth, and has 12 feet of water on it at high water. It long formed a serious obstruction to the navigation of the Frith of Tay, and was the occasion of many shipwrecks. The tradition of the bell suspended from the rock by the benevolent abbot of Arbroath (Aberbrothick), and rung by the movement of the waters, of its severance by the malicious practical jest of the Dutch sea rover, and of the retribution which at last came down on his own head, is graphically embodied in the well-known ballad of the poet Southey. Between the years 1807 and 1811 a lighthouse, similar in principle to the Eddystone, was erected on this rock. It is a circular building 115 feet in height, 42 feet in diameter at the base, and 13 feet at the top. The base is a solid mass of masonry for about 30 feet from the rock upwards, half of which is below high-water mark. The light is alternately bright and red, with intervals of darkness, and is visible at a distance of 14 miles. The machinery by which the revolution of the light is effected is also employed in tolling two bells during foggy weather. These bells weigh above half a ton each, and their warning tones are audible to a great distance. The Bell Rock lighthouse stands in 56° 26′ N. lat., and 2° 23′ W. long.

BELLAGHY, a vil. in the par. of Ballyscullion and bar. of Loughinsholin, in the co. of Londonderry, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 35 miles to the E. of Londonderry. It is pleasantly seated near the western shore of Lough Beg, and was the site of a fort erected by the Vintners' Company, to whom the district was granted by James I. The castle was burnt in 1642. The parish church stands near the village, and there are chapels belonging to the Wesleyans and Presbyterians. There are several seats in the vicinity, of which the principal are Bellaghy House and Bellaghy Castle. Fairs for the sale of cattle are held in the village every month.

BELLAGHY, a vil. in the par. of Achonry, and bar. of Leyney, in the co. of Sligo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 24 miles to the S.W. of Sligo. A police force is stationed here. A market is held on Wednesday, and fairs take place monthly.

BELLAVALLY, a vil. in the bar. of Gallen, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 6 miles to the N.E. of Castlebar. It is situated on the banks of the river Moy. Fairs are held here on the 29th of May, the 17th of August, and the 14th of November.

BELLBANK, a tnshp. in the par. of Bewcastle, Eskdale ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 9 miles to the N. of Brampton. It is situated in a hilly district on the confines of Northumberland, near the Line river, a branch of the Esk. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the collieries and iron-works.

BELLBANK, a tnshp. in the par. of Stapleton, Eskdale ward, in the co. of Cumberland, 7 miles to the N. of Brampton. It is near the river Line.

BELLCHALWELL, a par. in the hund. of Cranborne, West Shaston div. of the co. of Dorset, 4 miles S.E. from Sturminster Newton, and 8 miles to the N.W. of Blandford. It lies in a detached part of the hund. locally in the North Blandford div. of the county. The living is a rect. united with that of Fitchead Northcote, in the dioc. of Salisbury. The church has a fine Norman porch and a square tower. A little to the south is Bell Hill, from which a fine view is obtained of the surrounding country.

BELLEAU, a par. in the hund. of Calcewerth, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 4 miles to the N.W. of Alford, its post town. It takes its name, signifying "fine water," from a good spring rising from a chalk hill. Claythorpe is a chapelry of this parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. with the vic. of Aby, which is annexed to it, £300, in the patronage of Lord Willoughby d'Eresby. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Sir Harry Vane had a seat here.

BELLEEK, or BALEEK, a vil. in the par. of Lurgilly, and bar. of Upper Orior, in the co. of Armagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 4 miles to the W. of Newtownhamilton. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, of the val. of £191, in the patronage of the Incumbent of Loughgilly.

BELLEEK, a par. in the bar. of Lurg, in the co. of Fermanagh, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 5 miles to the E. of Ballyshannon, and 21 miles to the N.W. of Enniskillen. It is situated in a mountainous district at the western extremity of Lough Erne. Limestone is found in abundance, and there is a considerable extent of bog. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Armagh and Clogher, val. £174, in the patron. of the archbishop. There is a Roman Catholic chapel. Petty sessions are held, and a police force is situated in the village. The principal seats are Castle Caldwell and Mughramena. The parish contains ruins of an abbey, and a church, and traces of some Danish forts. Fairs are held on the 3rd February, the 17th March, the 17th May, the 20th June, and the 10th October.

BELL-END, a hmlt. about 1 mile N.E. of the vil. of Belbroughton, in the hund. of Halfshire, in the co. of Worcester. It is situated under the Clent hills, about 2 miles to the south of Stourbridge railway station. Here are the ruins of an ancient chapel. Bell Hall is the principal residence.

BELLERBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Spennithorne, wap. of Hang, in the North Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N. of Leyburn. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £78, in the patron. of J. C. Chaytor, Esq., to whom the manor belongs. Bellerby Park is the seat of the Chaytors.

BELLESTER. See BELLISTER, Northumberland.

BELLEWSTOWN, a vil. in the bar. of Upper Duleek, in the co. of Meath, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles from Duleek. It is not far from the sea-coast. There is a lofty hill near the village, bearing the same name, and rising to the height of 530 feet. Races take place annually in July, on a course near the hill.

BELL-HOUSES, a hmlt. in the par. of Ecclesfield, wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 5 miles from Rotherham.

BELLIE, a par. partly in the co. of Elgin, and partly in that of Banff, Scotland, 20 miles to the W. of Banff, and 138 miles to the N. of Edinburgh. It is situated in a fertile and beautiful district on the sea-coast, to the east of the river Spey, and contains the town of Fochabers, in Morayshire, and the vil. of Auchindhalrig, in Banffshire. The surface consists chiefly of pasture lands, and suffered materially from the inundation of the Spey in 1829. Some of the inhabitants are engaged in the salmon fisheries. The living, of the val. of £174, is in the presb. of Strathbogie, and in the patron. of the Duke of Richmond. There are two Free churches, one for the district of Lochabers, and the other for that of Enzie. There are also at Lochabers an Episcopalian chapel and a Roman Catholic chapel; besides a Roman Catholic chapel at Auchinhalrig. The Duke of Cumberland rested a night in the manse of Bellie, on his way to Culloden. Near Fochabers is Gordon Castle, the magnificent seat of the Duke of Richmond, to whom the parish chiefly belongs. The parish extends above 5 miles in length from N. to S., with an average breadth of 3 miles.

BELLIEUSE, a vil. in the par. of St. Martin, in the isl. of Guernsey, Channel Islands. It is near St. Martin's Point.

BELLINA, a vil. in the bar. of Moyarta, in the co. of Clare, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 8 miles from Kilrush.

BELLINGDON, a hmlt. in the par. of Chesham, hund. of Burnham, in the co. of Buckingham, 2 miles to the N. of Chesham.

BELLINGHAM, a par. and market town in the north-western div. of Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 36 miles to the N.W. of Newcastle by railway, and 56 from Carlisle. The Border Counties section of the North British railway passes a little to the north of the town, and a new line from Hexham is at the point of completion. The parish lies on both sides of the North Tyne river, which is here crossed by a fine stone bridge of four arches. It comprises the townships of Bellingham, Charlton East, Charlton West, Lowailing, the Nook, and Tarretburn. It formed, until 1858, part of the parish of Simonburn, which was then divided under an Act of Parliament into six separate parishes and a chapelry.—Coal, limestone, and iron-ore abound in this district; for the smelting of the latter there are extensive blast furnaces, but they have not been worked since 1847. The engine for supplying the blast was of 60-horse power, and was worked by water from a neighbouring reservoir. There are also extensive tile works and coke ovens. Along the east side of the town runs the Hareshaw Burn, in a rocky glen, the sides of which rise to the height of 300 feet. The rivulet runs over a fall of 33 feet at Hareshaw-linn, forming a charming waterfall about 1 mile east of the town.—The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Durham, of the val. of £204, in the patron. of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The church, a small ancient edifice of the middle of the 13th century, is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. It stands on high ground by the river, and was twice destroyed by fire during the border wars. When rebuilt the third time, the nave was formed entirely of stone, without any woodwork; and the roof, which is finely groined, is an object of great interest, being the only one of the kind in the United Kingdom. On the north side is a Saxon doorway, and in the chancel are some gravestones sculptured with swords and other implements of war. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics and United Presbyterians. One of the schools in the town (Reid's charity school) has a small private endowment, which is in trust of the rector and churchwardens. A new town-hall was built in 1862 for communal purposes. The North Tyne and Redesdale Agricultural Society hold their annual meetings here in October.—Bellingham is the seat of a Poor-law Union, and the head of a County Court district.—At Hall Field, near the town, formerly stood the castle of the Bellinghams, who held the manor at an early period. On the attainder of the Earl of Derwentwater, in 1715, the manor, which at that time belonged to him, was granted to the governors of Greenwich Hospital, who subsequently sold it to the Duke of Northumberland. In the vicinity of the town are numerous remains of ancient circular earthworks and fortifications. Nearly opposite the town is Hesleyside, the seat of the Charltons since the reign of Edward VI. The mansion is finely situated near the wooded hills, and commands a wide and beautiful prospect. It is a meet for the Tindale hounds. Saturday is the market day, which is now nearly obsolete. Fairs are held on the third Saturdays in July, August, and October, and statute fairs on the first Wednesday before Good Friday, and the Saturdays before the 12th May and 11th November. On the first Saturday after the 15th September is held the grand fair, called St. Cuthbert's; which is opened with great ceremony, popularly designated "riding the fair." The par. of Bellingham comprises an area of 20,211 acres, a large part of which is moorland, abounding in game, and known by the name of Hareshaw Common; but in 1856, a bill was procured for its enclosure, when new roads to the extent of about 17 miles were formed, in various directions, to the great accommodation of the inhabitants and the improvement of the district.

BELLISTER, or BELLESTER, a tnshp. in the par. of Haltwhistle, Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 1 mile from Haltwhistle. It is situated on the banks of the South Tyne. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway passes near it. On a lofty mound are the ruins of Bellister Castle, surrounded by a moat, and formerly the seat of the Blenkinsops. The country around is pleasant and wooded. At the small village of Park, which is situated within this township, there is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, built in 1830.

BELLMANGATE, a hmlt. in the par. of Guisborough, lib. of Langbaurgh, in the North Riding of the co. of York, not far from Guisborough.

BELLSHILL, a vil. in the par. of Bothwell, in the co. of Lanark, Scotland, 9 miles to the S.E. of Glasgow. Here is an United Presbyterian church, and a Congregational chapel. Many of the inhabitants are colliers or iron workers. The Caledonian railway runs to the south of the village.

BELL'S MILLS, a vil. in the suburbs of the city of Edinburgh, Scotland. It is seated on the banks of Leith Water, and is the site of several extensive flour-mills.

BELL'S QUARRY, a vil. in the par. of Mid Calder, in the co. of Edinburgh, Scotland, 2 miles W. from the town of Mid Calder. The Caledonian railway passes near it.

BELLSTOWN, a vil. in the par. of Methven, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 5 miles to the N.W. of Perth. It is near the river Almond.

BELLYCLONE, a vil. in the par. of Maderty, in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 4 miles from Crieff. It is situated near the river Earn.

BELMISTHORPE, a hmlt. in the par. of Ryhall, hund. of East, in the co. of Rutland, 2 miles to the N. of Stamford.

BELMONT, a hmlt. in the par. of Bolton-le-Moors, hund. of Salford, in the co. palatine of Lancaster, 4 miles from Chorley. The living is a perpet. cur., of the val. of £120, in the patron. of the Vicar of Bolton.

BELMONT, a district par. contiguous to Durham, in Easington ward, in the co. of Durham. It was formed in 1842 out of the extensive par. of St. Giles, and includes the vils. of Broomside, Carr Ville, and Gilesgate Moor, or, as it is commonly called, "Gilligate." This latter place is a suburb of Durham, and enjoys the liberties of the city. At Belmont there is a goods station on the York, Newcastle, and Berwick line of railway, with a branch to Durham. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £150, in the gift of the crown and bishop alternately. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is in the early decorated style of architecture, and was erected in 1857. It is pleasantly situated near the village of Broomside, where there is also a Wesleyan chapel. The Marchioness of Londonderry is lay rector and impropriator. The principal residences in the par. are Belmont Hall, Ravensthat, and the Grange. At the village of Broomside an extensive and rich seam of the Hatton's coal is worked, belonging to the Marchioness of Londonderry.

BELMULLET, a vil. and seaport in the par. of Kilcommon, and bar. of Erris, in the co. of Mayo, prov. of Connaught, Ireland, 40 miles to the N.W. of Ballina. It is seated on an isthmus, between the bays of Broad Haven on the N. and Blacksod on the S., connecting the Mullet peninsula with the main-land. The inhabitants are partly employed in fishing, and partly in the corn trade. There is a convenient quay and large warehouses. Belmullet is a police station, the head of a Poor-law Union, and of a coastguard district. The principal residence is Bingham Castle. Fairs are held on the 15th of each month.

BELPER, a chplry. and market town in the par. of Duffield, and hund. of Appletree, in the co. of Derby, 7 miles to the N. of Derby, and 139 miles from London by the Midland and North-Western railways, on the former of which there is a neat and commodious station. It is situated in a pleasant district, on the banks of the river Derwent, which is crossed by two bridges, one of three arches, built in 1795, in the town, and another of two arches, lower down the river. Belper contains above 10,000 inhabitants, and is now one of the busiest and most thriving towns in Derbyshire, being second only in population to the county town. It has risen to its present importance since the year 1777, up to which time it was only a small village, whose inhabitants were mostly employed in nailmaking. In that year a cotton factory was established here by Messrs. Strutt. The manufacture rapidly extended, and before the breaking out of the American civil war was carried on in five mills, giving employment to above 2,000 hands. These cotton-mills were inspected by her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent in 1832. Belper is also the seat of very extensive establishments for the manufacture of hosiery, both of silk and cotton. Four or five thousand persons are engaged in this manufacture, who work mostly in their own homes, to supply the firms of Messrs. Ward and Co. and Messrs. Brottee and Co., who have very extensive hosiery warehouses, and carry on a large export trade in gloves, stockings, vests, and pantaloons. There are machine-making establishments connected with Messrs. Strutt's mills. Other important branches of industry are the manufacture of nails and of brown earthenware. Coal is found in small quantities near the town.—The town is irregularly built. It consists of several streets, chiefly of modern erection, intersected by the Midland Counties railway, which passes through the centre of the town, and divides it into two districts or ecclesiastical parishes. Many pleasant residences, with garden and orchard grounds, adorn the neighbourhood, and many of the houses are built of stone. The town is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water by the new water-works company, established in 1860. It is a polling place for the county elections, and petty sessions are held weekly. Belper is the head of a Poor-law Union, comprising 35 parishes and townships, and of a County Court district.—The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, of the val. of £240, in the patron. of the Vicar of Duffield. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It is a spacious edifice, capable of holding 1,400 persons, in the perpendicular style of architecture, with a fine tower surmounted by pinnacles, and stands on a hill overlooking the town. It was erected by a parliamentary grant in 1824, at a cost of more than £12,000, and contains a fine organ, built by Holt of Leeds, as also a peal of six bells of cast steel, erected in 1861 by Messrs. Naylor, Vickers, and Co. of Sheffield. The stone of which it is built (Hungerhill sandstone) is, it is said, already beginning to decay. Another church, called Christ Church, was erected in 1850 at Bridge Hill, which now forms one of the new parishes for ecclesiastical purposes, the living of which is a perpet. cur.,* of the val. of £150, in the alternate patron. of the crown and the Bishop of Lichfield. The ancient church, erected by John of Gaunt, is still standing, and is used as a Sunday-school. There are six other places of worship, belonging to the Baptists, Wesleyans, Unitarians, Primitive Methodists, and Reformers. A National school was established in 1849, in which several hundred children are instructed.—There is a large school for the children of the factory people, and two other schools. The charitable endowments, which include the revenue of several almshouses, amount to £67 per annum. The town has a library, and the Union workhouse, which latter is a handsome stone building in the Elizabethan style, situated on the road to Derby. At the distance of 1 mile from the town is the cemetery opened in 1859. In the vicinity may still be traced the foundations of the ancient seat of John of Gaunt, who had a park and mansion here.—Bridge Hill, a pleasant seat on the river, is the residence of one of the Strutt family. The neighbourhood abounds in minerals, as ironstone, lead ore, limestone, &c., which are partly worked. The market is held on Saturday, and there are the 12th May and the 31st October, for the sale of cattle and horses, and a statute fair on the 1st November for hiring servants.

BELPH, a hmlt. in the par. of Whitwell, and hund. of Scarsdale, in the co. of Derby, 10 miles to the E. of Chesterfield.

BELSAY, a tnshp. in the par. of Bolam, Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 9½ miles to the S.W. of Morpeth, and 13 N.W. from Newcastle. It is situated on the turnpike road leading from Newcastle to Jedburgh, near a small river, a branch of the Blyth. The village consists of one handsome terrace of stone houses, with a piazza in front, called the Arcade. It has a school, with master's residence, built at the charge of Sir C. M. Monck, Bart., and wherein Divine service is performed by the vicar of the parish on Sunday afternoons. Belsay Hall is a modern mansion, in the Grecian style of architecture, the seat of Sir C. Monck, Bart., who is also the manor. It stands in a pleasant situation, near the remains of an old castle which was the seat of the Middleton family from a remote period. Sir C. Monck is the present representative of that family, is descended on the mother's side from the grand-daughter of Wm. ... The village is a meet for the Tindale hounds.

BELSFORD, a hmlt. in the par. of Harberton, hund. of Coleridge, in the co. of Devon, near Totnes.

BELSTEAD, a par. in the hund. of Samford, in the co. of Suffolk, 4 miles to the S.W. of Ipswich, its post-town. The Eastern Union railway runs through the par. and has a station at Bentley, about two miles to the S. of the village, which is a small straggling place. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. £370, in the patron. of the Rev. E. J. Lockwood. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a tablet to the memory of Admiral Sir Robert Harland. The register dates from the year 1539. There is a small chapel belonging to the Independents, and a new rectory house, built by the present rector. Lady Harland is lady of the manor.

BELSTONE, a par. in the hund. of Black Torrington, in the co. of Devon, 2 miles N.E. from Okehampton, its post town, 10 S. from Hatherleigh, and 14 S.W. from the Copplestone station of the North Devon railway. It is watered by the rivers Taw and Okement, which have their rise a little to the southward, in Dartmoor, and flow into Barnstaple Bay. Copper was formerly obtained here. The village is situated near the old road from Exeter to Cornwall, on the verge of Dartmoor Forest. There is a serge manufactory, and woollen weaving is carried on by some of the villagers. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £151, in the patron. of the Rev. H. G. Fothergill, incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure of granite, in the mixed Anglo-Saxon and Norman styles, with a tower surmounted by battlements and pinnacles. The trustees of the late Lord Rolle are lords of two-thirds of the manor, and chief owners of the land, which is loamy.

BELTINGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Herne, hund.

Isangate, and lathe of St. Augustine, in the co. of Int, 6 miles to the N.E. of Canterbury.

BELTINGHAM, a small vil. in the par. of Haltwistle, Tindale ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 4 miles to the E. of Haltwhistle, on the Newcastle and Carlisle railway, which has a station at the neighbouring village of Greenhead. It is seated on the south bank of the Tyne, not far from Ridley Hall, and was formerly a market town. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £76, in the patron. of the Vicar of Haltwistle. The churchyard contains a yew-tree of venerable age. The church is a neat, unpretending building. There is a National school belonging to this township.

BELTISLOE WAPENTAKE, one of the 9 waps. or subdivisions of the parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, situated in the southern div. of the county, is bounded on the N. by the waps. of Winnibriggs and Threo, on the E. by the wap. of Aveland, on the S. by the wap. of Ness and the co. of Rutland, and on the W. by the soke of Grantham and the co. of Leicester. It contains the pars. of Bassingthorpe, Bitchfield, Burte-Coggles, Little Bytham, Castle Bytham, Careby, Corby, Creeton, Edenham, Gunby, Irnham, Lavington, Sallington, Stainby, Swayfield, Swinstead, Witham-on-the-Hill, North Witham and South Witham, with part of the par. of Colsterworth. The wap. extends over an area of about 53,470 acres.

BELTOFT, a hmlt. in the par. of Belton, and wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 2 miles from Epworth.

BELTON, a par. and small town in the western div. of the hund. of Goscote, in the co. of Leicester, 6 miles to the W. of Loughborough, its post town, and 4 N.W. from Swannington railway station. It lies near the border of Derbyshire, and contains the liberty of Grace-Dieu, where an Augustine nunnery was founded by Roesia de Verdun, in the reign of Henry III. The revenue of the convent at the Dissolution was £101. The parish is within the bounds of the forest of Charnwood. Some of the inhabitants of the village are employed in making hosiery. The living is a discharged v.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £179, in the patron. of the Marquis of Hastings. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a fine old structure with tower and spire, and contains a monument to the foundress of the convent. The Wesleyan Methodists and General Baptists have chapels here. There are some slight remains of the ancient nunnery. At Grace-Dieu was the seat of the Beaumont family, the birthplace of Judge Beaumont, Francis Beaumont, the dramatist (1586), and Sir John Beaumont, his brother (1602), author of a poem on "Bosworth Field." Attached to the manor-house of Grace-Dieu, which now belongs to the Phillipps family (who have recently assumed the name of De Lisle), is a very fine Gothic chapel, at present used for Roman Catholic service. It has two fine painted windows in the north aisle—one representing the Lord's Supper, the other the legend of St. Elizabeth of Hungary. In the nave are four others representing figures of saints. A large horse fair takes place at Belton on the first Monday after Trinity week; but the market has long been discontinued.

BELTON, a par. in the soke of Grantham, parts of Kesteven, in the co. of Lincoln, 3 miles to the N.N.E. of Grantham, its post town. The par. contains about 180 inhabitants, and about 1,700 acres of land, belonging to Earl Brownlow, except 30 acres of glebe. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the val. of £464, in the patron. of Earl Brownlow. The church, dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, is an ancient building, and has within a good Norman column and arch; the rest of the building is late Gothic. There are many monuments of the Brownlow and Cust families, in particular a figure of Religion, by Canova, to the memory of Sophia, Lady Brownlow; and a recumbent figure of the late Earl Brownlow, by Baron Marochetti. The rectory has a good residence, with 30 acres of glebe, and the present rector is the Hon. and Rev. Richard Cust. In the village is an ornamental cross, a school, and an almshouse for six persons, with a small endowment. Belton House is a large mansion, situated in a deer park, with handsome avenues, and has good gardens and pleasure grounds. The house was built by Sir John Brownlow, Bart., between the years 1685 and 1689, after a design by Sir Christopher Wren, and altered by James Wyatt. The apartments are lofty and well-proportioned, and contain some pictures by Flemish and Italian masters, and many portraits by Lely, Kneller, Reynolds, Romney, &c. In some of the rooms there are wood-carvings by Grinling Gibbons. William III. was a guest at this house in 1695, after the death of his queen. The late possessor, the second baron, was created Viscount Alford and Earl Brownlow in 1815, and dying in 1853, was succeeded by his grandson, the present earl, born in 1842. Many Roman remains have been found in the vicinity of the village.

BELTON, a par. in the western div. of the wap. of Manley, parts of Lindsey, in the co. of Lincoln, 1 mile from Epworth. It lies on the borders of Yorkshire, not far from the river Trent, and includes the hmlts. of Beltoft, Carrhouse, Mosswood, Sandtoft, Westgate, and Woodhouse. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, and in the patron. of J. Brunyee, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a chapel for Wesleyans in the village. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £40 a-year.

BELTON, a par. in the hund. of Oakham-Soke, in the co. of Rutland, 3 miles to the N.W. of Uppingham. The village, which is of considerable extent, is situated on the border of Leicestershire, on the north bank of the river Eye, and within the old bounds of Leighfield forest. There are several good residences near the hall, which is now a farmhouse. The living is a vic. united with the rect. of Wardley, in the dioc. of Peterborough. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure with square embattled tower, and was repaired in 1841. There is a chapel belonging to the Baptists, and a free school for the education of 12 children. The annual value of the parochial charities, including £83, the produce of poor's land, and the endowment of the free school, is about £103. George Finch, Esq., is lord of the manor.

BELTON, a par. in the hund. of Mutford and Lothingland, in the co. of Suffolk, 4 miles to the S.W. of Yarmouth, its post town, and 8 N.W. of Lowestoff. It is situated near the coast, on the east bank of the river Waveney, and is a station on the East Suffolk railway. Brownston is a hmlt. of this par. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, of the val. of £362, in the patron. of the bishop. The tithes are commuted for a rent charge of £440 per annum, with residence and 17 acres of glebe land. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an old building with round tower, which latter was rebuilt in 1849, when the church was repaired. The register dates from the year 1560. There is a National school, and charitable endowments producing £19 per annum. Near the village is Belton Hall. The par. has an area of about 2,059 acres, 674 of which are marsh lands. Sir Samuel Morton Peto, Bart., is lord of the manor.

BELTONFORD, a vil. in the co. of Haddington, Scotland, 2 miles from Dunbar. It is seated on Beltonford-burn, and in the par. of Dunbar.

BELTURBET, a market town and borough, partly in the par. of Armagh, partly in that of Drumlane, in the bar. of Loughtee and co. of Cavan, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 9 miles to the N. of Cavan, and 78 to the N.W. of Dublin. It is situated in a pleasant district on the banks of the river Erne, a few miles from Lough Erne. The river is crossed by a stone bridge of three arches. The town was founded by the Lanesborough family, and received a charter of incorporation from James I. in 1613. From that time till the Union, the borough returned two members to the Irish parliament. It is now under the government of commissioners. A thriving trade is carried on in corn, coals, timber, &c., by the Erne and the Ulster canal. A large number of persons are employed in the extensive distillery and mills belonging to Messrs. Thompson. Petty sessions are held weekly. The parish church of Armagh is in the town. Here are also Roman Catholic and Wesleyan chapels, a market house, county barracks, and a dispensary. Six almshouses for widows were founded in 1733. The Church and cathedral contain some remains of a large font, and in the vicinity are some ecclesiastical ruins. Tuesday is the market day. Fairs are held on Ash Wednesday, the 8th September, and the last Thursday of every other month.

BELVOIR, an ext. par. lib. in the hund. of Framland, in the co. of Leicester, extending also into the co. of Grantham, in the co. of Lincoln, 6 miles S.W. from Grantham, 12 miles to the N.E. of Melton Mowbray, and 4 S. from Bottesford railway station. Belvoir Castle, the seat of the Duke of Rutland, stands on the top of a lofty hill at the extremity of the rich vale of Belvoir, over which it commands a fine prospect. The castle was founded by Robert de Todeni, a Norman noble, standard-bearer to William the Conqueror, who gave him, with many other lordships, that of Belvoir. In the reign of Henry III. it came to Robert de Ross, and in the reign of Henry VIII. passed by marriage into the family of Manners, who have held it ever since. The castle suffered materially during the wars of the Roses, and also during the civil war in the reign of Charles I. James I. was entertained here in 1603, on his way from Scotland to London, by Roger, the fifth earl. It was restored a second time in 1668. In 1814 George IV., then Prince Regent, visited Belvoir, and in remembrance of that visit, one of the towers is named Regent Tower. Alterations were projected in the interior, and were being carried on under the direction of James Wyatt, when, in 1816, a fire broke out and nearly destroyed the castle, excepting the outer walls, which are of freestone. The picture gallery and the grand staircase perished entirely, and the damage was estimated at £120,000. The restoration was completed by Matthew Wyatt, who has rendered the castle one of the finest palaces in England. The Regent's gallery is 127 feet in length, and is stored with valuable works of art. In the picture gallery are works by Nicolas Poussin, Claude, Rubens, Murillo, Reynolds, Gainsborough, &c. The eastern front of the castle is about 250 feet in length, and the ascent to it is by a noble flight of stone steps. Its name was derived from the fair prospect which lay around it. The view extends over the level country for 30 miles, and 174 towns and villages have been counted within the circle of its horizon. It is in the midst of a fine sporting country, and the Belvoir pack of hounds is celebrated. Near the castle, and below it, are some remains of a priory, also founded by Robert de Todeni, about 1076. It was dedicated to St. Mary, and was annexed to the abbey of St. Alban's. At the Dissolution its revenue was £130, and it was given to the Earl of Rutland. The mausoleum on Blackberry Hill was completed in 1828, when the remains of the late Duchess of Rutland, and those of several other members of the duke's family, were removed from the vault at Bottesford church to the mausoleum.

BEMBRIDGE, a chplry. in the par. of Brading, lib. of East Medina, in the Isle of Wight, in the co. of Southampton, 8 miles to the E. of Newport. It is situated in a beautiful spot between Brading harbour and Sandown Bay, at the foot of Bembridge Down, and not far from Culver cliff, a chalk range about 400 feet in height. On the top of Bembridge Down stands the monumental column to the Earl of Yarborough, which is 73 feet high, and was erected in 1849. Off Bembridge Point are several dangerous shrels, marked by buoys, and to the eastward are the Bembridge floating lights, established in 1812. Bembridge is a coastguard station. In the neighbourhood are beds of lignite, fuller's earth, and red ochre. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £100, in the patron. of the Vicar of Brading. The church was opened in 1827. Near the village are Bembridge Farm and Bembridge Lodge.

EN CLYBRIC, or BEINCHLIBRIG, the loftiest mountain in Sutherlandshire, Scotland, between the pars. of Lairg and Farr. It is about 3,200 feet in height.

EN CRUACHAN, a mountain in the Highlands of Scotland, situated in the Lorn district of the co. of Argyll, between Loch Etive on the north-west, and Loch Awe on the south. It has a precipitous and rugged aspect towards the north-east, but slopes gradually downward to the head of Loch Awe. It consists for almost part of granite, and divides near the summit into two abrupt and precipitous peaks, which rise to the height of 3,390 feet. The base of this mountain is about 20 miles in circuit. Natural woods of fir and birch clothe a great part of its sides. The mountain landscape within view from its summit is one of great extent and singular sublimity. It includes Ben Nevis northward, Ben Lawers eastward, and Ben Lomond southward, and a wide irregular expanse of hills between and beyond them. Westward and southward the prospect extends over Loch Etive and Luinbe, the bay of Oban, and the numerous and beautiful islands that stretch along the coast, Islay, Jura, and Mull, and as far as Yree and Coll. Even the remote hills of Rum and Skye are sometimes to be distinguished.

EN HORN, a mountain in the par. of Golspic, Sutherlandshire, Scotland, 1,712 feet in height.

EN LAOIDH, or BENLOY, a mountain between the counties of Perth and Argyle, Scotland. It is remarkable for its elegance of form, and was formerly clothed and adorned with wood.

BEN LAWERS, a mountain in the Highlands of Scotland, situated in the Breadalbane district of the co. of Perth, on the N.W. shore of Loch Tay. It is the loftiest mountain in Perthshire, and one of the loftiest in Scotland. Its form is pyramidal, and the inclination of its sides is so gradual that it is easy to make the ascent on horseback. It consists of mica-slate mixed with quartz, and hornblende-slate. Chlorite-slate is also found in it. This mountain has an elevation of 3,948 feet; and as it rises 1,000 feet higher than any other mountain in its vicinity, the view from its summit is very extensive, even more so than that from Ben Nevis, which is nearly 500 feet higher. A variety of Alpine plants are found growing on the top of Ben Lawers, among which are the small gentian and the round-headed cotton-grass. This mountain was a chief station of the trigonometrical survey of Great Britain.

BEN LEDI, a mountain in the Highlands of Scotland, situated in the co. of Perth, between Loch Katrine on the south-west, and Loch Lubnaig on the north-east. Its name signifies "Hill of God," and is supposed to have been derived from the circumstance that in the earliest ages a temple existed on its summit, to which the people resorted once a year for religious worship. It has an elevation of 2,863 feet, and commands a very wide and striking prospect. The Frith of Forth is seen on the east, the Frith of Clyde and the Isle of Arran on the south-west, while the view northward and westward is bounded by the Grampian ranges. Towering far above all the neighbouring hills, Ben Ledi forms a conspicuous and magnificent object in the scenery for many miles round. There is a small lake on its summit.

BEN LEVEN, the part of Dumbartonshire, Scotland, lying between Loch Lomond and the river Leven on the E., and the Frith of Clyde and Loch Long on the W.

BEN LOMOND, a mountain in the Highlands of Scotland, situated in the co. of Stirling, on the east side of Loch Lomond. It is the principal mountain in the western range of the Grampians, and forms the southern extremity of the Highlands. It is rather an irregular cluster of hills than a single mountain. It consists of granite chiefly, and rises by three successive stages, one above the other, to the height of 3,192 feet above the level of the sea. The surface is clothed with vegetation to the summit. The lower part is wooded, and the higher overgrown with heath and grass. Many Alpine plants flourish on it. On one side it has an almost perpendicular face, forming a precipice of 2,000 feet; on the other side it has a long gradual slope of about 6 miles, and is easily ascended. It considerably overtops all neighbouring hills, and commands a magnificent prospect over the vale of Stirlingshire, and the counties of Lanark, Renfrew, and Ayr; including the river Leven, the castle of Dumbarton; southward the Frith of Clyde with the islands of Bute and Arran, and Ailsa Craig; while eastward, it extends to Stirling and Edinburgh and the Frith of Forth. Grand mountain ranges bound the view to the north. The Isle of Man and the coast of Ireland are sometimes discernible. On Craigrostan, on the west side of the mountain, is the cave in which tradition alleges that Robert Bruce found repose for a night after his contest with Macdougal. Near it is a rock called Rob Roy's prison, and a cave he used to frequent. Ben Lomond was a chief station of the grand trigonometrical survey of Great Britain. The mountain belongs to the Duke of Montrose.

BEN MACDHUI, or BEINN-MUIC-DHUIDH, a mountain in the Highlands of Scotland, situated at the junction of the three cos. of Aberdeen, Banff, and Inverness, 10 miles to the W. of Braemar. It is one of the Cairngorm mountains, a branch of the Grampians. Its height is 4,292 feet, or 100 feet less than that of Ben Nevis. It has been sometimes stated as the highest mountain in Great Britain, but recent experiments have shown that the probable error of the height here given can scarcely amount to 10 feet. Ben Nevis has therefore the advantage by at least 100 feet of height. Like the other great mountains of the same range, it consists chiefly of granite, and has precipitous sides above 1,000 feet high.

BEN MORE, a mountain in Mull, Scotland, 3,100 feet high, commanding a beautiful view over the islands to the W. and S.

BEN MORE, a mountain in the par. of Killin, Perthshire, Scotland, 3,903 feet above the level of the sea.

BEN MORE, a mountain range in the par. of Glenshiel, Ross-shire, Scotland, about 4,000 feet above the sea.

BEN MORE, a mountain range in the par. of Dunoon, Argyleshire, Scotland, with an altitude of about 2,500 feet above the sea.

BEN MORE, or CONVAL, a mountain in the par. of Assynt, Sutherlandshire, Scotland, about 3,230 feet above the sea.

BEN NEVIS, a mountain in the Highlands of Scotland, situated at the south-western extremity of the co. of Inverness, near Fort William and the head of Loch Eil. It rises abruptly from the east side of Loch Eil, to the height of 4,406¼ feet, and is the loftiest mountain in Great Britain, although the Ordnance Survey at one time assigned that distinction to Ben Macdhui. The base of Ben Nevis is about 24 miles in circuit. The mountain, which is very rugged and difficult of ascent, consists in its lower masses of red granite and schistose rocks, in its upper part of fine brown porphyry. It is full of rude ravines, deep glens, and awful precipices; one of the rocks on the east side rises perpendicularly to the height of 1,500 feet. Eagles haunt its crags, and snow lies in some of its hollows all the year through. A streamlet runs along the glen at its southern foot, and a lake lies among its rocks at an elevation of 1,700 feet. The top of the mountain is level, with blocks of rock strewed over it. It is generally wrapt in clouds. When the atmosphere is clear, the prospect from Ben Nevis extends over the greater part of the north of Scotland, from the Atlantic to the German Ocean. The upper half of the mountain is entirely bare of vegetation. Ben Nevis was a chief station of the grand trigonometrical survey of Great Britain, and its height, as ascertained by the spirit-level, is 4,106·31 feet.

BEN NOCHIE, a mountain between the vale of Alford and the district of the Garioch, Aberdeenshire, Scotland, 1,440 feet in height.

BEN REISIPOLL, a mountain in Sunart, Argyleshire, Scotland, 2,700 feet in height.

BEN STACK, a mountain in the par. of Edderachyllis, Sutherlandshire, Scotland, 3,000 feet in height.

BEN VENUE, a mountain in the par. of Aberfoyle, Perthshire, Scotland, to the S. of Loch Katrine.

BEN VOIRLICH, a mountain in the par. of Arrochar, Dumbartonshire, Scotland, near the head of Loch Lomond, 3,180 feet in height.

BEN VOIRLICH, a mountain in the par. of Comrie, Perthshire, Scotland, about 3,300 feet in height.

BEN VRACKY, a mountain in Perthshire, Scotland, between the vale of Athole and the strath of Garry, 2,750 feet above the sea, and commanding a most extensive and beautiful view.

BEN WYVIS, a mountain in the Highlands of Scotland, situated in the co. of Ross, 7 miles to the N.W. of Dingwall. It rises among great mountain masses to the height of 3,422 feet, and is distinctly visible above them as far as Inverness. Its summit is always covered with snow. Once only is it known to have been free: that was in the summer of 1826, a remarkably hot season. The mountain belongs to Sir Hector Monroe, Bart., of Foulis, and is held by the singular tenure of bringing to her Majesty three loads of snow from the summit wheresoever required.

BENACRE. See BINACRE, Suffolk.

BENAISHIN, a tnshp. in the par. of Llanefydd, hund. of Isaled, in the co. of Denbigh, North Wales, 5 miles to the N.W. of Denbigh.

BENBOULE, a vil. in the hund. of Brigg, in the co. of Cornwall, near Wadebridge.

BENBURB, a vil. in the par. of Clonfeacle, and bar. of Dungannon, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 7 miles to the S. of Dungannon. It is seated on the confines of the co. of Armagh, on the north bank of the river Blackwater. The Ulster canal passes near the village, being carried along a cutting 80 feet in depth through the limestone rock, and along a handsome aqueduct over a mill-race. At this place was an ancient stronghold of the O'Nials. Three battles have been fought here; the first in the year 1597, between the English, under the Earl of Kildare, and the Irish, led by the Earl of Tyrone, in which the English were defeated and their leader slain; the second in July, 1[illegible], in which Tyrone was defeated by Lord-Deputy Mountjoy; and the third in June, 1646, between the Irish, under Sir Phelim O'Nial, and the English, under General Monroe, in which the latter were defeated with great slaughter. The village was founded by Sir [illegible] Wingfield, to whom a grant of the place was made by James I. in 1611. Sir Robert also erected a castle on the site of that belonging to the O'Niala. The [illegible] was one of great strength, being the summit of a steep limestone rock, 120 feet in height, overhanging the river. The castle, which was of great size, was dismantled a short time after the defeat of General Monroe. Considerable remains of it exist. Many of the villagers are employed in linen weaving. The extensive linen works established in the village are disused. Limestone is quarried extensively. The Presbyterians have a place of worship here, and the parish church of Clonfeacle stands near the village. Fairs take place once a month.

BENDALL, a vil. in the hund. of Repton, in the co. of Derby, 5 miles to the E. of Burton-on-Trent.

BENDOCHY, a par. in the co. of Perth, Scotland, 5 miles to the N. of Blairgowrie. It is situated in a pastoral district on the banks of the rivers Isla and Ericht, near the Grampian mountains. Its post town is Cupar-Angus. Sandstone is quarried, and blocks of granite, gneiss, &c., are found scattered over the surface. The living, of the val. of £252, is in the presentation of Meigle, and in the patron. of the crown. Several cairns with urns and other ancient relics have been found here.

BENEFIELD, UPPER AND LOWER, a par. in the hund. of Polebrook, in the co. of Northampton, 4 miles to the W. of Oundle, its Union and post town. It lies on the confines of Rockingham Forest. Near the village are a number of singular cavities in the ground called locally the "Swallows," through which the [illegible] floods pass entirely away. The living is a rect.° in the dioc. of Peterborough, of the val. of £531, in the patronage of J. W. Russell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. George. There is a school with a small endowment and other charities, amounting altogether to £46 per annum. The principal residence is Benefield Lodge, the seat of J. W. Russell, Esq., to whom the manor belongs.

BENENDEN, a par. in the hund. of Rolvenden, lath of Scray, in the co. of Kent, 3½ miles to the S.E. of Cranbrooke, and 6 from Tenterden. Staplehurst is the post town. The village is small, and the land is partly laid out in hop grounds. The living is a vic.° in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £212, in the patron. of Gathorne Hardy, Esq. The church, rebuilt in 1672, is dedicated to St. George, and has a tower containing a peal of five bells. There is a dissenting meeting-house, and a free school, founded by Edward Gybbon in 1602, and further endowed by Thomas Gybbon, in 1609, the income of which is £114 per annum. There are several other bequests for education, and the entire annual value of the parochial charities is about £180. Hempstead Park is the principal residence. Fairs for the sale of horses and cattle are held here on the 15th May and the 4th August.

BENFIELD END, a hmlt. in the par. of Stanstead Mountfitchet, and hund. of Clavering, in the co. of Essex. It is situated near the Roman and modern high road from London to Cambridge, near the river Stort and the Great Eastern railway, which has a station at Bishop Stortford, about 3 miles distant.

BENFIELD-SIDE, a tnshp. in the par. of Lanchester, Chester ward, in the co. palatine of Durham, 14 miles to the N. of Durham. Gateshead is its post town. It is situated on the border of Northumberland, on the banks of the river Derwent. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £160, in the alternate patron. of the crown and the Bishop of Durham. The collieries in the neighbourhood give employment to many of the inhabitants.

BENFLEET, NORTH, a par. in the hund. of Barstable, in the co. of Essex, 3 miles to the W. of Raleigh, and 3½ N.W. of Hadleigh, being about 5 miles W. from Southend. Wickford is its post and Billericay its Union town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val. of £700, in the patron. of the Rev. C. R. Ridatt, incumbent. The church, which has a wooden tower, is dedicated to All Saints. The par. contains about 2,000 acres, and in the Saxon times belonged to King Harold the Second.

BENFLEET, SOUTH, a par. in the hund. of Barstable, in the co. of Essex, 2 miles to the S. of North Benfleet, and the same distance W. of the town of Hadleigh. Raleigh is its post and Rochford its Union town. It is situated on the north bank of the Thames, on the Hadleigh Creek, opposite to Canvey Island; and has a station on the London, Tilbury, and Southend railway, from which latter place it is distant about 2 miles. A castle erected on this spot by the celebrated Danish Vyking, Hastings, was taken and demolished by Alfred the Great in 894. Oysters of excellent quality are procured in the neighbouring waters, and a considerable traffic is carried on in the bay in wood, coal, and calves. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val. of £242, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a large edifice, with a stone tower and wooden spire, containing five bells. There is a National school and post-office.

It is situated in Dovedale, on the banks of a small stream which joins the Dove, near Ashbourne. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, of the annual val. of £124, in the patron. of the Bishop of Lichfield. The church, an ancient edifice, of small dimensions, with a low tower, is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and contains several monuments of the Beresford family—one of whom was engaged in the battle of Agincourt, and died in 1473. There are some small charities. Remains exist here of the old mansion of the Beresford and Cotton families. Bentley Cottage is near the village.

BENTLEY GRANGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Emley, and wap. of Agbrigg, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 6 miles to the E. of Huddersfield.

BENTLEY, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Tendring, in the co. of Essex, 7½ miles to the S.E. of Colchester, its post town. It lies near the coast, on the banks of a small stream called the Brightlingsea brook, that falls into the Colne near its mouth. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val. of £360, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a plain building, with a tower at the west end, which is remarkable for its curious combination of flint and stone. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here, and there is National school. The charitable endowments of the parish amount to £15, including the revenue of a free school. To the south of the village is Bentley Lodge. There are also some remains of the ancient residence of the De Veres, Earls of Oxford, with the extensive fishponds and moats. A cattle and pleasure fair is held on the Monday after the 15th July.

BENTLEY HEATH, a hmlt. near the vil. of Potter's Bar in the par. and hund. of Edmonton, and co. of Middlesex, at a short distance from the great North road and Great Northern railway, about 3 miles from Barnet.

BENTLEY, LITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Tendring in the co. of Essex, 5 miles S. of Manningtree, and 8 miles to the E. of Colchester, its post town. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val. of £6[illegible], in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is an ancient edifice, with a stone tower. Bentley Hall, long dilapidated, was a stately mansion, erected by Paul Bayning, alderman of London, in the 16th century. The Baynings are interred in the church.

BENTLEY-PAUNCEFOOT, or BENTLEY, UPPER and LOWER, a tnshp. in the par. of Tardebigg, and hund. of Halfshire, in the co. of Worcester, 3 miles to the S.E. of Bromsgrove. The Bristol and Birmingham railway runs near it. Bentley House is the principal residence.

BENTLEY-WITH-ARKSEY, a par. in the N. div. of the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the N. of Doncaster. The Great Northern railway passes through this parish. It is situated on the banks of the river Dearne, and contains the hmlts. of Almholme, Bodles, Doncaster-Bridgend, Scawthorpe, Shaftholme, and Stockbridge. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, of the val. of £113, in the patron. of Sir W. R. C. Cooke, Bart. The church is a cruciform structure, with a tower and low spire at the centre, and is dedicated to All Saints. There is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was founded in this parish in 1683 by Sir George Cooke, Bart., who designed it for a grammar school, and endowed it with property producing £40 a year. Here is also a hospital for 12 poor women, with an income from endowment of £100 per annum. There are several other charitable endowments, producing about £150 a year.

BENTON, LITTLE, a hmlt. in the par. of Long Benton, Castle ward, in the co. of Northumberland, close to Long Benton. The manor of Little Benton about the middle of the last century passed from the Hindmarsh into the Bigge family, and has recently become the property of David Burn, Esq., who, with Captain Potts and John Woods, Esq., owns the whole of the land.

BENTON, LONG, or MICKLE BENTON, a par. and vil. in the eastern div. of Castle ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 3½ miles to the N.E. of Newcastle-on-Tyne, its post town. It is a station on the North-Eastern railway, and also on the Blyth and Tyne branch from Newcastle to Tynemouth. The par., extending northward for above 8 miles from a base of 2 miles on the left bank of the Tyne, embraces five tnshps., disposed thus from S. to N.: Walker, Long Benton, Little Benton, Killingworth, and Weetsleet; and is intersected by the Roman Wall, near its termination at the station Segedunum, in the adjacent parish of Wallsend. Coal is abundant in the district, and there are some valuable quarries of stone. Extensive foundries, brick and tile works, alkali works, and copperas manufactures are established, and give employment to a large population along the banks of the Tyne. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Durham, of the val. of £353, in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church, a plain building with a spire, partly rebuilt in 1791, is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There is a charity, yielding about £12 per annum, belonging to the township of Weetsleet. The manor was anciently held by the De Maylays, and passed by marriage to Sir Philip Somervylle of Wicknore, in Staffordshire, who gave the advowson of Benton, with lands in the parish, to Balliol College, Oxford, about A.D. 1340. The great tithes were then appropriated by grant of Richard de Bury, Bishop of Durham, and the living constituted a vic. The great 90-fathom dyke intersects the parish a few yards north of the church. The principal residences are, Benton Park, Benton Lodge, Benton Hall, Killingworth House, and Seaton-Bourne Hall. The par. is very extensive, comprising an area of 8,857 acres, with a population of 13,184, and is divided for ecclesiastical purposes into two parishes. In addition to the parish church there is the district church of Walker, the living of which is a perpet. cur.,* val. £150., in the gift of the crown and bishop alternately. Another division at Weetsleet is in contemplation, where a third church is to be built. The parish of Benton is closely associated with the history of the Stephensons: George (the father) having conducted his experiments, and set his first locomotive at work, at the Westmoor colliery; and his son Robert having received his early education at Long Benton parish school.

BENT'S-GREEN, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Eccleshall-Bierlow, and par. of Sheffield, in the wap. of Strafforth and Tickhill, in the West Riding of the co. of York, 2 miles to the S.W. of Sheffield.

BENVIE. See LIFF, Forfarshire.

BENWELL, a tnshp. in the par. of St. John, western div. of Castle ward, in the co. of Northumberland, 2 miles to the W. of Newcastle-on-Tyne, its post and Union town. It is situated on the north bank of the Tyne, and is supposed to be the site of the Roman station Condercum. A little to the north is the Roman Wall. The Carlisle railway passes near this township. The district is rich in coal, and the coalworks here are the oldest in the country. One of the collieries took fire in the 18th century, and the fire was not entirely extinguished for thirty years; it burst through the surface on several occasions. There is some fine scenery in the neighbourhood. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Durham, of the val. of £150, in the patron. of the Vicar of St. John's. The church, erected in recent years, is dedicated to St. James. Many Roman relics, consisting of coins, urns, inscriptions, &c., have been discovered here. The chief residences are Benwell Lodge and Benwell Tower. The latter takes its name from an ancient tower which belonged to Tynemouth priory, and formed the summer residence of the prior. The burial-ground attached to the prior's chapel is still pointed out. A few of the grave-stones remain. The tower commands a fine prospect over the King's Meadows, Axwell Park, &c.

BENWICK, a chplry. in the par. of Doddington, and hund. of North Witchford, in the Isle of Ely, in the co. of Cambridge, 6 miles to the S.W. of March, its post town. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the rect. of Doddington, in the dioc. of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. James.

It lies on the border of Warwickshire, near the Redditch branch of the Bristol and Birmingham railway, and is included in the Poor-law Union of King's Norton. In the 17th century the manor of Beoley belonged to the Sheldon family, who supported the royal cause. The manor house was burnt down by the Cavaliers, that it might not be captured by the parliamentary forces. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £73, in the patron. of W. Holmes, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. In a chapel adjoining the chancel are some monuments of the Sheldons. Beoley Hall is the principal residence. Near this seat are remains of a castle which belonged to the Beauchamps and Mortimers, and was burnt in 1303. The North Warwick hounds meet at Beoley Wood.

BEPTON, a par. in the hund. of Easebourne, and rape of Chichester, in the co. of Sussex, 3 miles to the S.W. of Midhurst. The Portsmouth branch of the London and South-Western railway passes near it on the west. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chichester, of the val. of £127, in the patron. of the Earl of Egmont.

BERAGH, a vil. in the bar. of Omagh, in the co. of Tyrone, prov. of Ulster, Ireland, 8 miles to the S.E. of Omagh. Some of the inhabitants are employed in weaving. Here is a decayed seat of the Belmore family, to whom the place belongs.

BERDON, or BERDEN, a par. in the hund. of Clavering, in the co. of Essex, 4 miles N.W. of Elsenham railway station, and 7 miles to the S.W. of Saffron Walden. It is situated on the borders of Hertfordshire, on the banks of the river Stort, at a short distance from Bishop Stortford, its post and Union town. It was the site of an Augustine priory, founded in the reign of Henry III., and valued at the Dissolution at £31 5*s.* 1*d.* The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Rochester, of the val. of £150, in the patron. of the Governors of Christ's Hospital. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, contains some ancient monuments, and has a tower built of pebbles. There is a Wesleyan chapel. The parochial charities produce £4 a year. This village was the birthplace (in 1586) of the Rev. Joseph Mede, author of learned commentary on the Apocalypse.

BERE-CHURCH, a par. in the lib. of the borough of Colchester, in the co. of Essex, not far from Colchester. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Rochester, the val. of £110, in the patron. of T. White, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and contains several monuments of the Smyth family, and the tomb of Sir Henry Audley (who died in 1648), with a marble effigy. Berechurch Hall, for long the seat of the Smyths, is a fine old mansion, and contains some paintings by Lely.

BERE FOREST. See WATERLOOVILLE, St. George, Hants.

BERE-REGIS HUNDRED, one of the six hundreds of the South Blandford div. of the co. of Dorset, situated near the middle of the co., and surrounded by the hundreds of Coomsditch, Barrow, and Piddletown. It comprises the pars. of Bere-Regis and Winterborne-Kingston, and has an area of about 9,920 acres.

BERE-REGIS, or BEER-REGIS, a par. in the hundred of the same name, South Blandford div. of the co. of Dorset, 10 miles to the N.E. of Dorchester. It is situated in a pleasant district on the Bere rivulet, a branch of the river Piddle, which flows a little to the southward. The par. includes the tythgs. of Milborne-Stanton and Shitterton. Its name, partly Saxon Bere, and partly Latin, signifies Kingston. It is a very ancient place, and was selected as a retreat by Queen Elfrida after the murder of her son. It was also the occasional residence of King John, from whom the inhabitants obtained a grant or confirmation of a market. It was made a borough by Edward I., but did not return representatives to parliament. The market has been recently discontinued. The town has several times been nearly destroyed by fire; first in 1634, then in 1788, and again in 1817. The houses are therefore mostly of modern construction. The workpeople are principally employed in pursuits of agriculture. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, of the val., with the perpet. cur. of Winterborne-Kingston, which is annexed to it, £ in the patron. of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church is a large and ancient edifice with an embattled tower, and contains a circular font adorned with sculpture, and some monuments of the Turbervilles, to whom the manor once belonged, and one of whom was Bishop of Exeter in the 14th century. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the town. There is a free school, and it was founded by Thomas Williams, and further endowed by several benefactors; the income of which is now £ The value of the other charities is about £16 annum. Eastward of the town is Woodbury Hill, a lofty eminence commanding a wide prospect, and the site of a circular camp enclosing an area of 10 a defended by three ramparts and ditches. This div. comprises an area of about 52,420 acs.

ERKELEY, a par., market town, and borough in the upr div. of the hund. of Berkeley, in the co. of Gloucester 5 miles to the S.W. of Gloucester, and 114 miles from Lon on by the Great Western and Bristol and Gloucester rilways. The town is 3 miles from the Berkeley Road stan on of the latter line. The par. is situated on the bas of the Little Avon, a tributary of the Severn, and incles the tythgs. of Alkington, Hinton, and Ham, the mlts. of Breadstone and Hamfallow, and the chplry. of one. Its Saxon name was Beorkenlan, or Beorclea, and t was a place of importance at a very early period. It pears to have been a royal demesne at the time of the orman survey, and the only market-town in Gloucestershire, except Tewkesbury. It is a borough by prescription, nominally governed by a mayor and 12 aldermen. That part of the valley of the Severn in which Berkeley is situated is called the Vale of Berkeley. It is a fine tract of rich meadow and pasture land, between the east bank of the Severn and the range of hills running nearly parallel at a few miles distance. The vale is about 25 miles in length from Matson Hill, near Gloucester, in the north, to Aust Cliff, opposite the old ferry passage, in the south, and includes an area of about 50,000 acres. This district has long been famed for its dairy farms and cheese. It is said that 1,200 tons of cheese, mostly of the kind known as "Double Berkeley," or "Double Gloucester," are made here in a year. Large quantities of butter are also made, amounting to several thousand pounds weight weekly. The principal trade of the town is in timber, corn, and malt, carried on chiefly by means of the great ship canal called the Berkeley and Gloucester canal. It is about 16 miles in length, extending from the city of Gloucester to the Severn, which river it enters at Sharpness Point, rather more than 2 miles to the north of the town. The canal is 60 feet broad, 18 feet deep, and is navigable by vessels of 500 tons burden. The trade in coals formerly carried on is now very inconsiderable.—The town stands on rising ground, about a mile from the Severn, and consists chiefly of one street. There is a market-house of modern erection. Petty sessions are held here by the county magistrates, and polling for the county election take place in the town.—The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, and in the patron. of Lord Fitzhardinge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a large and handsome edifice, partly in the early English style, with a modern tower, detached and standing at a distance. It contains the tombs of the Berkeley family. Here, too, is the burial-place of Dr. Jenner, the discoverer of vaccination, who was born at Berkeley in 1749, and died in 1823. The tomb is marked by a simple monument. Besides the parish church, there is a district church at the village of Stone, the living of which is a perpet. cur.,* val. £80, in the gift of the vicar. There are chapels belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists and Independents. The charitable endowments of the parish are very considerable. They include the income of the free school, £55, founded by Samuel Turner in 1696, and further endowed by John Smith; the income of some almshouses, and various bequests for the benefit of the poor.—On a hill close to the town are the fine remains of Berkeley Castle. They are in remarkably good preservation, and form a nearly perfect example of a baronial fortress. It was probably founded about the middle of the 12th century, or considerably enlarged and strengthened by Robert Fitzhardinge and his son Maurice. It is said to have been erected on the site of a very ancient nunnery. The area covered by the pile of buildings is of irregular form, but nearly circular, and is surrounded by a moat. The keep, the most ancient part, stands on a mount, rising much above the other buildings. It is nearly circular, and is flanked by one square and three semicircular towers. It has a massive Norman gateway enriched with sculpture, and is approached by a flight of steps, consisting of large stones. It contains a dungeon, nearly 30 feet in depth, unlighted, and entered by a trap-door. Near the stone staircase is the room supposed to have been the scene of the atrocious murder of Edward II., in September, 1327, by Lord Maltravers and Thomas Gourney, to whom Lord Berkeley had been ordered to deliver the castle and the prisoner. The chapel stands next the fine old hall, which is nearly perfect. Noble trees now adorn the moat. In the apartments of the castle are some royal and family portraits, including one of George, Lord Berkeley, to whom the "Anatomy of Melancholy" was dedicated. Here is preserved, too, the cabin furniture of Sir Francis Drake. The castle was repaired in the reign of Henry VII. In the civil war of the 17th century it was garrisoned for Charles I., but was taken in 1645 by the parliamentary forces after a siege of nine days. It is now the seat of Lord Fitzhardinge. The market is on Wednesday.

Fairs for the sale of cattle, &c., are held on the 14th May and the 1st December.

B. Shirreff, incumbent, who holds it with Barston (late a peculiar of Lichfield), val. £180. The church of Berkeswell, an ancient building with a low tower, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist; that of Barston to St. Swithin. In the chancel of Berkeswell church are monuments of the Wilmot family. There is an endowed free school, and several other charities, which produce together about £200 per annum. Berkeswell House is the seat of Thomas Walker, Esq.

BERKHAMPSTEAD, GREAT, or ST. PETER'S, a par. and market town, in the hund. of Dacorum, in the co. of Hertford, 22 miles to the W. of Hertford, and 26 miles by road from London, or 28 miles by railway. It is a station on the London and North-Western line. The par. is situated on the banks of the small river Bulbourne, which joins the river Gade about 4 miles below the town. The Grand Junction canal passes the town, running along the valley, nearly parallel with the high road, the river, and the railway. Berkhampstead is a very ancient town; and from its name, which is Saxon, is supposed to be of Saxon origin, though some antiquaries suppose it to have been the Durobrivæ of the Romans. It acquired importance from being a residence of the Mercian kings, who had a fortified seat here. A council is said to have been held here in the year 697. It was here that the Norman Conqueror received the submission of Stigand, Archbishop of Canterbury, and immediately after encountered the resistance of the Abbot of St. Alban's, who hindered his progress by felling the wayside trees and blockading the roads with them. The abbot, supported by a number of the leading men, both lay and ecclesiastical, obtained from the king an oath that he would govern the people according to their ancient laws and customs, and especially according to the laws of Edward the Confessor. This oath was taken in an assembly held at Berkhampstead. The manor was given by William to Robert, Earl of Moreton, his half-brother, who erected the castle on the site of the old residence of the Mercian kings. In the reign of Henry I., on the rebellion of William, the son of the founder, the castle and manor came into the possession of the crown, and the castle was demolished. The inhabitants of the town received many valuable privileges from Henry II., who held his court here for some time. The castle having been rebuilt in the reign of King John, and garrisoned for him, was besieged by Louis, Dauphin of France, the ally of the insurgent barons, and was given up by command of the king. Prince Richard, King of the Romans, and brother of Henry III., died at Berkhampstead in 1271, broken-hearted at hearing of the assassination of his son, Prince Henry, in Italy. Cicely, Duchess of York, mother of Edward IV., also died at this place, and Richard III. is said to have been born here. Berkhampstead sent two representatives to parliament in the reigns of Edward I. and Edward III. The castle and manor, forming, with several other manors, the honour of Berkhampstead, have been held by the Princes of Wales as part of the Duchy of Cornwall from the reign of Edward III., who conferred them on his eldest son, the Black Prince, when he created him Duke of Cornwall. James I. selected the old mansion called Berkhampstead Place as a residence for children, and conferred upon the town a charter of incorporation, but it was forfeited during the ensuing C War, in which the inhabitants suffered so seriou that they lost the means of retaining the privileg Berkhampstead is seated in a deep and beautiful val at the foot of a fine ridge running off in a south-east direction from the Chiltern range as far as King's Lang It has two principal streets, High-street and Castle-str crossing each other at right angles.
